TORONTO

VOL. 83 — No. 1 — September 25, 1963

Fees, enrolment climb

A late start plus an increase in both enrolment and fees marked today's opening of the University of Toronto 1963-64 academic year.

Robin Ross, registrar, said the beginning of classes — usually the third Wednesday in September — was delayed by the Caput because it was felt a September 18 opening would allow insufficient time to process applications and establish schedules.

Mr. Ross said total teaching period for the year would remain the same as other years because of the shorter Christmas recess and additional days at the end of the second term.

The slight increase in fees — $4 for men and $2 for women — was caused by rising costs in areas financed by incidental fees, University Comptroller George Court said.

Both men and women were assessed an additional $2 for the health service, and the men paid $2 more for Hart House services, he said.

Although an increase in academic fees was avoided this year, it is possible they may rise next year, Mr. Court said.

Total enrolment this year is up by more than 1,400, Mr. Ross said.

Total admissions, including graduate, extension and special students, have increased to about 19,600 this year from 18,213 last year. Mr. Ross stressed that these figures are only speculative and accurate figures will not be available until late October.

In the past two years there has been a growing tendency for students to submit applications to several universities, Mr. Ross said.

These students may be admitted to more than one university, and many never let the others know they will not be attending. Until the registration figures are tabulated it is difficult to tell how many students are actually enrolled in the university, Mr. Ross said. About 12 per cent of those applying to the U of T for the first time can be expected to go elsewhere, the registrar said.

This year there will be 12,000 full time undergraduates, an increase of 600. Full time graduate student enrolment, including professional schools, has increased by 500 to 3,000 persons. There will be 6,000 part time students on campus — about 4,000 undergraduates, 900 graduates, and the rest special students. This is a part time student increase of between 300 and 400.

One of the highlights of this year is the increase in the full time undergraduate enrolment, which is largely in the faculty of arts and science, Mr. Ross said. Most arts and science courses were able to accommodate all students with the minimum requirements for the first time in several years, he said. For the first time in five years total enrolment in Applied Science and Engineering has increased. In the past there have been more students graduating from this faculty than first year students coming in. This year the balance has swung the other way. A first year enrolment of 547 students gives the faculty 100 more than last year.

Mr. Ross said the Ontario scholarships may account for part of the more than 400 student increase in the School of Graduate Studies. He said U of T students were awarded 400 of the $1,500 scholarships, but 60 have withdrawn because of failures and changes in their choice of university.

An unexpectedly high registration occurred at the Faculty of Law last week. Total Law enrolment to date is 276 students, compared to 193 last year. First year has 138 students. Law figures will rise even higher as late enrolments come in, Mr. Ross said.

First year admissions account for 3,900 students, an increase of 350 over last year.

The new Faculty of Food Science, which will replace the former Household Science course, has admitted 35 students into its first year class.

French demands may split open NFCUS

A grave split threatened the National Federation of Canadian University Students last night.

The predominantly French language universities of Laval, Sherbrooke and Montreal have demanded wide concessions for French speaking NFCUS members.

The University of Montreal backed up the demands by threatening to pull out of the national student organization. The French universities want a separate union for French speaking students.

Doug Ward, president of the University of Toronto's Students' Administrative Council, said last night the situation is serious. "I would hate to see two independent student organizations in Canada," he said. "We would have a completely emasculated NFCUS."

"Although there must be severe changes in NFCUS, the basic concept as a union of all students must not be altered." Meanwhile the University of British Columbia student council voted to support the demands of the Quebec universities. But UBC did not support the U of M's threat to withdraw from NFCUS if the demands of the three universities were not met.

The Quebec universities outlined their case last week. Originally Sherbrooke agreed to support them to the point of leaving NFCUS — along with the U of M — but NFCUS President David Jenkins said in Toronto last night he had been assured there was danger only of losing Montreal.

The issue will come to a head Sept. 30 at the NFCUS meeting in Edmonton when the three Quebec universities say they will present resolutions outlining all their demands.

Ward indicated that if it came to a choice between losing the U of M and splitting NFCUS, he would support the former.

"I can't agree with the demands of the University of Montreal to set up two individual national organizations," he said.

Varsity salaries increased

A substantial revision of Varsity staff salaries was agreed upon by an extraordinary session of the Students' Administrative Council last weekend at the Hart House Caledon Hills Farm. The two-hour meeting, part of the SAC's annual Caledon weekend, decided to cut this year's salaries by 11 per cent rather than the 53 per cent cut called for by the provisional budget for this year.

Varsity salaries are paid to masthead staff who handle administrative aspects of the paper, Varsity Editor Ken Drushka pointed out. They are required to work regular hours, and most of them are forced to forgo part-time employment, he added.

Despite the increase, the salary of the editor will remain the same as called for by the provisional budget. In the new scale, the editor's salary will be 16 per cent of the total salary budget as opposed to 44 per cent last year.

Other business handled at the meeting included a revision of The Varsity's publishing schedule to a 12-page Monday edition, eight pages Wednesday and 24 pages Friday, including a 12-page Weekend Review.

The increased cost of the new publishing schedule will be met by increasing the amount of advertising while maintaining the same proportion of ads, it was decided.

Freshman killed

Initiations at Waterloo Lutheran University led to the death of a freshman last Wednesday night. As a result, students have called off all off-campus initiation activities.

Daniel Nash, 19, died of a fractured skull when he fell off the trunk of a moving car. Nash was participating in a mascot raid on the University of Waterloo. He was urging the other occupants of the car to continue the raid when he fell to his death.

Students will continue with their shoe-shiners for charity.

President speaks

University of Toronto President Claude Bissell will give his sixth annual address to freshmen at 3:45 p.m. today in Convocation Hall.

Any classes conflicting with the President's address will be cancelled so that all students can attend.

In the past Dr. Bissell's introductory speeches have been of a controversial nature.

Last year his proposal to build a tunnel for traffic under St. George St. caused widespread comment throughout Metropolitan Toronto.

The Students' Administrative Council president, Doug Ward (III Emm), and Vice President Mary Pat McMahon (III SMC) will join the academic procession.

Hart House

In this column will be announced regular and special events occurring in Hart House during the academic year. All male students of the University of Toronto are members of the House. Make a point, therefore, of watching this column so that you may take advantage of the facilities which are yours to enjoy.

Graduates and members of the teaching staff, as well as undergraduates, are welcome in Hart House. All are jointly associated in the wide variety of activities which form the programme of the House.

May I extend to all members of the University community my personal wishes for a happy and successful year.

Joseph McCulley, Warden

MUSIC

Among the series of concerts held each year by the Music Committee are the following: SUNDAY EVENING CONCERTS commencing October 6 with Jan Rubes, WEDNESDAY NOON HOUR CONCERTS beginning October 16, and the WEDNESDAY FIVE O'CLOCK RECITALS beginning October 23 with the Rowland Pack Consort.

GLEE CLUB

The Hart House Glee Club, an organization of sixty members, includes in its programme the annual Tri-University Concert, a Trans-Canada radio broadcast and an out-of-town concert. Both undergraduate and graduate members of Hart House are urged to attend the auditions to be held in the Music Room.

RECORD ROOMS

One Record Room houses an excellent classical library and the other a collection of jazz, folk-song and spoken word records. A short instructional class must be attended to ensure proper and careful usage of the equipment. Watch the "Varsity" for announcements of times for classes or enquire at the Hall Porter's desk.

STEINWAY GRAND PIANOS

Any member of Hart House who has Grade X music examination standing may use the Steinway Grand pianos after receiving a card from the Undergraduate Office. Those with less than Grade X standing may fill out application forms or satisfy themselves with the upright pianos.

SQUASH RACQUETS

The Squash Racquets Committee of Hart House controls the activity in three squash courts in the basement. Periods on the squash court may be reserved one day prior to play by calling the Hall Porter at 928-2452.

Instruction for Beginners: Any member desiring instruction should sign up in the Undergraduate Office in the very near future. There will be a series of lectures presented and some senior players will give court instruction.

DEBATES

The first debate of the year will be held in the Debates Room of Hart House on Thursday October 10. A noted public figure will be the Honorary Visitor.

LIBRARY

The Library of Hart House, on the second floor, houses about 7000 volumes for the leisure-reading of Hart House members. The Library Committee always appreciates receiving suggestions of new purchases.

HOUSE COMMITTEE

The first event to be organized by the House Committee will be the HART HOUSE FALL DANCE, on Saturday, September 28.

CURLING - MEN ONLY

Come into the Athletic Office, Room 101, Hart House and sign up if you are interested in curling at the Terrace Club this year.

ENTRIES CLOSE OCTOBER 4th

A meeting will be held on Wednesday, October 9th at 5.00 p.m. in the Music Room, Hart House.

Why work for The Varsity?

Well, it's fun.

If you want to be practical—one might even say crass—it's good training for would-be journalists.

But above all, it's a kick to sit down in The Varsity offices and write about all kinds of weird and wonderful things and to go wandering around the campus and meet unique people. (There are quite a few, really.)

And after a few weeks working for The Varsity, when it's late at night, and you're tired, and an Arbor Room hotdog is rampaging around your stomach after a great light dawn.

You're part of a newspaper. It's a small one. An estimated 15,000 readers. Less than some Canadian small-town papers. But Stephen Leacock started here. And Robertson Davies. And William Lyon Mackenzie King. Closer to home, Frank Moritsugu and Wendy Michener, now Toronto Star staff writers, are ex-Varsity editors.

Yes, scratch a Canadian newspaper man and chances are pretty good you'll unearth an old Varsity writer or editor. They all have the proverbial printer's ink in their veins, the roar of the presses not too far back in their minds and an almost obsessive love of words and print.

They all love to tell stories. Varsity types' favorite one is about the Great Fire in University College in 1889. Three weeks before the blaze, The Varsity of that year ceased publishing because it had run out of money—so they missed the best story of the decade.

It all boils down to the fact that if you feel a tinge of excitement when you think about newspapers, whether you hanker after spot news reporting, or critical writing, or newspaper design or photography—come down to the basement of the Students' Administrative Council building and talk to us.

Putting out this newspaper three times a week is a big job and we need help. There are lots of positions open. Whether you want to do just a little work, or whether you want to sign your lives over to newspapers as we have, we'd love to see you.

SAC acquires new administrator

Robert S. Rawlings, former business executive and graduate of the University of Western Ontario, was appointed last July 1 as the new business administrator of the S.A.C.

Mr. Rawlings, 36, succeeds E. A. MacDonald who retired last spring after 30 years of service.

A business administration graduate, Mr. Rawlings will have as his main job the business operation of the SAC and its $250,000 budget.

A bachelor born and raised in Toronto and former traffic supervisor for the Bell Telephone Company, Mr. Rawlings, who was among 40 applicants for the position, said he is looking forward to his new job.

"This is a time of changing student ideas and I feel that I can help them get what they want with the aid of my business experience."

Students may strike over lunch prices

An attempt to raise the price of meals in the University of Montreal's Student Union cafeteria was met yesterday by threats of a general student strike.

The Association Generale des Etudiants de l'Universite de Montreal earlier called for a boycott of the university-run cafeteria when it was announced that the price of meals would be raised to 85 cents, 10 cents higher than the previous rate.

University Principal Msgr. Irene Lussier issued an ultimatum threatening students who followed the order of the AGEUM with expulsion. But he denied earlier reports stating that he had accused students of "thinking they could whip their masters."

AGEUM President Pierre Marois countered this by telling students to pay the old price when they bought their meals. Cashiers in the cafeteria have been co-operating with this plan.

Msgr. Lussier then said that if this practice continued, he would expel the AGEUM executive.

But Marois said: "If Lussier goes through with the expulsion, the entire university will go on strike."

Pickets are patrolling the Cafeteria with signs reading "Ce n'est pas le Kon-Tiki," a reference to a Montreal restaurant.

A letter issued to the entire student body by Msgr. Lussier noted the "chronic absence of any expression of satisfaction among U of M students, almost an orientation toward anarchy," in their relations with the administration.

He indicated the cafeteria strife is the climax of a series of incidents between the students and the university administration.

SAC meets Thursday in Hart House

The Students' Administrative Council, one of the most widely ignored groups on campus, starts another year

Thursday night at 7:00 in the Hart House Debates Room.

Despite the fact that council handles over $250,000 in student funds, and participates in almost every facet of student life, spectator attendance averages about two students per meeting.

Interesting business coming up at the meeting includes a proposal to establish a SAC French Committee, intended to maintain a closer and more lasting liaison with French-Canadian students, a proposal to establish a 20 minute question period at the beginning of each council meeting, and the election of commission members for this year.

The 20 minute question period is intended to increase public interest in SAC, and to keep council members on their toes.

True-blue Tory Opposes free College tuition

Although some taxpayers complain that our politicians have gone hog-wild when it comes to spending their money, the voice of the truly conservative politician still raises a squeak now and then. At a recent three-candidate meeting in the riding of York South, William Thomson, an Oakville businessman and the Progressive Conservative candidate, lashed out at the idea of free university education. In response to a heckler, he said: "There is nothing free, friend . . . I can't see any point in filling the universities with numskulls that aren't going anyplace anyway."

Donald MacDonald, provincial New Democratic leader, stated in opposition that he agreed some standard for admissions must be set up, but he accused Mr. Thomson of putting up a straw man and beating it to death with regard to the danger of admitting students of only moderate academic ability. Mr. MacDonald went on to claim that free tuition must be offered to develop the country's human resources.

NFCUS split

"The preservation of a Canadian union of students embracing two national cultures is more important than losing one member."

Changes to be made would have to be brought about within the basic structure of NFCUS. He said he will propose that two national vice presidents be appointed—one French speaking and the other English.

Jenkins branded the U of M's stand as "unreasonable" and said that for many years NFCUS "has been in the forefront establishing and maintaining co-operation between French and English speaking students."

The demands were first made public Sept. 14 by Pierre Marois, president of the student council at the U of M.

In detail, the French speaking universities want:

1. Recognition of two ethnic groups—English and French;
2. Right to self-determination, i.e. the right to set up separate structures as symbols of the ethnic groups;
3. The setting up of the "General Union of French Canadian Students" and of another for English speaking students.

This last point is the one that may prove deadly for NFCUS.

Varsity salaries

Other motions carried at the Students Administrative Council's Saturday session at Caledon Hills Farm included:

- the election of University President Dr. Claude Bissell as Honorary President of the council;
- the election of John Cosgriffe (III SPS) as National Federation of Canadian University Students Committee Chairman;
- a budget increase of $675 for the Winter Carnival Ice Show to permit the hiring of figure skater Dave Jenkins;
- approval of expenditures of $407 and $700 for an electric typewriter and other office equipment;
- inclusion of Mr. R. S. Rawlings SAC Administrator in the U of T delegation to the NFCUS Congress.

an education

Today almost 4,000 freshmen join more than 15,000 veteran students in the University of Toronto academic community. We welcome them all, but are at this time concerned with what is unfortunately only a minority group.

We are aware of the numerous reasons why students are attending this and other universities. Some want a husband or wife, others the traditional piece of parchment to trade in on a job later; some are concerned with learning the basics of a particular vocation or profession; others with filling in time and keeping out of their parents' hair. Many are seeking their way into an uncertain future, and others are in search of an education.

It is the latter group we are concerned with and to whom we offer our encouragement. These persons who wish to replace their ignorance with knowledge are taking on a formidable task. Their inquiring minds will lead them into exciting, yet frightening areas of thought. At the same time they will be opposed by a system which will not accommodate their approach to the university and what it has to offer.

First they have to fight students who are here for other reasons. They will find that the majority of students are after some particular thing which it is believed the university offers, and the majority groups will resent any detractors which will take it from its predetermined course. The student who merely wants to learn will discover that others do not want to follow the paths which daily open before them.

The student who wants an education will also have to buck the Establishment. He will run into a multiplicity of regulations which have grown with the university. These bureaucratic rules will place him in the same pigeon hole as the student who is here because he is too lazy to work.

In addition, the student who wants to learn will have to fight a large segment of the teaching staff, a group he probably expected to find on his side. He will learn that most of his teachers have accepted the easier route of following the system and are among the most conservative members of the university community.

When he tries to fight the system the student will find that his immediate opposition comes from these reluctant scholars. His professor will ask a specific question, and expect an even more specific answer. The student will be discouraged from exploring an idea to its logical conclusion, and if he persists, will find his efforts are not appreciated.

Two years ago Paul Goodman, the Columbia University psychologist, told a group of students that only the superior student could expect to win this fight. We expect to see some students try, and many of those fail. We sympathize with those who fail because we realize that society, through one of its institutions, has again managed to put down some of its better members.

With the memory of occasional words of encouragement from interested professors we still encourage freshmen and those who have won past bouts to enter the fray.

How not to stay freshie, crisp and green by Dave Greyson

Welcome, Freshmen, to Toronto's — that is, at least, downtown Toronto's greatest-ever university!

You have just taken the first giant step in your university career — entering. You'll find that coming in is easy (if you have 50 cents for the toll gate), but getting out is even easier — just sit back and relax for the next eight months. The hard part though, is looking and acting like you belong.

This handy-dandy little primer is designed to help you to look and act like you really fit into all the square holes. Read it well, commit it to memory — we conduct quickie-quizzes whenever we catch you.

DRESS

Every freshman is expected to wear a shirt and tie. This is very important to differentiate you from older students who will wear the same old T-shirt they have worn since second year. I'll get around to washing mine pretty soon.

Those gaudy awful ties you were given on Freshman weekend should be worn at all times. They might just come back into style. The beanie can come off after New Years.

Girls are expected to dress as girls.

The above applies to all colleges except Trinity, where everyone must wear a "Batman" cape. It is unknown to outsiders what, if anything, is worn underneath them.

DEPORTMENT

If you don't use it, you may be deported.

LANGUAGE

No one calls anything by its right name — slang shows that you are "In." Thus, the Wallace Room becomes "the Pit"; The JCR is called "the Zoo"; the bookstore is "the Bank"; the buildings — "trees"; roads are "people"; people are "clouds"; profs are "coffees", classalo "Hi.", "coffees"; classes are "Cats"; books are "bananas", and so on, following that simple pattern. Make up your own — it's fun, and you can sound so esoteric if no one knows what you are talking about.

BOOKS (BANANAS)

First of all, if you want one from the library, it is out I'm sorry, that other one is out being repaired. Let that be a lesson to you on the very first day. Don't even bother. Yes, they have no bananas!

THE VARSITY

You can throw out your high-school three-ring notebook, and don't bother buying a clipboard. Don't even carry scrap paper. After you've bought your Varsity, keep it on you, and should the prof (coffee) say anything important, (like that the class is cancelled), make a marginal note on page 2. Always save page 1 margins for the phone number of the cute chick who sat beside you. Don't worry about the lecture, you have just 50 minutes to strike up your friendship.

Caution! Warning! Disreputable people will be out trying to sell you a subscription of The Varsity for $2 per year. The low-life scum are just trying to make a fast buck on your innocence! Anyone who writes to me personally c/o Box 33, this newspaper, and reports these vultures will get a special discount subscription rate of $1.50.

SEX AND MORALS

You expect a discussion of both of these topics in the same paragraph? Don't be silly. This is a family newspaper. Why not ask your doctor or clergyman. Better still, ask your buddy — he's got some great ideas.

FAMOUS LANDMARKS

You never know when a table people will be out trying tourist will ask about your university, so you must know all about the famous buildings.

For example: Convocation Hall is the round building with the columns. It's round because on Saturdays it's used by the Royal Canadian Institute, alternating with motorcycle races. The track record, however, is broken each year by the graduating classes in the mass commencement exercises.

The new addition to UC is a SAGE base (no pun intended). The single tower houses an ICBM. In case of war — whoosh — the whole building goes.

ATTENDANCE AT LECTURES

This is entirely optional. You have paid for the privilege of attending lectures, but not to be forced to go. Preserve your freedom as an individual! If one of your lecturers tries to cajole you by taking attendance, giving surprise tests, or exam clues, he is draining you of your self reliance and initiative. This makes you easy prey for the Russians. Suspect his political leanings and report him to the RCMP. — that's that inconspicuous fellow you can easily find in any of your classes.

Well, that's all the room I have just now. Be sure to follow this guide, and don't be afraid to ask any old-timers for advice on how to beat the system.

Who knows, in a year or two you may be just as mouldy and decadent as the rest of us.

The new-look Varsity had tremendous support — from the staffers anyway. A brigade representative of an army donated its personalities and talents. Bruce Lewis, Wilf Day and Tim Walsh began the politicking; John Cook, Tim Plumptre, Don Smith, D. J. Duckworth and David Woodward got the news department back in swing; Bev Slopen gave of her typewriter ribbon; and the sports department was jammed with returning veterans. Splash Krokofsky made his debut as Associate Sports Editor with an entourage of Katy O'Sullivan, Gord Bellmore, Paul Little, Paul Wilson and "Our King" Dave Beatty. Doug Ward checked in and Jan Czornicki checked out the photos with help from Ian Gillen and Tom Gollo. And accolades to Peeter Sepp and John Iannuzzi, who made it possible.

The new Varsity by Ken Drushka

At this point you have read four pages of the new Varsity. Unless you have been totally cut off from newspapers for the past 15 years, you will by now have realized that this is a different looking publication. Essentially The Varsity has gone modern in design principles. This change is not an attempt to startle the reader into a desired reaction. It is an attempt to bring newspaper design into line with contemporary aesthetic beliefs.

We are not the first to have these ideas, but we are among the first to implement them. Most newspaper designers know of and appreciate the design principles The Varsity is using, but for various reasons they are unable to use them.

It is a well known fact that readers become accustomed to the newspaper they constantly read. They feel at home with that paper, and any radical change in its overall appearance shocks the readers to the extent that they cease buying it. Then revenue falls, and the publication begins to lose money. About two years ago a large United States magazine made several changes in its format. Within six months it lost $9,000,000. The three Toronto daily newspapers are instituting design changes, but at such a slow pace the reader does not notice them.

The Varsity is not in the same position as commercial publications. Each September it starts fresh — with new readers, and a new staff approach. In addition, The Varsity is appealing to a particular group of people — young and, hopefully, open minded readers.

In the last issue of Canadian Art Gilles Henault, a Montreal art critic, strongly recommended radical changes in newspaper design.

"In several areas of the graphic arts, typographers and designers have succeeded in imposing a modern, dynamic, and effective style. However, certain others, such as newspapers and magazines, have been overlooked," Mr. Henault wrote.

"Is it not preposterous that one of the most important means of visual communication, the daily newspaper, has been so long neglected," he asked.

The Varsity's graphic designer, Peeter Sepp, is attempting to alleviate this preposterous situation. Sepp, a fifth year architecture student who designed last year's Torontonensis, is convinced The Varsity, and any newspaper, can be designed to provide both a pleasing paper and a paper which is easier to read.

The Varsity invites your comments on its new design. If you have any objections, we want to hear them; if you like what you see it will give us encouragement if you let us know.

May prevent abnormalities in children

Scientists at the University of Toronto seeking a vaccine to prevent measles have made a discovery that may reveal the cause of many hitherto unexplained physical and mental abnormalities in children.

The group of scientists, which is carrying on its study in the School of Hygiene, has stressed that its findings as yet are not conclusive. But if they are confirmed through further research it may be an important medical breakthrough.

Physicians have known for several years that women who contract rubella (German measles) during the first three months of pregnancy have a 50 per cent chance of suffering abortion, bearing a stillborn child, or having a child that is impaired, physically, mentally. These statistics resulted from studies on mothers who had suffered from what doctors call "clinically evident" rubella. The Toronto scientists began to wonder if it were possible that women who had not had obvious rubella had suffered from an undetected form of the disease. Could this be the cause of congenital abnormalities of undetermined origin?

The theory of the Toronto group is a good example of the exploratory teamwork done every day at the School of Hygiene and the Connaught Medical Laboratories, U. of T. affiliates which have been collaborating on the measles problem. The idea is not complex.

There are two types of measles: rubella, which is common among older children and young adults, and morbilli or "simple" measles, which many of us had as a childhood illness. Both are serious when you consider that impairments to eyesight, heart and hearing may follow.

It is now known that four per cent of all heart disease results from measles. A mental incapacity, encephalitis (inflammation of the brain) is also a result of this disease.

An attack of either type of measles has been assumed to immunize the victim against future attacks of the same illness.

In order to test this theory of natural immunity the School of Hygiene obtained blood samples collected by the Ontario Provincial Laboratories. These had been taken from various health agencies for many reasons.

They were carefully documented as to the age groups and sex of the patients from whom they were taken.

The study resulted in what may be a startling discovery. Antibodies (which show immunity) of German measles were found in a high proportion in the blood of children and early teen-agers. These antibodies then declined almost to extinction by the age of 20, and suddenly at about age 30 again took a sharp up turn.

Why? No German measles epidemic had occurred during the 20-30-year period among the patients whose blood showed a sharp rise in number of antibodies present.

The answer must be that these people had experienced "sub-clinical" German measles. Thus, during the childbearing period, many women must have had mild attacks of rubella without knowing it, and bore children with congenital defects.

A vaccine for "simple" measles now is being tested and work is advancing on a vaccine for rubella. The big story, of course, will come when a vaccine will be available for pregnant women. It would appear that a big step towards that goal has been taken.

Vic co-ed chief curbs activities, praises freedom

Jessie Macpherson, dean of women at Victoria College for 29 years, is leaving her post as commander of the college's 1,000 co-eds but will keep teaching ethics.

"A younger woman should take over as dean," Miss Macpherson said in an interview. Miss Macpherson, a tall, wryly humorous woman well known across the University of Toronto campus, has always followed one of the most liberal policies possible towards her students in matters of discipline.

"My philosophy of education is that students are adults and should be expected to know how to look after themselves," she said.

Victoria College girls can come and go as they please and need only a "late leave" to stay away from residence after 12:30 a.m.

Miss Macpherson noted that many educationists have attributed low moral standards to modern teen-agers. She disagrees, adding that university girls can be trusted far more than other girls the same age.

"Students who go from high school right into the 'working world' are apt to face more difficulties," she said. University life is so busy, she added, that students don't get a chance for finding trouble. "We do encounter problems, but only rarely.

"Some of the girls are determined to be rebellious and look around for rules to be broken. When they don't find them, most tend to settle down and conform—though they do not like to think so." Miss Macpherson has specialized in the work of Sigmund Freud for many years and will remain a university teacher in her field.

Campus growth

college open to all faculties and schools at the University of Toronto.

The five-storey, air-conditioned building will be built by Taylor Woodrow (Canada) limited at a cost of more than $2,000,000 and will stand at the corner of Spadina and Wilcocks.

The college will have facilities for 300 men and tutorial, dining and social areas for 1,200 students. The administration area will be ready for fall registration in 1964.

Students will take their first classes in the new pharmacy and chemistry buildings today, as the U. of T. continues its building and expansion program.

This program, in line with the master plan drawn up in 1956, is intended to provide facilities for 23,000 students by 1970.

Controversial Massey College also opens its doors to its first group of junior fellows this fall. Official opening of the college, a gift of the Massey Foundation, is scheduled for October 9.

The new zoology building will be ready for partial use by next fall, and it is hoped that the University College library will be in operation during the spring term.

Construction will begin immediately on the new building for New College and it is expected to be completed in 14 months.

It will be the first residential

New Hart House secretary

The new undergraduate secretary of Hart House is Alan Toff, a 1963 U of T arts graduate. Mr. Toff was born in England, where he lived until coming to Canada nine years ago.

The undergraduate secretary of Hart House is a full-time administrator whose main job is to coordinate the activities of the five standing committees which govern the house and to act as an adviser to the many Hart House clubs.

Mr. Toff succeeds Tom Troughton, who resigned his position to lecture in Mathematics at Waterloo University.

French paper starts

A new Toronto French language newspaper with a partial appeal to university students, L'Alouette, was published Tuesday for the first time.

The eight-page paper will come out once a month for the first six months and then will be published weekly, said Jack Kane, a recent University of Toronto graduate and one of the editors. Its immediate appeal will be to the 60,000 French speaking persons, including students, who live in Metropolitan Toronto, Mr. Kane said. In time he and the other editor, Marc Foisy, hope to expand circulation to include the 100,000 French language readers within a 150-mile radius of Toronto.

The paper will have at least one page devoted to French club activities at the U of T, Mr. Kane said. The paper will be distributed on campus through the French clubs.

The two-man staff — Kane and Foisy — are soliciting articles and news from all interested persons and groups.

Four French language newspapers have failed in Toronto in the past 10 years, Mr. Kane said. There is no other French language paper in the city, although a Portuguese language paper manages to survive with a Portuguese speaking community of only 2,000 persons.

Campus politicians speak out

Liberals by Bruce Lewis

Liberals oppose sin and favor virtue.

They also favor motherhood, fatherhood, childhood and righteousness. They favor peace. They favor justice. They oppose poverty and misfortune.

They believe in pensions for the aged and mothers' allowances. They propose a portable, contributory pension plan, whereby everyone will be able to invest in a retirement without poverty or shame.

They believe in a prepaid, comprehensive medical care program so that no individual will need to lack treatment, either precautionary or curative, for himself and his family.

They believe all this because they believe that the sick, the aged and the poor are full members of society, and that when indignity strikes any of these, it strikes all society. Therefore it is the duty of society to guard against indignity or misfortune to any of its members. And it is through duty, not through charity, that this is done.

The sick man has a right to be cured. The old man has a right to live as well as the young man. A mother has a

Progressive Conservatives by David Woodward

The general aim of the University of Toronto Progressive Conservative Club is to stimulate an active interest in Canadian politics among students of the university community. Our main opponent is more often student apathy than other campus political clubs. Nevertheless we have a large membership comprising students from all colleges and most faculties. In short, the U of T Progressive conservative Club is typical of our federal and provincial Conservative parties, appealing to no particular class or group, but comprising a wide cross section of energetic young men and women who see things that have to be done and wish to have a hand in doing them. We are proud to be one of the largest of the more than 50 PC clubs situated at institutions of higher learning all across Canada. These together form the Progressive Conservative Student Federation.

To ask what the Progressive Conservative philosophy is requires more than any simple answer that this limited space can provide. Perhaps it can be put in simple terms by saying that our party is not a theoretical one but a pragmatic one. Our philosophy can best be discovered by studying our history, our actions when in power, the biographies of our leaders, and the many other sources of information available to the student.

We believe in the principles of conservatism as they manifest themselves in Canada in our particular political and historical tradition. We stand for free enterprise realising

New Democrats by Wilf Day

Today the New Democratic Party is two years, one month, and three weeks old. It may justly complain of the unprecedented hardships that have faced it in this short time: two federal elections and nine provincial.

But, more important than these difficulties are the challenging responsibilities facing the party in the years ahead. It is these which determine this year's activities for the University of Toronto New Democrats.

The biggest issue in Canadian politics for the next few years will be the renewing of Confederation. This has placed unexpected responsibilities upon the NDP, including the campus club.

The Liberal party seems to have lost its traditional ability to represent simultaneously the two national groups of Canada. It has no one Quebec strongman on the federal level; and Jean Lesage, whatever his personal feelings, is helpless in the grip of the new political and national awareness sweeping French Canada.

A local Ph.D student in history, not previously known for partisanship, commented recently that he was pessimistic about the future of Confederation, and that his last

Communists by Tim Walsh

The Communist Club on the University of Toronto campus is organized for the purpose of presenting the views of the Communist movement of Canada to the students.

We feel that an atmosphere of inquiry, discussion and debate on all facets of our society is an essential part of university life. The world outlook of Marxism, the aims and principles of the Communist movement are certainly an integral part of contemporary society.

Most of you have definite ideas about communism. The problem is that the atmosphere of the cold war, the snoopings of the RCMP, and the general anti-communist orientation of the public right to special consideration for her children.

Liberals believe in the Canadian union. They recognize that Canada contains, and always has contained, groups of people of different origin and different opinion. They believe that the cement which has held these people together for 100 years has been compromise; that every reform, every great plan, every important action of a Canadian government, must involve compromise.

They believe that the best practical application of compromise is in the political parties — and that the political party which most often represents divergent groups, which never represents only one class, or ethnic or language group, or special interest, is the Liberal party.

They believe that Canada needs two major political parties with a generally different (i.e. conservative and liberal) political philosophy, but each representing a broad spectrum of divergent interests.

They fear that if the reform group is divided into separate niches (i.e. Liberal and NDP) neither of the reform parties will be able to evolve properly a balanced political program, and neither will have the electoral success that reform deserves.

In the University of Toronto these Liberal principles are embodied in an association known as the University of Toronto Liberal Club, which operates a full program of discussions, speeches, seminars, policy committees and social events.

In common with the other campus political clubs it provides training in the conduct of public affairs through the Model Parliament, of which it has been the government for the last three years.

The University of Toronto Liberal Club invites anyone who believes in the above-mentioned ideals and principles — or indeed, anyone who doesn't believe in them but would like an opportunity to present and develop his own views and convince others of their validity — to drop around to the next meeting and join up.

It is only by active participation in public affairs that we may hope to preserve freedom and achieve justice in this country.

that the competitive spirit of this system has created a prosperous nation covering half a continent and will continue to build and develop an even greater Canada.

We believe that government action is necessary in the field of social welfare in order that inequities can be resolved. Public ownership of important services such as transportation and communication was initiated by Conservative governments which at the same time allowed private business to compete with these industries and services.

We definitely oppose socialism in theory and practice, believing in maximum freedom for individual initiative.

Although we have been falsely criticized by our opponents for being reactionary and for being a party of privilege, the record shows that we are a party of progress believing in the greatest welfare for all. In the words of Tennyson:

"That man's the true

Conservative

Who lops the mouldered branch away."

This can best describe our belief. The best of the old can be maintained only by invigorating these things of the past with new functions to mold themselves to changing conditions. Change, in our view, must be brought about carefully to allow minimal disruption of order in society and in the economy.

Conservatives have always stood for the supremacy of Parliament; have always upheld the constitution in letter and in spirit; and have always maintained strong ties with the Commonwealth and loyalty to the Crown.

to the Crown.

This year our club has planned an exciting, eventful year which we hope will be enjoyed by all members and interested students. Committees on foreign affairs, defence, education, trade and commerce, and social justice will be set up after our opening meeting.

It is hoped that the reports of these committees will furnish the basis of our platform in the Model Parliament election. Also, we have a special problem to complete this session for the PCSF. Our university is to do thorough research on the topic Canada and the OAS. The final report will be presented to the resolutions committee at our annual convention at Ottawa in January.

The highlight of this year's activity is the annual Caldon conference held at Hart House from Oct. 18 to 20. The guest of honor is John Diefenbaker, the leader of the Opposition. It has always been a weekend of stimulating discussion and social activity in an informal atmosphere. William Davis, minister of education, will also attend.

In November we have arranged a number of speakers on campus from all sections of the Progressive Conservative party. They will explain their views on current issues facing Canada and Ontario. After this, it is our intention to fight a good campaign and to form the government of this year's Model Parliament.

To round out the year, many of our members will attend the Ottawa convention, or should there be a leadership convention we shall send delegates to that.

hope was the NDP. This is not an isolated incident. Last spring the New Democrats swept the Model Parliament elections at the University of Montreal, gaining more than 60 per cent of the vote with a platform of left-wing nationalism.

Here, in the heart of English Canada, university New Democrats must be the exception to the prevailing unresponsive attitude towards French Canada. Therefore, the campus club is arranging a visit by a prominent French-Canadian spokesman as a part of its series of guest speakers, a seminar series on French-Canadian nationalism, and an exchange or conference between the club and its counterpart at the University of Montreal.

The seminar programs throughout the year will also cover the more basic problems: economic planning, welfare services, and political organization.

But do not think the club blind to events outside Canada! The first guest speaker on October 2 will be Alan Borovoy on the race problems in the southern U.S.A. — Mr. Borovoy will also lead a discussion group — on all aspects of racial discrimination.

communications media have combined to create a state of affairs in which most people receive their information about communism only from those who are in opposition to it.

During the course of the year we plan to organize several meetings on campus in which spokesmen of the Communist movement will speak.

We would also like to take the opportunity to invite all political or other interested groups to organize with us debates or other forms of discussion on subjects of mutual interest.

While discussions and educational activities form a vital part of our activities we also intend to publish our bulletin The Communist View- point as well as take part in Model Parliament.

Ideas and events cannot only be spoken about, they must be acted upon. Members of our club have always actively participated in actions of students on peace demonstrations and other democratic issues.

This year we look forward to many lively and free-wheeling debates on all questions, in which all thoughts will contend, as well as a further growth of student activity for peace and for the interests of our country.

NFCUS seminar hears discussion of technology

By TIM PLUMPTRE

and what have you got? One NFCUS seminar to discuss the problems relating to man and technology, held this year at OAC-VC-MAC Federated Colleges. OAC-VC-MAC means Ontario Agricultural College, which can be found at Guelph, and which has a nice big campus all covered by glass and trees and things, not to mention the occasional academic building.

The seminar started Aug. 31 and wound up Sept. 6. During the day, the student delegates from the various universities were lectured to by notables considered to be experts in the fields of technology of man. One might conceive of the possibility of a shortage of experts in the field of technology, but not in the field of man—ask any girl. So there was no dearth of talented speakers.

Gracing the rostrum at various times were, among others, Claude Jodoin, president of the Canadian Labor Congress; Ralph E. Sewell, president of Coca Cola; Marcel Vincent, president of Bell Telephone; Professor W. Line, from the psychology department at this university; and Nik Cavell, who was for a number of years the administrator of the Canadian contribution to the Colombo Plan. With such a variety of speakers, differences of opinion were bound to arise, and ensuing discussions between students and speakers were often spirited and vigorous.

A fast social pace matched the generally high intellectual plane of the conference. No NFCUS representative would want it thought that his university was socially backward, so in the evenings the parties were numerous and noisy. Even the fact that the liquor outlets were closed for the first two days of the seminar failed to dampen the spirits of the participants, and on most occasions, the infectious gaiety of the French Canadian representatives set the tone for the social life.

At this point you may ask yourself why your 50-cent contribution to NFCUS goes to finance this sort of thing. NFCUS' main purpose is to provide for interstudent co-operation and understanding, and to prevent the spread of movements such as separatism to the student world.

NFCUS, by the way, stands for National Federation of Canadian University Students.

Take a few students from each NFCUS university across Canada. Add a little enthusiasm; toss in a rather cultivated interest in "technology and man"; season with good weather and a full moon and flavor with a firm determination on the part of each student to have a good time come hell or high water. Put this amorphous mass in some semblance of order with considerable hectic behind-the-scenes organization

'Obscene' Jargon now available
free on campus

Once branded obscene, Jargon magazine now is available on campus. In 1962 Stewart Alger, an Oshawa printer, refused to print the student literary magazine, saying he "didn't want to get tangled up in that sort of thing."

Included in submissions were several poems the editors admitted contain frankly sexual imagery, a short story about a man who rapes a woman in a moving subway train and a number of grotesque illustrations.

The cover bears a bizarre and ambiguous photograph that editors Sam Ajzenstat and Alan Walker, now both graduates, insist is a man's garment.

After a year of negotiation and discussion, the Students' Administrative Council decided to publish the magazine in full. Another printer was persuaded to handle the contract and the publication appeared officially last spring. But most students had left the campus or were writing their last exams. Only 1,500 copies were distributed and the other approximately 1,500 were stored in the SAC office. They now are available there, without charge.

At one point in the SAC's deliberations, all the questionable material was forwarded to the Ontario attorney-general's department for study by the obscene literature committee. But Deputy Attorney-General W. B. Common returned the manuscripts unread, saying it was not the purpose of his committee to censor unpublished material. Alvin Shapiro, then SAC publications commissioner, read the material and although he said it was "unusual," advised the SAC to publish it because it was of literary merit.

The magazine, containing 56 pages of prose and poetry, is labelled "1961-62." Oddly enough, the 1962-63 Jargon, edited by Barbara Amiel and Arthur Silver, appeared before the Ajzenstat-Walker collection.

These two magazines are the last of their breed, at least for the present. One of the final acts of last year's SAC was to decide not to publish another campus literary magazine.

ing a concealed weapon when a student saw a gun fall from his pocket as he leaned over to pick up a pair of sunglasses. After being arrested, McDowell was immediately suspended by the university pending a hearing on the incident. After the hearing

Tuesday, it was announced that he had been expelled. An honor graduate of Jackson State College for Negroes in Jackson, McDowell entered the Ole Miss Law School in June, under federal court orders. He was the only student at the university after the graduation of James Meredith.

Sheriff Joe Ford, who arrested Meredith, is president of the Oxford-Lafayette County chapter of the pre-segregation White Citizens Council.

Cheap books

Looking for course books at a good price? Why not try the SAC exchange, where books are bought and sold at reasonable prices. Located on the driveway of 119 St. George Street, the exchange is open Monday to Friday, 9:45 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. The exchange buys books from students at a 20 to 50 per cent discount on the original store price. When the books are sold, the exchange management asks a small return from the seller to cover the costs of the exchange services.

Change UTDU

Richard Tan, Students' Administrative Council debates chairman, announced at this year's first SAC meeting that several changes have been made in the setup of the University of Toronto Debating Union.

"In the past years, the UTDU was supposed to act as a 'central clearing house' for all debating on the campus," Tan said. "However, in the last two or three years this function has been in name only."

"The interested colleges and faculties arranged their inter-faculty debates on their own without going through the UTDU."

Tan said this development "is a healthy sign" and that it should be encouraged, adding that it has made certain UTDU functions unnecessary. He urged all SAC representatives in the colleges and faculties to co-operate in strengthening a central body that can both encourage debating within each separate faculty and college and can also organize debates on a larger scale, crossing college and faculty lines.

Will join

SASKATOON (CUP) The University of Saskatchewan decided to join the National Federation of Canadian University Students last Monday.

After a mass meeting and a referendum, NFCUS was informed of the decision. One vote was cast against the motion.

Bob Gaudry, president of the 1,000 students on the campus, indicated his university will be formally admitted at the next national NFCUS congress in Edmonton.

Gets post

A member of the faculty of the University of Toronto has again been named general secretary of the International Union of Geodesy and Geophysics. This year Dr. G. D. Garland, Professor of Geophysics at U of T will direct the activities of IUGG, which unites those scientists studying the earth's shape and its surface phenomena. U of T was similarly honoured when Dr. J. Tuzo Wilson, director of U of T's Institute of Earth Sciences, was elected to the same post in 1957-60.

As is customary with the IUGG, its headquarters will be located in the city of its general secretary. During the International Geophysical Year of 1957, the headquarters was also located in Toronto.

Will share

This year's SHARE campaign, a U of T and World University Service project to help students in underdeveloped areas of the world, starts on campus Oct. 14.

The week-long drive will be the first and biggest "give" campaign this year. Student and group donations will all go to an international reserve, not a Canadian headquarters.

This setup puts the money directly to work in vital foreign areas, and rules out the chance of Canadian students using the money in Canada for conferences or campaigning.

Recent SHARE dollars have provided health and welfare aid to students in need in Skopje, and students with tuberculosis in Korea.

NFCUS head

David E. Jenkins, a law graduate of the University of Alberta, will represent the 110,000 members of the National Federation of Canadian University Students.

Jenkins was active in the U of A's Students' Council both as a representative and last year as president. He also had extensive student journalism experience as sports editor, advertising manager, managing editor, and editor-in-chief of the student newspaper, The Gateway, and as an executive member of Canadian University Press.

Professionally, his experience includes four years as a news reporter and sports columnist for the Edmonton Journal. He also served as a news editor and TV interviewer for the CBC.

Jenkins received a Bachelor of Arts Degree from the U of A, and was selected as a World University Service Scholar to Sweden in 1961.

At present, he is a member of the national executive of World University Service of Canada, Canadian University Service Overseas, Friendly Relations With Overseas Students, and the Canadian Anniversary Conference on Human Rights.

Jenkins elected at the last National NFCUS Congress, will succeed Mr. Stewart Goodings, an arts graduate of Queen's University.

Swap Students

The first student exchange between the Soviet Union and Canada was announced yesterday by the University of Toronto's new Centre for Russian and East European Studies.

The Exchange will send three U of T students to study in Moscow for a year, and bring three Russian students to Toronto.

The three Toronto students, L. D. Mayhanovich, T. L. Aman, and A. D. Toffolo, are all graduate students working as assistants in the department of Slavic studies. They will continue their studies in Russian literature.

The three Russian students, are Vitali Korsun, studying physics, Gennadi Zaitsev, an economist and German Blagoveshchensky, studying agriculture.

The exchange, under a grant by the Laidlaw Foundation, will continue annually, and is expected to be expanded to include five students from each country.

Students fly here to earn more money

A British student organization has flown 1,500 persons from Britain to North America, trying to interest Britons in studying at Canadian and United States universities. The British Universities North America Club organized the 12-flight charter trip for 1,450 students and 50 faculty members. The excursion is the largest single student group ever to visit North America. BUNAC was formed last year when it was found several British universities were organizing independent charter flights. This summer's flights to New York and Montreal were the organization's first.

The club persuaded airline companies to reduce their fares to less than one-half the usual. Then jobs were set up through the Canadian and U.S. governments so the students could work while here for the summer.

Bob Kimber, 20-year-old engineering student and one of the BUNAC organizers, said he found the Canadian government most co-operative. He said regulations were waived so that students could enter the country if they were promised a job or if they had $300. A few were even allowed on condition that they find jobs here.

Kimber said the U.S. government insisted the students take out formal immigration papers if they planned to work.

He said students were overjoyed at the chance to come to North America, because of the high wages.

Many students found they could make enough money in North America in three weeks to pay for their holiday and have some left for university expenses this fall. One thing that did bother Kimber was the liquor legislation in Ontario.

"In England students and pubs go together," he said wryly, "but here we find we aren't old enough."

Staff switches sweep campus this year

More than 90 appointments and promotions in the University of Toronto's academic and administrative staffs were made during the summer.

Dr. Moffat St. Andrew Woodside, former principal of University College, has been appointed to the new position of academic vice president. Dr. Woodside's appointment marks the creation of two new vice presidents' positions. Frank Stone, administrative vice president, held the only other vice president position until July.

Dr. D. C. Williams, of Learning Stage, an educational radio program, has been appointed vice president in charge of off-campus colleges. In this position he will be responsible for the new colleges in Scarborough and Erindale.

Dr. Woodside's former position as University College principal has been filled by Robin Harris. He will be acting principal for the 1963-64 academic year. In 1964 Professor Douglas LePan will assume the position.

Prof. Harris is a UC English professor and chairman of the University of Toronto policy and planning commission.

Prof. LePan is now on the R. Samuel McLaughlin research fellowship at Queen's. He has published two volumes of poetry: The Wounded Prince and The Net and Sword.

Professor F. H. Hare, former Victoria College registrar, will assume the same position at New College. He will also be teaching French at UC.

Melinda H. Seaman, dean of women at the University of New Brunswick for the past three years, has been appointed principal of St. Hilda's College, and dean of women at Trinity.

Dr. William E. Swinton, head of the life sciences division of the Royal Ontario Museum since 1961, is now director of the museum.

Professor V. G. Smith, on the U of T electrical engineering staff since 1927, has been appointed head of the new department of engineering physics.

Professor J. W. Birch, 37, succeeds Professor D. F. Putnam, who is retiring after 10 years, as chairman of the geography department. Prof. Putnam will continue teaching. Dr. Birch comes to U of T from Clark University, Worcester, Mass., where he was professor of geography. He has also taught at University of Bristol.

Dr. Roland List, former head of the hail department in the Swiss Federal Snow and Avalanche Research Institute, was appointed a professor of physics.

Dr. List's appointment is the second in the development of meteorological research at the U of T. Last year Professor Alan Brewer, an expert on the stratosphere, joined the staff.

Professor S. D. Clark, a member of the political economy department since 1938, was appointed head of the new sociological department.

Professor W. J. Eccles, from the University of Alberta, has been appointed to the history department.

NFCUS mag will ponder cops on campus

VANCOUVER (CUP)

Campus Canada, the National Federation of University Students' student magazine, will make its second appearance on campus across the country October 1.

It will again be published by the University of British Columbia. The magazine will contain articles on the R.C.M.P.'s campus investigations, higher education and the separatist movement in Quebec.

Editors of the first issue encountered trouble in printing the French sections in the bilingual magazine, and when it first appeared in February, 1963 some issues had to be recalled for corrections.

Ten thousand issues will be distributed to all Canadian campuses and will sell for 35 cents each.

It is expected the third and fourth issues will be published in December and March.

This 37 pound, 9 ounce cod won Toronto's captain Dave Beatty the Crandall trophy for the largest fish caught in the international competition at Wedgeport, Nova Scotia. Beatty is also Publications Commissioner for SAC. (yeah!).

Varsity's fishermen finish second

Dave Beatty

The Eighth International Game Fish Seminar held at Wedgeport, Nova Scotia, September 4-8, became a truly international event this year with the entering of a team from Japan. The six Japanese fishermen came from Waseda, Keio, and Nippon Universities and all were national student champions in various forms of salt-water fishing. University of Massachusetts won the Hulman Trophy in an exciting finish that saw them jump from seventh place to first in only four hours fishing. Massachusetts boated over 300 pounds of fish bringing their total to a trophy winning 676½ lbs. They were closely followed by Varsity with 618 pounds.

Varsity's fishing team, coached by Ken Windsor (SGS) and captained by three-year veteran Dave Beatty (III Trin), owed much of its success to Mike Joy (SGS). Joy was named rookie-of-the-year by his team-mates Brian Hull (IV Trin), Bob Dinsmore (SGS) and vice-captain Mike Treadwell (IV Trin).

In the last frantic hours of the competition Joy had a tough time, suffering from an injured reeling hand, but he still managed a third of Varsity's total catch.

Captain Beatty in a memorable five minute battle landed a fighting 37 lb. 9 oz. cod, the world's latest game-fish, to carry off individual honours and the Crandall trophy for the largest fish.

United States for the fourth successive year, the combined American Universities scoring 2,722 points against the Canadians 2,396½.

The evenings featured lectures by former Notre Dame football great Ray Ryan on suff casting equipment and frogman Herman Toadstool on SCUBA diving. Bob Crandall's talk on "How to Fight a Giant Tuna" was of no practical use for the seventh consecutive year. The only Tuna was caught in 1955.

Teams from Yale, Harvard, Princeton, Dartmouth, Mass., New Brunswick, Western, St. Francis Xavier, Dalhousie, Japan, and Toronto competed in the seminar.

The meet, cocktail party, banquet and dance were all sponsored by Yale and the Nova Scotia government.

Rowers hope for international competition as regatta season starts

By PAUL LITTLE

Although the summer regatta is over, Argonaut Rowing Club on Toronto's Lakeshore is still a centre of activity. The U of T crew has been working out from its docks every morning for the past three weeks.

In fact six men from the Argo's Heavy Eight never had a chance to stop rowing — they merely changed uniforms. With the Eastern Canadian Intercollegiate Rowing Association scheduled beginning early in October and tentative international races in the U.S. later in the month, the crew can't afford any lapse in training.

Since its rebirth in 1961, Canadian college rowing has improved vastly in calibre. In the fall of 1962 University of Western Ontario, last year's E.C.I.R.A. champion, raced to a dead heat with Marietta College of Ohio, last spring's Small College champion in the U.S.

This year Toronto's crew, better seasoned and rebuilt by the addition of three Argo oarsmen, shows the potential to dethrone Western and take on some formidable opposition from United States.

Argo's head coach, Jack Russell, hopes to arrange a Canadian invitational race at Toronto's Centre Island against such well-known crews as Boston College and Syracuse University.

The climax of the season, however, will be a trip to Cornell University in New York for a crack at the "Big Red" crew.

All of these international plans are as yet tentative and it is the first race against UWO which prompts the present series of morning workouts.

This is not the only crew Toronto expects big things from. The club also looks forward to a good season for its Junior team. This crew will be composed of the returning members of last year's Freshman crew, plus any promising newcomers.

The Junior and Freshman crews will be competing in their own classes in the same regatta schedules as the Senior team. Last year, Varsity's Freshman crew placed a close second to McMaster in the championships at London.

Rowing, a sport which is increasing in popularity in Canada and the U.S., is looking to the universities for new oarsmen. The U of T Rowing Club urges students to try out for the crew, not only to fulfil Toronto's part, but also to help put Varsity back where it was when U of T won a silver medal for Canada in the 1924 Olympics.

Those interested in trying out for all teams please contact Bill Jeacock, WA. 1-2681, in the evening and be prepared for a meeting at the Argonaut Club Sunday morning. Inexperienced recruits are welcome.

A FRIENDLY GREETING FROM A NEUROTIC M'ND

'Tis but the first week of the term and already some hearty soul — an engineer, of course — has suggested that I take the first train out of town. This engineer didn't make the intended destination clear but from the tone of his voice I took it the farther away I journey the happier he would be. This bloke has concluded that the only thing preventing Varsity Blues from having a winning season is the Sports Editor of The Varsity. His research disclosed the fact that since same sports editor started writing (sic) for The Varsity, Blues have failed miserably.

"The last winning season Blues had was 1959, when they were five-and-one in regular season play," says this admirer. "But since you've come on the scene our almighty warriors have been one-and-five, one-and-five, and two-and-four. So get out Kollins." Friendly greeting isn't it?

Perhaps this cannon-slinger is correct in his assumption. But I'll prove him wrong yet. Or at least, Blues will prove him wrong yet. And the yet could be this season.

At the end of last season prospects for 1963 were at an all-time high. Varsity expected to lose only five players through graduation, an unheard of low number in a league where attendance in college is a necessary prerequisite.

These hopes were dimmed somewhat when the examiner's axe fell. Arnie Carefoote, Ranny Parker, Jim Rhodes and Erkki Pukonen, all prospective all-stars, fell by the wayside for 1963. And Ken Myers, Bob McMurtry and Bob Martiniuk decided to hit the paper before the pigskin.

But the outlook did not decline into an abysmal pit of pessimism. Blues played with 15 rookies last season and seven of these were on the first string. With a year's experience these players are now considered veterans.

EXPERIENCE ON OFFENCE IS THE KEY

The move to add new faces was successful. Ray German joined Blues after three top seasons at OAC, where he played centre, fullback and linebacker. He will be one of Blues starting linebackers. Dave Galloway was injured before the league schedule opened last year and did not play but he has been impressive at flanker in training. And end Mike Hollett returns after a yer's absence.

The rookie brigade includes linemen Jim Blakelock, Ray Reynolds, Bob Pampe, Wayne Parsons and Terry Bates, a brother of guard Noel Bates. The freshmen linebackers include Mike Gray and John Rumble. All are top prospects.

Unlike Western Mustangs and McGill Redmen, but like Queen's Golden Gaels, unfortunately, Blues will field experienced players at most positions. Varsity's troubles last season lay in their failure to move the football. The offence this season should be solid.

Bill (Moose) Jackson has been converted to end from his familiar tackle position and quarterback Harold Hall has been switched to fullback. The rest of the offence resembles last year's, tentatively.

This will depend on newcomers being able to fill the vacancies on the defence. Both tackle positions were left open with the loss of Carefoote and Murray Rowan and a defensive end slot was vacated by Hugh Cooke. Should head coach Dalt White be able to find replacements at these positions from among his newcomers, then his lineup is set.

But if he has to borrow from the offence, a few problems may be created. Dalt has the material. It's just a question of putting the right players in the right positions to get the best effect.

The inelegible players will definitely be missed, especially Pukonen, who is a coach's dream for all-round ability. But Hall played a great game in Varsity's 28-0 win over Ottawa last Friday and the other newcomers could more than fill the void. Friday night's game at Varsity Stadium against Western will answer a lot of questions. By then my engineering friend could discover that Lady Godiva isn't the only fictitious product of the SPS neurotic mind.

FISTAMINATIONS: THE FIRST OF MANY

Arnie Carefoote, Jim Rhodes and Ranny Parker will play for Varsity Intermediates in the new league with Western and Ryerson. Erkki Pukonen is not in school this year. . . . Films show that torn ligaments suffered by Rhodes in last season's opener against Queen's were the result of a clip that wasn't noticed by the game officials. . . . Halfback Al Connolly, who returned to Meds after two years of teaching, has left Blues to devote all his time to academics. . . . In pre-season games, Western defeated London Lords 24-10, McGill edged Loyola 9-6 and Notre Dame de Grace 16-14, and Queen's obliterated Loyola 69-23. (Oh Hum) . . . Kollins Kandid Pigskin Preview, complete with prognostication, begins in this issue with the first of four installments.

1962 REVIEW

Although finishing in a third-place tie with Varsity Blues, Mustangs' 2-4 league record is not a true indication of their 1962 season. After a slow start, which saw them split their first four games. Mustangs lost close decisions to the league powers of McGill and Queen's in their final two contests.

A 16-13 loss to Queen's and a 9-8 setback at the hands of McGill blackened Mustangs' record and killed their chances for a championship.

Four Mustangs were chosen to the coaches' intercollegiate all-star team. Brian Conacher, in his first season, was the most dangerous halfback in the loop. Brent Mundy was selected as an all-star guard. John McIntyre as an outside linebacker and John Wydareny as a defensive halfback.

Only Mundy is back with Mustangs. McIntyre and Wydareny have graduated and Conacher is with the Canadian Olympic hockey team at University of British Columbia. Wydareny is now playing for Toronto Argonauts of the Canadian Football League.

1963 OUTLOOK

Western has been hardest hit by the loss of players and this means Metras will have to take what was potentially a championship club and start over. More than half of last year's team are not returning. Most of the losses have been in the backfield. A player of Conacher's calibre is not easy to replace and fullback Ed Potomski, who was one of the league's top rookies, is sidelined through academic failure.

Both quarterback, Gary Boug and Ken Rysdale, have also departed which gives Western additional problems.

If Western has any strength, it's along the line where a combination of top veterans and capable rookies could give Mustangs one ace in the hole. Among the returnees are centre John Metras Jr., an all-star in 1961; guard Frank Vormittag, who was ineligible last season after a successful campaign in 1961; tackle John Gilbert; tackle Jack Cowin and Mundy.

Also returning are Barry Mitchelson, one of the league's best tackles who will play some end as well this year, and end Dick Suderman.

The quarterback spot will have to be filled by a rookie with no experienced signal-caller on the roster. Currently the candidates are Ted Miller, a graduate of the Junior Colts; Bob Israel, a freshman and brother of Varsity's Jim Israel, and Woody Deschamps, another freshman from Jarvis Collegiate in Toronto.

Israel and Miller appear to have the inside track to the starting pivot post.

The rest of Mustangs backfield will likely be staffed by veterans who formerly played mostly on the defence. Bill Payne is the fullback and Jim Weber and Bob Campbell the halves. Peter Martin returns to his flanker position.

The Western rookie brigade includes tackle Ross Nicholson, 6' 3", 235 pounds; fullback Art Froese, and tackles Bill Imrie and John Reid. Reid was the most valuable player last season with the Junior Colts.

PREDICTION

Mustangs are a big question mark since they have a solid line with plenty of size but lack depth at most positions, especially in the offensive and defensive backfields. The lack of an experienced quarterback is also a big factor.

Mustangs won't be pushed around physically, but it's unlikely their brawn can win more than the familiar two games.

Led by last year's top scorers, Keith Murphy and Jeff Mahon, veteran goalie Gunther Bauer, and halfbacks Urs Maag and Peter Haynes, Blues are showing championship form as they practice for their game of the season next Tuesday against Ryerson. The team this year is coached by Toronto businessman, Ernie Glass. Introduced to the team by Soccer Blues star forward, Bobby Lewis, Glass has been coaching teams in Toronto for the past ten years and is a former soccer player himself. He led the Toronto City Reserve Team this past summer, and so comes to the Soccerities eminently qualified for the position as coach.

Tryouts for this year's team are being held every afternoon this week during the practice sessions on the front campus from five to seven in the evening.

Blues first game will be next Tuesday on the back campus at 3 p.m. against Ryerson.

period, he would eventually shape the entire works of Shakespeare.

The Varsity sports department works on this principle. It does not expect its writers to produce any Shakespeare, Marlowe, or any of that other worldly trivia, but only the esoteric and prophetic utterings which come from the heart.

But it must be said that a Varsity sportsie must come from an extremely unblemished environment. He must not indulge in drinking, smoking, or drugs as this would have a detrimental effect on the present staff which has only recently begun to swear.

If you feel that you fit these qualifications then you had better leave the human race, but if you don't, why not become a Varsity sportsie. There will be a meeting for interested students at the Varsity office tomorrow at 4:15 p.m.

Blues prep to end title famine

By SHELL KRAKOFSKY
Associate Sports Editor

This could be the year that Varsity Football Blues stop marking time and start marching. Blues haven't won the Yates Cup since 1958 and have won only four of their last eighteen league games.

Varsity fans will get a chance to see this year's club in action when Blues take on Western's Mustangs in an exhibition tilt at Varsity Stadium this Friday night at 8 p.m.

This pre-season encounter with Western has become somewhat of a tradition. Two years ago, Western won 20-15 and last year U of T won going away 24-1.

Blues got off to a good start by defeating University of Ottawa Gee-Gees 28-0 last Friday in an exhibition game in the nation's capital. The game gave head coach Dalt White a chance to look over his charges and to decide on some more cuts. White wants to carry 32 players by the season opener but as yet the roster reads 41.

Three players who were sidelined for all or most of last season will be returning to the fold. Jim Israel, who was lost in the league opener with a pulled hamstring muscle, will return to his position of quarterback and punter.

Dave Galloway, who was out for the season after breaking ribs in the exhibition game against Western last year, has a good chance to nail down the flanker position this year.

Mike Hollett, who was academically ineligible last year but played for Blues in 1961, will be playing at offensive end along with Bill Jackson. Ross Dainty, an offensive end last year may be moved to defensive end to make up for the loss of former all-star, Hugh Cooke.

With the loss of Erkki Pukonen, Blues will discard their twin-fullback offence and will use what is known as a "flip-flop" offence. In this formation the offensive line has a blocking side and a pulling side.

If the ball is going to be carried around the right side for example, the blocking side lines up on the right side of centre while the pulling side lines up on the left. But this can be varied so that the opposing linemen will not be warned in advance of the play.

QUICK KICKS:

Blues have had their share of pre-season injuries. Riiivo Ilves, who has been converted to a defensive back after playing linebacker in a successful rookie season, suffered a separated shoulder in the Ottawa game and will be out for at least four weeks. . . . Defensive back Gerry Sternberg, who missed the Ottawa trip because of torn ligaments in his right ankle, will miss the Western game as well. He should be ready for the league opener. . . . Mike Meredith, a two-way backfielder, will probably be out this game with an ankle injury also. . . .

Look for Ken Davison and Jim Fisher to be playing two way ball against Western. . . . Both of Blues offensive guards got married over the summer. Congratulations to Noel and Jill Bates and Kasper and Grace Pold. . . . All of the other Blues are eligible bachelors.

Baby Blues return to gridiron after a year's absence

BY GORD BELLMORE

Intermediate football reappears on the campus sports scene this fall after a year's absence. While Baby Blues are basically designed as a proving ground for future Varsity Blues, the team gives the players a chance to play a good brand of ball in a competent league.

The Intermediates will play in a new league with the University of Western Ontario Colts and Varsity's cross-town rivals, Ryerson Rams. The team will play a home-and-home series with each team. Dave Creswell and John Casey will share the coaching duties and both have excellent credentials for the job. Creswell is a former Varsity Blues star and coached Baby Blues when they last played two seasons ago. Last year both he and Casey assisted Dalt White with the Varsity team.

Casey, also a former Blue, is an experienced football man having played with Toronto Argonauts. He will handle the line while Creswell will tutor the backs.

The Rankies have been working as a unit only since Monday and have ten days in which to prepare for their opener against Western in London, October 5.

While the coaches are pleased with the number of hopefuls working with the team, both men emphasized their desire to interest any other prospective footballers on campus in coming out for the squad. All interested players should report to Varsity stadium on weekdays at 5 p.m.

While it is too early yet to really assess the talent available, several players have looked good in practice. Sure thing is the trio of ineligible Blues, Arnie Carefoote, Jim Rhodes, and all-star linebacker Ranny Parker.

Among the others who have been impressive are halfback

Dick Krol and quarterback Craig Williamson from Victoria College's Mulock Cup champs of last year. High school hot-shots Dick Skilbeck (York Memorial) and Wally Secombe (UCC) and All-American swimmer Tom Verth now in Dentistry, have also looked good.

As for the opposition, little is known of Ryerson. The last time they were in Intermediate loop they didn't win a game.

Western is another matter. They reached the finals in the Ontario Rugby Football Union Junior league last year before losing to Sarnia.

Rugger champs ready to defend title for fourth time

With twelve players returning, this year's edition of Varsity Rugger Blues stand a good chance of successfully defending their Intercollegiate championship which they have won for the past four years.

In competition for the Gilbert Turner Cup, last year's team went undefeated in the Ontario - Quebec Athletic Association and defeated Queen's Golden Gaels for the championship.

Varsity will open the exhibition schedule early with a game against a selected Ontario fifteen team tomorrow on the back campus at 6:15 p.m. The back campus will again be the setting for a game against University of Michican on Saturday at 3:00 p.m.

The team has lost three players through graduation, Bob Turner, Murray Brooker, and Andy Baines. But the coach Dick Gaetor, in his third year with Blues, will still have a strong nucleus of players to work with.

The league's top scorer and his runner-up from last year will again be with the Toronto team. Scoring champion Paul Wilson, who was captain of last year's fifteen and was re-elected this year, combines with Ian Sinclair, this year's assistant captain, to give Varsity a strong scoring punch.

Larry Johnson, who scored the winning try in the championship game last year and was the team's "Most Valuable Player", will also be returning, along with Terry Picton, Rodney Saunders, Bill Stow, Bill Nelems, Doug Bosomworth, Jim Humphries, Rich Hayman and John Cameron.

Bob Dodds, who played for Blues two years ago, has returned to do post-graduate work and will bolster an already strong team. Another boon to the team is John Ceill, last year's rugger captain at Queen's who is entering U of T's Law School. The Intermediate team also boasts a strong nucleus of returnees for coach Neville Nanckivel to work with. Last year in its first year in league competition, the Intermediates won the championship.

This team needs more players however and if enough men try out, Varsity will carry three rugger teams. Tryouts for all the teams will begin Monday night at 5 p.m. on the back campus.

Students bilked on textbooks: SAC says 'shun U of T store'

The University of Toronto Bookstore is overcharging students for textbooks, the Students' Administrative Council was told last night.

Richard Tan (III Meds) said the U of T Bookstore dropped their discount on medical books to students, then put pressure on publishers to force other bookstores to do the same.

In addition, the bookstore has raised the prices of books bought last year in the United States, before the devaluation of the Canadian dollar, Tan charged.

The bookstore also receives a 20 per cent discount from publishers which is not passed on to students, Tan added.

(Marsh Jeanneret, director of the U of T Press, last night denied Tan's charges, terming them "ridiculous.")

After hearing the charges, Council passed a motion encouraging all students to purchase their books where a discount may be obtained. Also the council set up committees to investigate the possibility of a co-operative bookstore, and to approach the U of T Bookstore to see if a discount could be obtained.

Varsity Editor Ken Drushka pointed out that an investigation into the University of Western Ontario bookstore several years ago revealed an accumulated profit of $3,000,000, despite the fact that other university expenditures were being charged against the bookstore account.

Several years ago, when the U of T Bookstore faced pressure from publishers to rescind the discount then offered, bookstore officials said they were there to serve the students, and would continue to give discounts, Drushka said. The University Bookstore no longer gives any discount to students on any books, although staff members get discounts.

SAC President Doug Ward (II Emm) termed book prices "a question of student welfare at the most basic level," and pointed out that the University of Montreal and many American Universities have co-op bookstores.

MAY PICKET

There were indications last night that the U of T Bookstore may be picketed today by students protesting book prices. In answer to a question on the feasibility of picketing the bookstore, Ward said that any student has the right to protest "peacefully."

Mr. Jeanneret said the idea of pressure being exerted on publishers to halt discounts is ridiculous.

He said the U of T store operates at a break-even point and that a discount to students of even one per cent would mean a deficit.

"The main stock in trade is texts," Mr. Jeanneret said. He said the campus store stocks 20,000 titles, four or five times as many as commercial stores.

In addition 90 per cent of the store's books are purchased at a 20 per cent discount from publishers, while other bookstores purchase the majority of their books at a 40 per cent discount, he stated.

Mr. Jeanneret said the U of T's store's main problem which other stores do not have, is one of over and understocking. Enrolment estimates are not accurate and every year the store finds itself short on some books and overstocked on others, he added.

The director said the U of T Press and the bookstore are separate operations, and that no revenue from the bookstore are used for defraying printing costs.

In commenting on the feasibility of a student-run store Mr. Jeanneret asked where the student body would acquire the $280,000 inventory carry-over needed for the summer period.

Mr. Jeanneret said any appreciable discount would mean the release of some or all of the 45 students who work in the store.

CHEAPER BOOKS

A Varsity survey last night showed the Student Christian Movement Book Room on St. Thomas Street, slightly north-east of Victoria College, carries an excellent collection of paperbacks and required texts and offers discounts.

An early rush on the SCM store cleaned out supplies of some texts but replacements were being rushed in.

(Reports last night indicated that texts were often stocked at the U of T store in expensive hardcover editions although paperback versions could be obtained at other stores.)

(There were also reports that several books the U of T Bookstore claims are unavailable in Canada can be found at other stores.)

There is a 10 per cent discount on paperbacks and students who agree to purchase $25 worth of books during the year also receive a 20 per cent discount on a large number of hardcover books at the SCM store.

The Words and Music at 98 Bloor Street West opened recently and no one there seems to be familiar with the stock yet. Some required texts are carried as well as useful background material and records. There is a 10 per cent discount on any purchase of books over $2.

The Ex Libris Book Room at 50 Avenue Road specializes in Everyman editions but will promptly order any book desired. The service is helpful and there is a 10 per cent discount on all purchases.

The A and A Bookstore on Yonge Street offers a 12½ per cent discount to a student on a large variety of expensive medical and technical texts.

Bissell challenges freshmen to take long-range view

University of Toronto freshmen were asked Wednesday to set out on a momentous voyage of discovery and to concentrate less on what lies immediately before them.

The challenge was made by U of T President Claude Bissell in an unusually one-sided opening address in Convocation Hall. Dr. Bissell ignored the usual discussion of university development — and stressed long-range, constructive thinking must be learned in university.

Dr. Bissell pointed out that the freshman class, which should seek a "unified sensibility," rather than emphasize the deficiencies of life, is the first of the postwar generation to reach university en masse.

He said that this generation was influenced by an age "which began in Hiroshima with the conclusion of one conflict and the beginning of another more vast and portentous."

The generation's reaction to the fear of an atomic war was seen by Dr. Bissell as "a conscious decision, in the knowledge of the uncertainties of the future, to concentrate on what lies immediately before you".

Dr. Bissell felt this attitude was best expressed by political novelist Arthur Koestler, who called the generation "one living outside history, one which, under the parabolic orbits of intercontinental missiles has peacefully settled down to cultivate its little gardens."

The way to get away from this "mood that does not induce greatness," Dr. Bissell said, was to exchange the "pale protest" of "beardies and weirdies" for "the unified sensibility" common in the 16th and 19th century renaissances.

In this attitude, the university seeks "for the union in man of those qualities which too often are fragmented and thereby weakened," Dr. Bissell said. "It was here (at U of T) during the middle decades of the 19th century that the secular and the scientific forces on the one hand, and the religious and the humanistic, on the other, resolved on dialogue rather than conflict, on physical union rather than separateness.

What was accomplished then, and what exists so strongly today, comprise a major contribution to the life of our times."

Dr. Bissell felt this was why university training was not simply an extension of secondary education or a preparation for a profession. "You are, rather, beginning to confront the tantalizing tangle of human life, and setting out with the generations before you on a momentous voyage of discovery."

Rector of the U of M, the SAC reaffirmed "the right of students to protest," and deplored "the threat of expulsion which now hangs over the executive."

The SAC also set up a "Canadian-Canadian Relations Committee" to promote knowledge and understanding of the "bi-national reality of Canada."

Projected functions of the committee included translation of correspondence to French recipients, study of French language communication media, especially student newspapers and magazines, promotion of exchanges with French Canadian students and writing a submission to the Royal Commission on Bi-Culturalism.

The committee was set up under the temporary chairmanship of Richard Pope (IV UC) with an appeal to all students interested in working for the committee to contact the SAC.

The SAC also voted to establish a 20-minute question period at the beginning of each meeting. Questions may be asked of any SAC member by any member of the university.

Council also elected John Roberts (II Wyc) and Nancy Caldecott (III Vic) to the publications commission, and Bernadette Sulgit (III SMC), Ian MacDonald (IV Vic), and Clark Woodland (IV For) to the finance commission.

Extra police will staff football game

Doug Ward, president of the Students' Administrative Council, announced to the first SAC meeting last night that eight Metropolitan Toronto police officers (six men and two women) will patrol tonight's football game at Varsity Stadium.

Summonses will be issued to those found having liquor in their possession.

Ward said that the matter is entirely in the hands of the University of Toronto Athletic Association, and suggested that if students felt they must drink, they should do it before or after the game.

He felt U of T students learned their lesson last year and that a police patrol of Varsity home games will not be necessary again.

Ward was referring to several incidents which occurred last year, among them the hurling of insults at a Negro policewoman. This resulted in the arrest of four students and summonses of 25 others at the homecoming game between Toronto and Western.

Share Campaign Extended To More Students

The annual SHARE campaign, organized by the World University Service to aid students in foreign lands, will be extended this year to cover an estimated 4,000 additional University of Toronto students.

The week-long fund-raising drive, scheduled to get off the ground Oct. 14, will be expanded to take in students attending Osgoode Hall and those registered with the Department of University Extension, it was announced at the first WUS meeting Thursday.

Contributions will also be accepted from the general public.

With the increased scope for canvassing and more efficient organization, which is being stressed by WUS officials this year, it is hoped that the total collected can be substantially increased.

As in past years, the personal appeal will be relied upon to bring in the major share of the total.

An attempt will be made to approach every student, through the class executives at each college or faculty.

To supplement funds editor of the year".

Mel Meyer, editor of the student Alabama Crimson and White, has been told by university officials that he may not "write upon or comment upon" any racial matters.

Meyer gained international attention and repeated threats on his life for his editorials during the anti-segregation riots of 1962 at Alabama.

Chris Snyder (Extia) is WUS chairman for the 1963 campaign.

It was also announced at the first meeting that during the summer a $1,000 bursary fund for needy overseas students has been set up.

Half the amount was raised directly by WUS through solicitations, and this was matched by the university administration. WUS will administer the fund.

university's demands, Meyer said, will result in "severe disciplinary action" and possible expulsion.

Both the Men's and Women's division of the University Health Service now are located at 256 Huron Street and not, as stated in the Freshman's Handbook at 274 Huron Street and in the Women's Athletic Building.

To reduce parking

New restrictions on reserved parking behind Hart House have cut in half the number of spaces available for the cars of students commuting from outside Toronto.

In recent years the Students' Administrative Council has reserved the access road from Hoskin Avenue to Soldiers' Tower.

Parking space was allotted to car-driving students who lived at least 15 miles from the campus and two miles from public transportation. Last year 75 permits were issued for the 43 available spaces. The over-issue was based on SAC reasoning that not all permit holders would require space at the same time.

This year a new regulation will reduce the number of spaces to 23. It was decided last spring that parking would be allowed along only one side of the road. The decision was reached after both Hart House and Wycliffe College officials complained that parking on both sides hindered delivery trucks. The Fire Department had also insisted on a clear passageway.

The cut back may mean the SAC will have to continue its policy of overissuing parking permits. Already, applications outnumber openings by more than two to one.

Unsuccessful applicants can park on any of the university's four parking lots at a charge of 50 cents a day. Parking facilities there now are the same as last year but more lots are planned for the area between Wilcox and Russell streets.

To curb initiation

KINGSTON (Special) — Initiation rules at Queen's University will be tightened following an incident this week in which police dragged Lake Ontario searching for a body that wasn't there.

The hijinks Tuesday night involved the "dunking" of several freshmen.

Trevor Barry, 19, of Kingston, a first-year applied science student, told police that these freshmen were dunked and that only two came out.

He said he saw a gold windbreaker that somebody might have been wearing. He dived after it but couldn't recover it.

Police dragged for two hours although sophomore organizers of the initiation insisted that only two freshmen were dunked and that both came out of the water. Queen's Principal Dr. J. A. Corry said future initiations will be more closely supervised.

"It is a serious matter that initiation activities should be such as to give rise to rumors of this nature."

He said strict rules would be instituted and that "severe penalties" would be applied if the rules were broken.

H. G. Conn, dean of the engineering faculty, said initiations in past years lasted for several weeks, but that they have decreased gradually.

"The change of tone has been toward more constructive activities," he said.

"This particular incident will give impetus to this trend."

Open Peace House

The Combined Universities Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament opened its season yesterday by hoisting a "proposed Canadian flag"—a United Nations flag—at CUCND Peace House on Harbord Street.

An unidentified CUCND spokesman made the proposal at the short ceremony which marked the beginning of the first full season at the house — to be used as a discussion and social centre for students. The house is owned by the CUCND.

The organization's fall program starts Monday with the first of a series of National Film Board movies to be shown during noon hours. Included in the series are Universe, winner of 14 film prizes, to be shown Tuesday; and some of Norman McLaren's productions.

Will study Canadian affairs

Laval University students will hold their third annual congress on Canadian affairs in Quebec from Nov. 5 to Nov. 9.

In the past two years speakers at the congress have included Quebec Premier Jean Lesage, former justice minister E. Davie Fulton, former trade minister George Hees, New Democratic Party leader T. C. (Tommy) Douglas, Quebec separatist Marcel Chaput and Quebec Social Credit leader Real Caouette.

This year the congress will discuss and attempt to explain the quiet revolution which has affected Quebec in recent years.

Do Canadian university students present a solid front? The Canadian section of the International Student Conference's June information bulletin carried a reprint of a message from the National Federation of Canadian University Students to the National Union of South African Students. The message conveyed the support and sympathy of Canadian university students to the plight of the South African academic community. It emphasized "that the solidarity of the 100,000 students comprising NFCUS membership is a deep and genuine one and it is extended in full knowledge and comprehension of the circumstances in which South African students and professors find themselves."

The split which now is developing between NFCUS's French speaking members and the rest of the federation is ample evidence of the lack of solidarity the NFCUS executive claims exists.

One of the reasons the French speaking members have become dissatisfied with NFCUS is the federation's lack of action. United by the French Canadian national issue, the Quebec students have discovered their potential and moved into the spheres of social, political and religious action.

These students have discovered that unified action in support of, or in opposition to public issues carries a certain amount of weight.

The French Canadian students have discovered their status as citizens in a democracy, and are acting accordingly.

It is encouraging to note that two English speaking universities, British Columbia and Toronto, largely support the French Canadian students.

But the rest of the English speaking universities and the majority of English speaking university students are an unknown quantity.

We suspect that only a small minority of Canadian university students know anything about NFCUS. We suspect that an even smaller minority know much about the South African or French Canadian situations.

Further, we suspect the NFCUS executive of disseminating pompous platitudes on the South African issue while failing to provide the basic and positive leadership needed in the English speaking universities.

If the predominantly English speaking federation ignores this and if it causes schism at the NFCUS conference in Edmonton next week, it will certainly drive the French Canadians into a separate body of their own.

If the English speaking students want NFCUS to become more than a mere organization of students, which sends an occasional sympathetic telegram, positive action will have to be taken at the conference.

All Canadian university students are in a position to carry out the actions exercised by the French Canadians. If they fail to do so, they are relegating themselves to the role of second class citizens, and will be left behind by the French Canadians.

The English speaking students are faced with the inevitable choice of involvement or non-involvement in the issues of their time. We hope they have the courage to act in a responsible manner.

Peace in our time.

SATURDAY NIGHT

by JIM LAXER

The Munich agreement, synonym for appeasement, was signed by Germany, Great Britain, France and Italy a quarter of a century ago this week.

Munich meant war for the world. It was a high point for the Fuehrer who had launched his farcical putsch for power in this same city 15 years before; it was a high point for the Germany that had risen from depression and isolation to threaten the great powers of Europe in the space of five years.

From the viewpoint of the Third Reich, Munich removed the Czech dagger from Germany's industrial heartland; it opened the Danube system and all of Central Europe to future Nazi advance. Most seriously, it split Russia from the West and meant that there was to be no London-Moscow alliance against Hitler until June 1941 — after the fall of France.

Czechoslovakia between the two world wars was a hardy, democratic nation of 15,000,000 people, occupying a strategic position in central Europe. It was the most successful of the Versailles creations.

Czech security was guaranteed by a strengthened Little Entente with Rumania and Yugoslavia and mutual assistance pacts with France and Russia. Prague was endowed with a strong army, well fortified in its Little Maginot along the German frontier. Her airfields were within easy bombing distance of Berlin and her Skoda armaments factories kept her forces well supplied. Czechoslovakia was the common ally of Russia and the West. She was thus the last great symbol of collective security. Her destruction without a fight was to mark Hitler's greatest triumph.

Using the German minority in the Sudetenland as his ostensible grievance, the Fuehrer whipped up a storm of abuse and hatred that reached a climax in that September 25 years ago. Thus the stage was set for the entrance of the principals who were to play out the drama of Munich. After a violent and insulting speech by Hitler on Sept. 12, Neville Chamberlain, Britain's elderly appeasement prime minister, concluded that an interview with Hitler was essential for the maintenance of peace.

BERCHTESGADEN

Sept. 15 Chamberlain set out on the first flight of his life to meet the Fuehrer in his lair at Berchtesgaden. Here he agreed to try to convince first his own cabinet and then France and Czechoslovakia to accept the principle of national self determination in the Sudetenland.

On his return home, Chamberlain exerted great pressure on the Czech Government to accept dismemberment and virtual military destruction. He had less trouble gaining the connivance of Daladier's spineless French government.

GODESBURG

Returning to Germany Sept. 22, the prime minister again met Hitler, this time at Godesburg. But the German leader was strangely intransigent considering that his opponent had already conceded his principal demand. Hitler now ruled his original offer unacceptable and raised his price for peace to immediate occupation of the Sudetenland by German troops. His only concession was to postpone the date of takeover from Sept. 28 to Oct. 1, the original deadline for the operation in any case.

Chamberlain was more discouraged than chagrined by Hitler's latest demand. When asked by a journalist if he felt the position now hopeless, Chamberlain replied: "I would not like to say that. It is up to the Czechs now." Such were the brave words of the appeasement.

The prime minister returned home where he attempted to convince his cabinet to accept the Godesberg Memorandum. (Continue on Page 17)

QUESTIONS EDITORIAL

Beryl Joyner

I refer to your editorial in the issue of September 25 in which you state: "... the student who wants to learn will have to fight a large segment of the teaching staff, a group he probably expected to have on his side. He will learn that most of his teachers have accepted the easier route of following the system and are among the most conservative members of the university community.

When he tries to fight the system the student will find that his immediate opposition comes from these reluctant scholars. His professor will ask a specific question and expect and even more specific answer. The student will be discouraged from exploring an idea to its logical conclusion, and if he persists, will find his efforts are not appreciated."

It has been my experience that the faculty members of this university go out of their way to help and encourage the interested student and I wish to place on record my appreciation of this fact.

You also state: "The student who wants an education will have to buck the Establishment."

Obviously so large an institution requires a bureaucratic framework in order to function. But it has also been my experience that this framework is flexible and can accommodate the special needs of the students. And I wish to place on record my appreciation of the kindness and assistance I have received from both the faculty and the administrative staff in this respect.

An education cannot be conferred. It can only be acquired. In admitting the freshmen, this university has offered them the freedom to acquire an education if they wish to do so.

THE ELECTION

By Mike Cross

Ontario bought the image Wednesday's provincial election can be summarized that easily.

Two years ago a bland young man from London, Ont., boasting little but a short term as minister of education and a pleasant smile to qualify him, won the leadership of the Ontario Progressive Conservative party.

His acceptance speech was painfully inept, his personality seemed non-existent. Yet today John Robarts leads a huge phalanx of supporters in the Legislature — the people have given him an even greater mandate than they ceded to his predecessor, Leslie Frost, in 1959.

In the two years since the Varsity Arena nominating convention, Robarts has done a brilliant job of selling his image. The machine which buried his rivals for the Tory leadership remained geared up. John Wintermeyer and Donald MacDonald started their campaigns Aug. 16, with the dissolution of the Legislature. But John Robarts had been fighting this election since Oct. 25, 1961, the night he succeeded Leslie Frost.

He gave every section of the population something to respond to. To the middle-class, he offered the picture of the level-headed businessman in politics, the be-vested banker running the province on sound commercial principles. The image was appealing, as Robarts swept suburbia. To the working-class, he presented himself as the progressive, promising minimum wages, medicare, pensions, but as the progressive who made no great demands upon them, who gave them roughly what they wanted without forcing them to think about it. The image was appealing, as Robarts swept downtown. Robarts the Tory, jut-jawed and Churchillian as he surveyed his province from hundreds of billboards, Robarts the liberal, defender of the Catholic minority on the schools question, Robarts the Ontarian, defending his province against the inroads of the federal government, the images were all appealing, as Robarts swept Ontario.

Wintermeyer was never able to make either his party or himself appealing.

He came out swinging when the election was called, determined to make an issue of government scandals, and especially of the 'whitewash' of the Roach Report on crime. This proved to be an unfortunate approach. As the resounding majorities given to the Frost regime proved, the people of Ontario do not get greatly upset about scandals, as long as the peccadilloes do not threaten their personal prosperity.

What was worse, Wintermeyer could not make any of his mud stick to John Robarts. The scandals all dated from the Frost era. Robarts was free from any personal responsibility, and had done a good job in disassociating himself from the old government. (In fact, at times, it seemed as if Robarts, with his stress on the new, young government, was running against Frost, rather than Wintermeyer.) Wintermeyer himself, with his indiscretion over Northern Ontario Natural Gas shares, was more open to attack than the Premier.

Another factor militating against Wintermeyer was the personalities he had to offer Ontario as his 'Liberal team'. With the exception of Vernon Singer, MPP for Downsview, and Robert Nixon, probable successor to Wintermeyer as leader of the party, the Liberals were an uninspiring aggregation. One could hardly give serious thought to turning the reins of government over to Crit frontbenchers like the old Windsor warhorse, Arthur Reaume, the mercifully-forgotten Farquhar Oliver, or the scourge of the North, Elmer Sopha. The Conservative cabinet members, on the other hand, gave at least an appearance of vigor and competence. The old Frost left-overs had been pushed into the background. Kelso Roberts was plummeted to that lowliest of posts, lands and forests. Allan Grossman was shunted to the less than prestigious reform institutions portfolio. Little has been heard from the grand old man of the party, Jim Allen. In their places, new figures have emerged. Dynamic Robert Macaulay and youthful (33) William Davis are the symbols of the new Robarts Toryism. In an election in which leadership was a major issue, and it could hardly fail to be with the public thirsting for competent government after the fumbblings of the Diefenbaker and Pearson governments in Ottawa, Robarts and his colleagues had a strong advantage.

The New Democrats were never a serious threat. Holding only five seats in the last Legislature and failing to break through in the recent federal elections, they could not hope to convince the electorate they could form the government. This in itself dealt a death blow to any NDP chances of making major gains, since Canadians love to string along with winners. The performance of Donald MacDonald, provincial leader, during the campaign, added the finishing touches. He missed out entirely on the pension issue, by accepting in toto the federal plan. The NDP simply had no position except 'me too' on pensions. His addition of drugs to the services covered by the New Democrat medicare plan was a classic blunder. Announced in the midst of the campaign, it appeared a flagrant bribe to the electorate. His vagueness on the details of the subject made it impossible to take the plan seriously. Highly damaging as well was MacDonald's indiscretion in allowing the press to draw from him statements which appeared to support a pay-raise for MPPs. Many people were still angry over the federal pay increase, and were in no mood for even speculation of augmenting the provincial stipend.

The press continually stressed the lack of issues in this campaign. They stressed it often enough to convince people, to destroy interest in the election. Since an apathetic turnout generally aids the party in power, and all three Toronto dailies supported the Robarts administration, someone of a cynical turn of mind could draw interesting conclusions about newspaper coverage of the election. Whatever the press reports, this writer, at least, found a number of issues about which voters were concerned, in the riding where I campaigned, Scarborough West. Surprisingly, medicare was not one of them. Despite the battles on the platform and in the Legislature, despite the excitement over the Saskatchewan crisis of last summer, the average voter simply was not interested. The rival party claims, the bewildering number of statistics quoted on all sides, the complexity of the subject, these discouraged the electorate from even attempting to understand the issue. As a result, most people rested reassured that the Robarts government was giving them some kind of medicare, so why worry about it. The early issue of major proportions was the pension question. Robarts and Wintermeyer fought out the respective merits of the provincial and federal plans and federal politicians of both parties eagerly joined in. Robarts came out somewhat the better in the conflict, although he was forced to pledge at least token co-operation with any federal scheme. Wintermeyer was unable to make capital out of his charges that Robarts was damaging the nation through excessive insistence upon provincial rights. Ontarians simply did not accept the picture of their premier joining with the Quebec extremists to break up Canada. And the intervention of Judy LaMarsh, vitriolic federal minister of health and welfare, in the campaign, only weakened the Liberal cause. Miss. LaMarsh, still well-remembered for the "Truth Squad" fiasco, is not the most subtle of politicians. Lumbering where most voters felt she had no part, she became a figure of ridicule, rather than a strong spokesman for the Liberal pension plan.

During the last week of the campaign, the problem of aid to separate schools began to emerge in the press. At the constituency level, it had be-

THE GROUP - MARY MCCARTHY

Harcourt, Brace and World; pp 378; $6.95.
by Allen Koretsky.

Matthew Vassar's original notion, about a century ago, was this: "Woman, having received from her Creator the same intellectual constitution as man, has the same right as man to intellectual culture and development. The mothers of a country mold the character of its citizens, determine its institutions, and shape its destiny."

Either old Mat, a Poughkeepsie brewer who incidentally never had any girls of his own, was a bit barmy, or Mary McCarthy just never met the right kind of girl at college. In any event, the rather sad crew whose early post-college careers make up the plot of Miss McCarthy's latest novel, bear little resemblance to the founder's happy ideal.

The eight girls of The Group, and a ninth who never got in, because her neuroses were more palpably antisocial than the others', once lived together in the South Tower of Main Hall at Vassar College. Like Mary McCarthy, they all graduated in the spring of 1933. Most of them then went to New York to work.

The first of The Group to be married was Kay, who was always something of an outsider, coming as she did from Salt Lake City, and exaggerating, as she also did, the importance of Dottie Renfrew's mother's clubs and father's business connections in Boston.

One week after Commencement, Kay was married in a most excitingly unconventional kind of ceremony. All the girls were curious because they had gathered that Harald was a genius of a playwright. After the marriage it turned out that he was also a chronically unemployed, pretentious hack, whose plays seem never to have been produced.

Kay worked at Macy's while Harald mostly sat home or slept around and pretended to be superior, and the marriage fell apart. A few years later Kay ended up in the Payne Whitney Clinic, and then in the early summer of 1940 she fell or jumped. (The police allowed that it was an accident.) out of the window in her room at the Vassar Club, where she had been living alone since her divorce.

The opening scene, in the little church on Stuyvesant Square, conveniently provides an opportunity for a quick sketch of all eight women. Many of the familiar college types are there: Pokey Prothero is the not too bright, horsey, rich girl (so rich that she can afford bad table manners); Libby MacAusland is the tactless, aggressive, smart one; Dottie Renfrew is the innocent little girl from Boston, weakly dedicated to the vague idea of doing some settlement house work after college. And so on.

Presiding over the whole sect is their high priestess, the cool and beautiful debutante from Chicago, Elinor Eastlake, affectionately known to her friends as the Madonna of the Smoking Room. In this kind of sketch Mary McCarthy excels.

LACKS COHESION

It soon becomes clear, however, that this multiplicity of characters is to create difficulties. In fact, the author's major formal problem is how to distribute the plot among the eight women and yet keep the novel organized around one coherent centre. Because the action is diffuse and episodic, the novel fails to achieve a tight structure. The plot moves from character to character, from one incident to another, with apparently no clear plan in the author's mind. Though Kay appears more often than any of the others, no one character attains a dominant, central position. Kay's shabby decline and fall is a theme that runs through the book, and yet it does not quite manage to tie the plot together.

Economic circumstances and the admissions policy of Vassar College, however, do insure a certain cohesion in the characters. For, despite the differences in personality among the eight women, they all represent more or less the same social and economic background.

The Group that went to Vassar during the Depression, at a time when many had to leave college, is quite homogeneously upper middle class. And, of course, their casual and comfortable liberal political feelings are the predictable ones of "progressive" girls at college: they were "not afraid of being radical either; they could see the good Roosevelt was doing, despite what Mother and Dad said; they were not taken in by party labels and thought the Democrats should be given a chance to show what they had up their sleeve.... The worst fate, they utterly agreed, would be to become like Mother and Dad, stuffy and frightened."

The Group, then, is a novel about bourgeois young women in New York during the thirties. Although it is the time of the crucial American experiment in government, Miss McCarthy carefully keeps politics in the background. The current political and social and psychological fads flit in and out of her characters' conversations, but she is never seduced into making this a political novel, or a novel of ideas. The fact is that few of these Vassar women seem to have many clear, strong ideas. The book concentrates, rather, on what we now call Domestic or Household Science.

HOMEY NOVEL

All of this makes for a homey kind of novel, appropriately told in an easy, chatty language. The ambitions and anxieties of the characters are more than plausible; they are familiar. But this never leads to simple sentimentalism or tearful bathos, for the author is Mary McCarthy. She exhibits at all times a sure sense of detachment, and her writing fairly flaunts her talent for keeping things in perspective.

If Kay's shocking death and funeral at the end are less than sublimely tragic, this is because Miss McCarthy, writing in the ironic mode, never lets Kay or any of the other girls in The Group, attain true tragic stature. High nobility of character is not in fashion today, either in life or literature. The best of the young women in The Group, like Polly, are sweet kids; and the worst of them are, like Libby, merely rude and foolish, or, like Kay, just painfully unrealistic and bewildered.

It seems beside the point to complain that The Group will become a bestseller because of its racy tone and its enormous interest in sex. That is probably true, but a more important question is how interesting and worthwhile a book Miss McCarthy has written.

With a gift for animating the ordinary experiences and anxieties of our day, she keeps her story going in a lively, if not orderly, fashion. The prose is always a delight to read. The novel is rich in hard, clear writing. Moreover, Miss McCarthy has a way with the natural idiom of that era (which, incidentally, now seems almost as dated as the boop-boop-a-doop language of the period that immediately preceded it. But these are always kept under control, and they never cloy.

NO CLEAR AFFIRMATION

The novel contains no clear affirmation, but it can hardly be held uniquely culpable for this deficiency today. Miss McCarthy is a satiric writer, bent on depicting the shallowness and confusion in the ordinary lives of educated, middle class, young women during the uncertain thirties. Her job is to watch carefully and describe. She is a keen observer, and she describes what she sees with detachment and even, at times in this novel, real compassion.

She exposes the frequently aimless busyness and talkiness and amorality of the fast, educated set, as well as tears apart the older Republican country-club set, represented here by some of the girls' parents.

Mary McCarthy may make a few male readers snicker a little at the concept of the modern, progressive graduate of an Eastern women's college, but perhaps we should merely be thankful that she didn't go to Princeton or Harvard.

FOUR FACES

There are few encouraging things that can be said about "Four Faces", the new play by Albert Meglin now playing at the Crest. It is about as interesting as a distant aunt telling you, for two hours, the names of people she met on her holiday in Florida last summer. You listen patiently for a while thinking something will emerge, but in the end admit defeat, curl up in a chair, and quietly go to sleep.

The play is divided into two halves. The first half concerns the meeting between Barlow, an ex-professor, and Ginger, a simple, good-hearted girl from the lower orders.

Barlow has brought her back to his hotel room to talk to her, he says, and manfully fulfils his promise. In the course of time, we learn that his university career founded on two people, Paul and Ara. Paul was a favourite pupil of Barlow's, but Ara, his sister, was not interested in intellectual things and spent most of her vital hours off campus. In the course of this she got pregnant, cited Barlow (although it was a lie) and Barlow lost his job. So ends Act I.

Act II moves us on ten years. In the meantime Ginger has married Buck, a lecherous cab-driver, who is now having an affair with Ara and Act II consists in detailing Ara's relationship with Buck and also in revealing more about why Ara cited Barlow. It never becomes crystal clear, but has something to do with wanting to hurt Paul. Buck then leaves Ara because she tells him that she has had a better offer, and the heroine is left alone at the end, contemplating in merciful silence the destruction she has caused.

In technique the play

waves briefly in Ibsen's direction. Its major concern is with the past rather than the present, of how the characters that we see before us, through past experience, became what they now are. But it is all handled so loosely that no tragic or comic pattern emerges from the intersection of their various lives. The dialogue aims at "realism" by reproducing all the inconsistency and repetitiveness of everyday conversation. There seems to be no attempt — at least the effect is of no attempt — at selection or organization on the author's part.

The acting is good. Toby Robbins displays her versatility by undertaking both female roles. In her playing of Ginger she suggests a well-meaning naivete, which is right for the part. She handles Ara competently.

Bruno Gerussi bounds effectively around the stage as Buck, and Tom Harvey, straining here and there, gets by quite well as the disappointed professor.

Rocco Bufano, the director, provides the necessary pace by having the characters talk quickly but clearly, and prevents the play from bogging down by keeping them always on the move. He is next directing "Juno and the Paycock". This at least will give him something more substantial on which to exercise his undoubted talents.

The coming year

One faces the prospect of another theatrical season with slight misgivings. In past years it has often had that will-o'-th-wisp quality of promising much but providing little.

The Crest Theatre, however, seems determined to do better this year than last. The stage has been considerably enlarged and a permanent company of young but talented actors has been engaged, including three graduates of the National Theatre School. Guest stars and guest directors will be brought in according to the needs of each play.

The season opens with a production of Sean O'Casey's Juno and the Paycock, in which the captain Boyle will be played by Robert Christie and Joxer by Gerard Parkes. The play is to be directed by Rocco Bufano, a young Sicilian who has been working in New York.

Juno will be followed by an adaptation of Steinbeck's short story, Of Mice and Men, in which the two leads will be played by Ken James and Sean Sullivan, both members of the permanent company. Then, for a lighter touch, there will be a production of Garson Kanin's comedy, Born Yesterday. The guest star will be a bouncing blonde from Montreal, Marilyn Gardiner, and Bill Brydon will be seen in his first major role as Harry Brock.

For Christmas, the Crest is planning to produce a new musical, Mr. Scrooge, a distant relative of the Dickens novel.

The long winter months will provide more serious fare. Show's Caesar and Cleopatra is back again, though with a different cast, and will be followed by Shakespeare's Hamlet. Nobody knows (or is telling) who will play the Prince, but Bruno Gerussi heads the list of possibles.

The season will conclude with three plays: A Far Country, apparently the story of Sigismund Freud; The Little Foxes by Lillian Hellman; and an unnamed comedy which the Crest promises "will tickle the funnybone of all our winter weary patrons".

The Crest has established an Hour Company to take plays out to the various schools of Toronto. The company will be headed by Barbara Chilcott.

In this enterprise we wish them luck for if Toronto Theatre is to expand it desperately need a larger audience than is at present available. The Royal Alex has been rescued by that patron of the arts, Mr. Ed Mervish, and tastefully redecorated. The Alex too will be offering a full season of entertainment, though its plans are more tentative than those of the Crest. The Ballet is to appear there briefly in mid-October, and will be followed by a week of The Second City, the satirical review from Chicago. An Evening of British Rubbish, which was to go with it, has apparently been lost somewhere along the line. A Thousand Clowns and Black Nativity are to follow an, in December, the Moscow puppets.

A new musical with music and lyrics by Noel Coward, The Girl Who Came to Supper will appear after the season of opera now on at the O'Keefe Centre. It stars José Ferrer and Florence Henderson. Later in the year, there is the enticing prospect that one may be able to see both Scofield's Lear and Burton's Hamlet.

Sweet and sour satire by David Sexter

Next to the Hootenanny, satirical reviews have become the most popular form of entertainment on the local scene. The Village Review 5B played to full houses at Theatre-in-the-Dell all summer. It was publicized as the best show in town—quite correctly, since it was the only show in town. The Village Review moved to the Dell from its usual haunt, The Bohemian Embassy, and benefitted greatly by the change.

The three men and a girl in the cast revised the review throughout the summer to keep the humour current. The finale was a clever take-off on Cleopatra, with Carol Robinson providing a riotous impersonation of the Queen.

Although the Village Review was primarily spoofery, it included some barbed satire. The sketch on overpopulation showed the four actors standing back-to-back in a tight square. Two of them indulged in an adulterous affair by taking deep-knee bends together.

The Establishment was the big let down of the summer. This British revue swept into Toronto after a smash run in New York, and played standing-room-only in Eaton's Auditorium. The location was disastrous. Their satire required the intimate atmosphere of a night club, and it fell flat when the audience had to strain their necks to see the stage.

The players were accustomed to performing on a night-club platform, and the show came over as static on a full-size stage. The location, however, was not the only fault. The revue lacked timing and tempo.

In spite of the many flaws, The Establishment did have some superb sketches. The meeting to plan an advertising campaign for the Labour Party was both biting and hilarious. If the other skits had been of the same calibre, The Establishment would have deserved the praise it received.

Satire invaded Stratford in July under the title Suddenly This Summer. The talented trio consisted of Tom Kneebone, a plastic-faced comedian; Roderick Cooke, the sophisticated straight man; and Pat Galloway, the sexy distaff member of the team.

The revue was designed primarily as a post-theatre entertainment for Festival patrons. A number of the skits were geared towards "that rival troupe across the river". Cyril de Bergowitz and Slinky Poo both appeared.

All three actors gave refreshing performances, but Tom Kneebone's solo numbers gave the show its special sparkle.

MASSEY COLLEGE

Probably the most-discussed building in Toronto these days is not, as might be expected, the new city hall but a new college at the heart of the University of Toronto campus. Many people who have seen only its outside don't like it very much. They criticize its height, its color, its odd shape. Some have described it as looking like a prison, others an outside warehouse; and surely the hardest cut of all — "a ruddy great lavatory."

Those who like the exterior design talk about impressive medieval monasteries and other handsome colleges; they also talk about the soaring, spiritual architecture of the middle east. The latter group is usually further delighted when it sees the inner quad: "Had I known what mer lot anything from pleasantly surprised to amazed. One young lady who had been particularly vitriolic about the outer design changed her mind when ushered into the quad: "Had I known what was inside, I wouldn't have said such harsh things. It is marvellous."

Massey College, the design of Vancouver architect Ron Thom (Mr. Thom is also designing Trent University), went into full operation a week ago. Built and furnished with funds provided by the Massey Foundation at an estimated cost of around $2,500,000, it houses 81 graduate scholars, 75 of them junior fellows and the remaining six, senior fellows or teaching professors. Master of the college is Robertson Davies who lives in residence with his wife and three daughters. Most of the Junior Fellows' suites are made up of two rooms — a study and small adjoining bedroom; a few, however, have been accommodated in large, one-room bed-sitting suites which have the enviable added attraction of massive, white brick fireplaces jutting from a corner of the room. Bathrooms are shared by one or at the most two other Fellows. Senior Fellows' suites include study with fireplace, bedroom and private bathroom.

The College's chief attractions include a large reference, cross-reference and research library in the basement of the building, a general library on the main floor, an imposing (and some suggest slightly frightening) round room for oral examinations, a small but very beautiful chapel, a common room with bar and a high-ceilinged dining room for senior fellows.

Visitors to the college are usually curious about its aims, a question that has been best dealt with by the Master, Robertson Davies: "the ideal of education pursued at Massey College," Mr. Davies has said, "is the ancient three-fold way: instruction, solitary toil, and association. It is upon the last that we shall put most emphasis, for it is also what post-graduate workers are most likely to miss in the limbo between the junior and senior common rooms. We hope our men may discover that the things uniting educated people are more numerous and important than the professional things which divide them; we hope they may discover that specialized learning, unless allied with a measure of general cultivation, is rarely more than an elaborate trick, and is not enough to guide and illuminate a life. We hope they may reject that over-valuation of what is merely contemporaneous, which is the folly of so many otherwise intelligent people. We hope Massey College will supplement advanced instruction by encouraging self-discovery."

... but the women say

Last year more than 500 women were enrolled in various graduate courses at the University of Toronto, including Library School, Ontario College of Education and Medicine as well as the School of Graduate Studies. This year the number will be larger.

Two or three women graduate students are sometimes housed at St. Hilda's. A very few become dons in the undergraduate residences. University College provides four double rooms for graduates. No other accommodation of any kind is provided for women graduate students in the University of Toronto.

Writing In Canada

By Sue Lyons

Writing in Canada: Ed George Whalley, Macmillan Co.

Writing in Canada is the published report on "the proceedings of the Canadian writers conference held at Queen's University July/1955". Macmillan of Canada first published the report in paperback in 1956, and it has enjoyed a modest but steady sale ever since.

It is a book worth looking at any time, both for the enlightening factual content and the varied and invariably entertaining style of presentation; the informality of the 1955 conference is carried over into the short papers and summaries of discussion periods which constitute the report. It is especially worth a second glance this fall, eight years later, when the public agitations of these earnest souls seem finally to be bearing fruit.

No comprehensive evaluation is possible yet. Certainly few Canadian writers would say there was much to rejoice over in the state of Canadian letters today. But there are a few encouraging signs, a few bright spots on the horizon that give promise of better things to come — if the awakening desire for expression is accepted and supported by the Canadian reading public, who in the long run alone can insure the existence of a standard of literary quality in Canada that can rise above the stature of international literature.

There are several themes running through the discussions held at Queen's: the sense of "community" in Canadian writing, engendered by the limited number of people engaged in the "literary assembly line" of writer, publisher and critic; the scarcity of opportunities for publication; the limited number of distribution centres for books (libraries and bookstores); the reluctance of Canadian educators to include Canadian poetry and fiction in curricula at every level, resulting in ignorance and apathy by the public towards the products of Canadian writers.

Most evident of all is the note of frustration that characterizes most discussions of the arts in Canada and so often results, as it does here, in mutual antagonisms and accusations: Canadian publishers are out to scuttle all writers; poets and novelists are a "horde of amateurs", a bunch of Sunday afternoon scribblers; and the public — well, we all know what we can expect from the public. And finally, inevitably, the panacea: why the hell doesn't somebody (preferably somebody who is affiliated with absolutely nothing so that a writers artistic (integrity) need never be compromised) subsidize everything in sight so that artists can get away from dirty economics and pour forth the beauty of their souls?

RALLYING SPIRIT

Fortunately there is also a concurrent spirit of good-humoured rallying and wry commentary that prevents the multitude of complaints from degenerating into empty whining. These people were, and still are, fiercely concerned with the literature of the people for whom they are the voice.

When Jay Macpherson, attempting to describe the excitement generated by the unscheduled poetry readings of Irving Layton and others, says "I for one came home to Toronto wanting to read poetry from the roof tops and street corners," this concern becomes contagious.

In keeping with the theme of "The Writer, His Media, and the Public", the conference heard reports from poet A.J.M. Smith, novelist Morley Callaghan, critic Douglas Grant, book publishers John Gray and S.P. Kite, magazine editor and writer Ralph Allen, librarian Hilton Smith, and Robert Weaver of the CBC.

The discussions which revolved around these papers resulted in seven resolutions: (1) that the teaching of Canadian poetry in public schools must be extended and improved "if we are to develop a discriminating Canadian public for a significant national literature"; (2) more Canadian literature should be included in university programmes; (3) libraries should be given more financial support; (4) there should be a standard edition of Canadian authors, something along the line of the Everyman editions; (5) the Royal Society of Canada should be thanked for its work and the hope expressed that it would keep up the good work and double its grants if possible; (6) the Governor-General's Awards should carry a cash grant with them; (At that time, not only was the Governor-General's Award purely honorary, but the recipient had to pay his own travelling costs to receive the award.) (7) Canadian embassies should distribute Canadian books abroad, in the interests of international recognition (and, presumably, greater sales).

PICTURE BRIGHTENING

The improvement in the last eight years in each of these areas of complaint, taken separately, is concrete evidence of the generally brightening picture in creative writing in Canada.

In the matter of exposing Canadian youth to the writing of their countrymen, it is difficult to assess any degree of improvement in either effort or result, since so much depends on imaginative and stimulating presentation of the material. I don't know about you, but my chief memories of Canadian literature acquired from attendance at six public and high schools in the province consists mainly of E.J. Pratt's Prize Cat, some sonnets by Archibald Lampman and numerous essays by Stephen Leacock, laboriously explained so that none of the satirical details should escape us.

Yet my favorite radio programme, at the age of nine or ten, was W.O. Mitchell's series Jake and the Kid, which has left pictures of a Saskatchewan that I have never seen more vivid than any of an Orillia I have seen and this is not a comment on the relative talents of Mitchell and Leacock as writers.

At that stage of education where literature has to be taught too often on the same level and with the same methods as mathematics or science, the onus falls directly on the teacher. No amount of exposure to good Canadian writers — and there are some — can overcome lack of imagination in the classroom.

U OF T WEAK

On the college level, most Canadian universities have undergraduate honours courses either in Canadian literature or in North American literature, split roughly half-and-half. The major exception is the University of Toronto. The first year course in American and Canadian literature thoughtfully allows for some "readings in Canadian poetry" (no specified texts); somehow there just isn't time at the end of the year to squeeze any in.

The fourth year modern novel course also suggests consideration of "a Canadian novel"; one lecture at the end of term suffices. Such an attitude is easily justified on the grounds of literary quality: we simply have not produced any Hemingways, Faulkners or Woolfs.

However, this apparent neglect may in reality augurs better things. I was informed at one of the publishing houses that some professors, in a reverse double twist, are deliberately downplaying the little Canadian material that is offered in the hopes that strong demand will be created for a full undergraduate course.

The closest approach to a standard edition of major Canadian works are the series put out by McClelland and Stewart: The Canadian Century Series, a projected seventeen-volume history of Canada for university use; Canada Today, on the political parties; and The New Canadian Library, paperback editions of important Canadian novels now out of print.

Jack McClelland insisted from the beginning that "The market isn't large enough to make it a financial success," but so many people thought it was a good idea that he went ahead with it anyway, and some of the series are showing a modest profit.

Financial support from governments and foundations was a subject of much discussion at the 1955 conference, stirred up mainly by Ralph Allen's contention (which he later retracted, saying that he was probably the only one who had learned anything at the conference) that in view of the newly-awakened sense of national identity which he detected, subsidization at that time would only weaken the arts, although it might have done some good ten years previously and might again be in line ten years hence.

It was pointed out that in the last ten years Ralph Allen had found a steady job with Our National Magazine; not mentioned but equally relevant was the fact that the conference itself was sponsored by a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation.

COUNCIL HELPS

The creation of the Canada Council in 1957 has done much to remedy some of the lacks the writers felt most acutely. It has, for instance, attached a $1,000 prize to go with the Governor-General's Awards in each of the six categories; Canada Council Medals are accompanied by a cheque for $2,000. Several of the "little magazines", where much of the work of new writers first appears, have received grants, once they have survived the first few issues, to continue publication on an issue-to-issue basis — as long as the Council feels that the "motivating spark" is still there.

These are all encouraging developments — but do they really point to any significant activity? The answer, from writers, publishers and critics, is a qualified yes. Robert Fulford of Maclean's says that there have been more Canadian books sent in to him for review this fall than he's ever remembered seeing — or ever expected to see.

Publishers (the main ones for "original" publishing of Canadian works are Ryerson, McClelland and Stewart, and Macmillan) agree that not only has the number of manuscripts submitted taken a sudden spurt in the last couple of years, but the improved overall quality has insured that more of them are publishable.

Of the various kinds of creative writing, novels have the best chance to take advantage of the developing market, although Morley Callaghan's remark of eight years ago that "the more angular, the more distinctive his talent, the harder it will be for (the writer) to get published" still holds true to (Continued on page 14)

MOVIES

The Leopard creeps through three lethargic hours at the Odeon Hyland Theatre. It is an abortive Italian facsimile of Gone With the Wind, but lacks the glory and grandeur of that Hollywood epic.

The script is the principal culprit. The dialogue is unnatural to start with, and is further hampered by awkward dubbing. Occasionally the leading man launches into 'lofty rhetoric which would sound more appropriate coming from the podium of the United Nations.

Weak dialogue can be salvaged by exceptional acting, but The Leopard has little of that. Most of the characters rant and rave like a troupe of uninspired high school thespians. They use the exaggerated gestures that should have disappeared with the silent films.

The decline and decay of the Italian gentry is reflected through the eyes of the Prince of Salina (Burt Lancaster). He sees himself as a man stranded between two conflicting worlds, who is uncomfortable in both. The role has great dramatic potential, but Burt Lancaster fails to penetrate into the depth and sensitivity of this man.

The contrast between the old and the new regimes is exemplified by comparing the pale emaciated daughters of the Prince with Angelica

Angelica's father is the stereotype of the opportunist who rides the crest of social change to a position of wealth and influence. Burt Lancaster observes that the landed class may be leopards and lions, but the nouveau riche are jackals and sheep. In a moment of prophetic insight, he warns that regardless of who governs, Sicilians will always live in squalor.

One of the film's few consolations is Father Perrone, the ineffectual family priest who cowers through the palace trying to remain in the good graces of his benefactors.

The Leopard may have some slight value as background material if you are studying Italian unification. If not, stalk some other game.

MUSIC

The Canadian Opera Company opened their welcome season at the O'Keefe with a performance of Strauss's "Der Rosenkavalier." It was an adventurous start which paid off well.

Helen Vanni tackled the difficult part of Octavian. The pace at the beginning was slow and her words were often lost, but things improved as the opera proceeded. She was more secure in her scene with Sophie in Act II and finished off superbly in Act III. She handled the complex transvestism of that part — a girl playing a boy who is pretending to be a girl — with deftness and a good sense of comic timing.

Marguerite Willauer was singing opposite her as the Princess von Werdenberg. She was more at ease in the serious than the lighter moments, and her best singing came towards the end of Act I, when the Princess realizes that she is no longer young and that soon she must lose the attentions of her young lover. This dignity she maintained in the final act when she resolves the triangle that has been created by giving Octavian to Sophie.

Baron Ochs is a superb part, as richly and as seriously comic as Falstaff's. Howell Glynn has the right sort of mellow bass to handle it, sang clearly and intelligently, and sketched in the bolder contours of the Baron's character. My only criticism was that he presented the part too self-consciously — it was too deliberately "acted" — so that the impression of the Baron's conceit, his total involvement with himself, was lost.

Mr. von Faninal (Bernard Turgeon) fluttered around effectively and Sophie (Marjorie Hays) hit the right tone of youthful sweetness. It was a pity that the handling of some of the minor parts did not reach their standard. There was no need, for instance, for Leopold to constantly suggest that he would have been more at home in a Marx brother's movie. It reduced the tone of high comedy to one approaching slapstick.

It would be unfair to say that the set for the first act suggested the collaboration of a fifth-rate artist and a first-rate courtesan (the phrase is Moore's) but it was tending that way. Final's house was better and the setting for the inn provided excellent opportunities for harassing the Baron.

The orchestra was under the firm control of Walter Susskind. He kept a bright yet steady tempo, and discouraged anybody, quite rightly, from luxuriating too long in the autumnal richness of Strauss's score.

On Monday there was a performance of "Aida." I must confess that this is not my favourite Verdi opera. The dullness of the plot is mirrored too often in Verdi's score and though there are some fine lyrical moments, these often degenerate into military parades of one sort or another. Provided these limitations are accepted, however, the company has done a fine job in mounting this opera.

All the major roles are well handled. Aida is sung by Ella Lee, who has a powerful voice, carefully controlled in all registers. She has a commanding presence upon the stage and by skillful variations of tone realizes the pathos of the heroine's position — the woman trapped between love for Ramades and duty to her country. Her lover was sung by Richard Cassily. He has a full, rich voice of great power, though he could have employed more contrast in his singing than he did. He only went badly astray once, in Act I, and was at his best in Act III.

I was not as happy with Cecilia Ward as Amneris. Too often her emotions were expressed by gestures rather than by voice, and these were too melodramatic-clenched fists, flashing eyes and stamping feet. Victor Braun as Amonasro, however, both sung and acted with conviction.

Aida is also an invitation to the designer with an eye for lavishness, and this was excellently met by Murray Laufer. All the sets were imaginative and the costumes were sumptuous.

NICKEL IN WORLD MARKETS...JOBS FOR CANADIANS

How Canadian Nickel helps bring pasteurized milk to Iranian children

Until a few years ago, fresh, pasteurized milk was virtually unknown to a great many Iranian youngsters. But, today, thanks to those interested in the welfare of the world's less fortunate children, a modern milk-processing plant outside Teheran is providing enough pasteurized milk daily for thousands of little Iranians. And Canadian nickel is helping, just as it does in similar projects in other parts of the globe. Nickel stainless steel is used for the tanks, pasteurizers, homogenizers and other equipment in the plant. Why nickel stainless steel? Because nickel stainless steel is highly resistant to corrosion and very easy to keep spotlessly clean. The growth of nickel markets at home and abroad helps strengthen Canada's economy and helps provide jobs for Canadians.

Books of short stories and essays just don't sell; usually only established authors can get an edition of their shorter pieces published. Poetry suffers the same fate: E. J. Pratt, and more recently Irving Layton are among the few poets whose books have made enough money to break even.

SLIM PROFITS

Most publishers accept a certain number of limited-sale books each year for the sake of prestige, but their margin of profit is in most cases so slim that it takes several money-makers to allow for one edition of poetry or fiction. Although McClelland and Stewart have made a name for themselves by publishing many Canadian books that no-one else would touch, they are the first to admit that their intentions were not as philanthropic as events have made them appear. When the name of Jack McClelland came up, one competitor simply shook his head and said, "He's a brave man."

What then is left for the promising young writer in Canada? There are a few of the "little magazines", like the Tamarack Review and Vancouver's Prism that thrive on short stories, essays and poetry. Their rates are low, their editorial staff often unpaid, but they do offer a chance of publication.

Radio is no longer the stimulus for creative writing that it was in the forties; and television, according to Robert Fulford, has been a disappointment. "We all looked forward to the things television could have done for original plays, but nothing has happened. There is no school of Canadian playwrights. Television is just not the medium of Canadian expression that we hoped it would be."

Instead, art films have become the predominant form of imaginative expression, and the French Canadians are more active in this field than the English Canadians. "Sweden, Japan, France, Mexico — even the Poles are ahead of us in making films. Novels were the exciting thing in the twenties — and forty years later Canadians start writing novels."

SCIENCE

The scientist in the twentieth century is striving to conquer the universe. With god-like pride he is attempting to direct the destiny of the human race. This pride may possibly not go unpunished. Hubris, in drama, describes the downfall of those proud humans who try to imitate on earth the power of the gods. It is believed by many that science, which is stealing fire from the gods for the service of man as did Prometheus, must inevitably come to a disastrous end.

Many, I feel, fear that science will eventually destroy the "good" things in life. It is feared that science will turn us into machines or robots which go around doing specific little jobs and caring about nothing else, least of all human values.

This criticism has been unfairly used against nuclear physicists in recent years because of the part they had to play in the development of the atomic bomb. These fearful ones see the trend sponsored by science as one towards materialistic values and away from the old dependable virtues such as love, courage, and respect.

Is science narrow? Interestingly enough the word narrow as commonly used in this context, is defined so that the scientist must necessarily be narrow. The man with a liberal education is said to be one who knows a little about art, literature, music, language, and religion but very little if anything about science. Could not the scientist who knows quite a lot about his specialty and a little about zoology, botany, chemistry, physics, astronomy, genetics, mathematics, and statistics also consider himself broadly educated? The scientist and the "liberally educated" person have both gone through a similar range of subjects.

It should be pointed out that the scientist is able to relax with a book out of the liberally educated man's library whereas the so-called liberally educated man cannot usually sit down comfortably with a scientific book in his hands. But when the specialist in the humanities cannot follow a scientific term or concept he often will pass it off glibly as something which could only interest narrow technicians.

This arrogant attitude of the non-scientist to the scientist is found a great deal at the undergraduate level and to a lesser extent at the graduate level. I think that this attitude among he non-scientist undergraduates is a function of their discipline which allows them a considerable diversity of opinion based on a paucity of facts. Since artists use facts so rarely to substantiate their arguments but allow their minds to wander unfettered in a land of subjective thought they come to feel that they alone are thinking creatively. It is unfortunate that a weakly defended opinion is often equated with conclusions derived through a series of well-defined logical steps.

The second part of the criticism involves the feeling that scientists are trying to absolve themselves from the responsibility of taking a moral stand. The feeling persists that scientists are more concerned with the discovery of some scientific principle, for example the atomic bomb, than the consequences of such a discovery. It is certainly conceivable that a worker in science could fall in love with his pet theory.

This theme which has been overused in second rate science fiction depicts the bespectacled scientist with his white lab coat and ruffled hair working in his laboratory with the multi-eyed mechanical computers buzzing hungrily in the background. On his table lies a beautiful blonde female, her wrists and ankles bound. The ape, lion, tiger, — or any beast that Hollywood has found convenient to use — lies strapped to the other table. Soon their brains will be exchanged by the mad scientist. Luckily the boyfriend crashes through the door of the cellar laboratory, saves his girl, and watches as the scientist is devoured by his own creation, the beast. Again the inhuman, calculating scientist has been defeated by the human virtues of love and kindness. But certainly this misanthropy is not unique to those in the scientific disciplines.

But even allowing that the scientist is no more narrow than any specialist investigating intensely the core of his subject and no less human than his non-scientist colleagues, yet there remains a lurking suspicion that the scientist may accidentally cause the destruction of the world. It is foolishly wished that the scientist had taken off his nationalistic garb, become a traitor to his country but at the same time a saviour of mankind. But yet it wasn't the scientist who dropped the bomb. His method gave birth to the fact of the bomb. He even furnished fast-moving planes for its conveyance but he did not drop it. This does not mean that the scientist can avoid the responsibility of this devastation but I do believe that he alone should not bear the responsibility.

It is somehow felt that if he cannot give mankind a beneficial product then it would be better if he gave none at all. But unfortunately discoveries are not made with ethical labels attached to them. For example science has given to kill or destroy insects or to kill other human beings. Science has given man dynamite. He can use it to build tunnels and roads or to destroy human life. Today the scientific theory of the atom has given birth to both the atomic bomb and atomic power. Mankind has the choice of using it for peaceful purposes or destructive ones.

The choice seems obvious to me. Even if I were a cold, inhuman scientist I think that the destruction of the world would be a rather tedious affair since it would mean the loss of all my subject matter.

Since the stakes are becoming rather high today an increase in the knowledge of science by non-scientists becomes imperative.

ART

By Ruth Kosinec

Toronto galleries offer many exhibits of interest this fall.

The Centre Gallery in the Isaacs Gallery is now exhibiting Mollie Cruickshank's series of Monotype Prairie paintings. In Isaacs' Front Gallery is a group show featuring a series of pencil drawings of women walking by Snow. This show which lasts until Oct. 2 also includes Burnton, Caughtry, Gorman, Kurelek, Markle, Meredith, Rayner, Urquhart, and Wieland. From Oct. to the 23rd "African Primitive Sculpture" will be exhibited.

Greg Curnoe, a 26 year old London Ont. artist has a show of 25 to 30 works at the Gallery Moos Ltd. Six of his paintings are grouped under the heading of "Lessons". This young editor of Region Magazine dazzles the art devotee with the amazingly, solid shining surfaces of his paintings. Mr. Curnoe who has been exhibited in Young Contemporaries 1960 and 1962 leaves the Gallery Moos on Oct. 2 to be replaced by Michael Pflug, a new artist, who will display his oils from Oct. 3 to Oct. 16.

The Pollock Gallery now situated on Markham St. in the new village has, until Oct. 1 an exhibition of a major work by each of Akroyd, Baird, Bossin, Bradley, Devries, Rothschild, Fournier, Raicus, Van Alstyne, Sullivan, Horne, Cattell, Daigneault, Steen and Morrisseau, a young Ojibway Indian. These paintings run the gamut from representational to non-objective. Morrisseau who is now exhibiting his Mishipishoo (Ojibway water god) at Pollock will have a one man show there after 5 Oct. 1. On exhibit will be 20 to 25 of his paintings until Oct. 23.

The Hart House art gallery is exhibiting Emily Carr until Oct. 13. Her paintings of the British Columbia Landscape and Indian totem poles illustrate a strong sense of design and style uniquely hers.

Election . . .

come the biggest election issue at least a week earlier. A number of factors combined to push it to the fore. With a Catholic leading the Liberal Party, the question could hardly be avoided. Roberts proposal several months ago to give separate schools an adequate share of corporation taxes, the Catholic bishops' brief, the NDP stress upon their comprehensive foundation plan, these made separate schools a logical issue. All it needed was a trigger, and the agitation of the Orange Order during the campaign provided that. While all parties expressed substantially the same position on separate school financing, again the Conservatives gained most ground. Bigotted Protestants naturally suspected Wintermeyer of leading some Papist plot to destroy public school education. And Roberts' vehement refusal to expand the separate school system (a stand with which both Liberals and NDP agreed) made him appear the champion of public education. Here, as in most areas, clever management and good public relations gave the Tories the advantage.

As we have mentioned, the great underlying issue was leadership. The Roberts image, the picture of the mature but vigorous leader, proved to be magic. And the Conservative publicity men made excellent use of it. In many ridings, the local candidates were almost totally ignored, and the whole emphasis shifted to the premier. Most candidates distributed the Tory provincial leaflet as their major piece of literature, a leaflet which mentioned Roberts 10 times, Conservative only three times, and left only the back page for local candidate material. Many used the effective provincially designed sign, which stressed the motto, "Roberts for Ontario." Everywhere appeared the billboards, featuring a stern picture of the leader, and the injunction: "Good government deserves your support." In many ridings where the local Tories were unattractive or were out-campaigned, the party was carried through entirely on the Roberts image. One need only point to ridings like Scarborough Centre, Beaches or Oshawa to prove the point. Space does not permit an analysis in depth of any ridings to investigate how these factors weighed out. But we might mention some of the more interesting races in the Metropolitan Toronto area. St. Patrick, the riding which embraces the University, saw its first real battle in many years. The incumbent, Kelso

Roberts, had held the seat for 20 years. But his prestige was sorely shaken by the Roach crime probe, and by his demotion from attorney-general to minister of lands and forests. He got little financial support in his campaign from the provincial party, which would not have been displeased to see him beaten. The press, particularly the Globe and Mail, attacked him unmercifully. His Liberal opponent was the brilliant young law professor, Mark MacGuigan, who ran an expensive and intensive campaign, favorably covered by the newspapers. Yet Roberts won by some 800 votes. Despite being under a cloud in the cabinet, Roberts was still able to capitalize on the popularity of the provincial leader. And only Kelso Roberts had workers engaged in the time-honored, and still most effective, occupation of door-to-door canvassing.

Other Metro ridings proved once again that personal contact is still the best way to influence voters, that it can override expensive literature, and even strong provincial trends. Three New Democrats, Stephen Lewis, Ken Bryden and Fred Young amply demonstrated this. Lewis, a recent graduate of the University of Toronto, overwhelmed football hero Joe Krol in Scarborough West with an army of dedicated canvassers. Bryden was re-elected in Woodbine, despite a huge and expensive campaign mounted by Tory George Hogan, while Young's canvassers won him the new constituency of Yorkview. Perhaps an even better indication, however, is given by Scarborough Centre, where New Democrat Dr. Ken Ranney lost to Conservative George Peck by only 400 votes, with the Liberal standard-bearer, popular Scarborough Reeve Ab Campbell, a distant third. Despite a tiny budget of only $2,500, despite the provincial trends, despite a traditional Tory strength in the area, Ranney won a majority of the polling subdivisions, losing the election only on the huge Tory margins run up in four wealthy polls. Good organization by Ranney's campaign manager, veteran union organizer Keith Brown, and good canvassing, almost created the upset of the year. This was the Ontario election, 1963. From the day the writ was issued, the only question was the size of Roberts' majority. Good public relations over the last two years, a program of legislation which had at least the surface appearance of progressivism, inept leadership in the Liberal Party, disenchantment with the federal Liberals, a determined press effort to stampede the public to the Conservatives, and most of all a skillful job of myth-making around the figure of the Tory leader, turned the election into a landslide. Despite the predictions of the pundits, the Conservatives held their areas of rural strength intact, and added to them the new suburban seats in Metro. Now the machinery prepares to carry the image across the country. Roberts is eyeing the leadership of the national PC party. Watch out, Diefl!

But this time, Duff Cooper, First Lord of the Admiralty, and even Foreign Minister Lord Halifax, refused to be pushed further. Britain appeared to be standing fast. France had also decided to aid her Czech ally and had ordered partial mobilization. As the days of September, 1938 ran out, war seemed inevitable. Trenches were dug in London parks; school children were evacuated from the capital; trains and motor cars carried thousands of apprehensive citizens out of Paris.

MUNICH
Sept. 28, as Hitler's ultimatum was about to expire, Mussolini made a plea for a last conference to save the peace. Hitler reluctantly concurred and invitations to the heads of state of Britain, France and Italy were dispatched. The meeting was to take place at Munich the next day. Czechoslovakia and her Russian ally were not asked to attend. The conference spent most of its time considering a plan presented to it by Mussolini. In actual fact this plan had been drawn up by the German Foreign Office and had been telephoned to Rome the day before. It was this so-called Italian Plan, conceived by the Germans and closely parallel to the notorious Godesberg Memorandum that was to form almost the entire Munich Agreement. The next morning, after the agreement had been signed and the Czechs had been informed of the sorry details, Chamberlain presented his famous piece of paper for Hitler to consider. The statement, which the Fuehrer hastily autographed, set out the determination of Britain and Germany to settle their problems peacefully. Hitler had got the Sudetenland; Chamberlain had got his scrap of paper. But the British people cheered their prime minister. The Times said: "No conqueror returning from a victory on the battlefield has come adorned with nobler laurels." Canada's Mackenzie King also hailed the prince of appeasement.

WAS WAR INEVITABLE?
It has been argued by those sympathetic to Chamberlain that he was buying time at Munich in order to rearm the West for the coming struggle with Germany. This theory assumes that general war was already inevitable and that it was merely a matter of a more or less favorable opportunity. This argument has many objections and many critics. Notable among the latter is Sir Winston Churchill. Churchill tells us that the German general staff believed that the West would not back down over the issue of Czechoslovakia. Military experts of the Reich estimated that 35 full divisions would be required to carry the Bohemian Fortress line. Such an entanglement in the east would leave Germany only five effective and eight reserve divisions behind the incomplete West Wall to defend the Reich. This inadequate force would face a French mobilization of 100 divisions. Assuming that Russian assistance would have been forthcoming, Churchill says the two railways leading directly from Russian to Czech territory could have carried a Soviet force of 30 divisions into the possible war zone. The British war leader asserts: "Events took their course as if Soviet Russia did not exist. For this we afterwards paid dearly. Even the Fuehrer was unwilling to face an Anglo-French-Russian coalition over Czechoslovakia. June 18, 1938, he stated to Keitel: 'I will decide to take action against Czechoslovakia only if I am firmly convinced, as in the case of the demilitarised zone and the entry into Austria, that France will not march and therefore, England will not intervene.'" From our vantage point, a generation later, it is apparent that Chamberlain and Daladier dispelled dissension within the Reich, opened Central Europe to the onslaught of Nazi armies and drove their possible Russian ally out of any future collective security stand. Many have concluded from Munich that compromise in international affairs is to be avoided. Wariness in such dealings may well be one important lesson but the dangers inherent in such an attitude can best be summed up by A. J. P. Taylor's contention that "men always learn from their mistakes how to make new ones."

The Bohemian Iceman

By DAVID SECTER
The Iceman Cometh at The Bohemian Embassy is a splendid example of strength through adversity. To start with, the play is one of Eugene O'Neill's longest and hardest to stage. The original script rambles on for over four hours, much of which is redundant. Then there is the feat of squeezing twenty characters into the cramped quarters at the Embassy. To add to these problems, the director had a serious auto accident a few weeks ago. Rather than dismiss the production as jinxed, new directors were hired and The Iceman appeared on schedule. All the action takes place in the backroom of Harry Hope's flophouse and saloon in the summer of 1912. The Embassy's natural decor is a perfect setting for the den of derelicts. "Hickey" is a travelling salesman who used to stay in the boarding house on his frequent drunks. Sober and successful, he returns to redeem his friends. "I mean to save you from your pipe dreams," he tells his cronies. Armed with the truth, he destroys the illusions which make their existence tolerable. He calls a whore a whore and a pimp a pimp. The casting of the play is excellent. Except for the tarts who are not usually convincing, the acting is consistently strong. Norman Burns is particularly powerful as "Hickey", the glib and cocky drummer who comes to sell life to the derelicts. Another outstanding performance was given by Jimmy Thompson as Harry Hope, the saloon proprietor. The Iceman Cometh will be performed at the Bohemian Embassy tonight and Saturday at 7:30 p.m. It is an ambitious production which somehow comes off well.

Roger Doner to coach wrestling

ROGER DONER

Roger Doner is Varsity's new wrestling coach. It was announced yesterday by U of T Athletic Association.

Doner will replace Rod Carrow who has gone to University of British Columbia to take a post graduate course. Carrow coached Varsity for one year while teaching science at Bloor Collegiate. Doner, 24, graduated from U of T in 1960 after winning the intercollegiate 167-pound championship. He taught and coached wrestling at North Toronto collegiate two years ago.

Doner wrestled for Canada in the 1961 Pan-American games and finished high in the standings.

Interfaculty program sports new look

One of the best and certainly the largest interfaculty sports program in North America is resuming on U of T's campus once again.

The football schedule starts Oct. 10 with ten teams divided into two divisions. Division I, which includes Victoria College, St. Michael's, Engineering and Dentistry, will remain the same while the composition of Division II will be somewhat different from last year.

Engineering has withdrawn their Freshman team and will only have one team. Physical Health and Education has severed its athletic affiliation with University College and the two will not compete as one team this year.

As a result UC will draw all of its players from its own corridors while PHE is not fielding a team as yet.

New College, after only one year of existence, has bought new uniforms and equipment and will take the place of Junior Skule in the second division. Other teams in this division are Trinity Forestry, Medicine and Pharmacy. The teams play within their own divisions during the regular season but the playoffs for the Mulock Cup involve inter-division games. Last year, Victoria won the cup for an unprecedented fifth time in a row.

One of the most popular intramural sports last year, seven-a-side rugger, has tentative plans of expanding to a 27 team loop. Rugger games start on Oct. 9.

JUDO NEEDS YOU

By TIM GARDEN

Men, are you continually bothered by 250-lb. bullies? Are you looking for a way to get your credits for physical education? Are you trying to find a sport in which you can demonstrate your great abilities as an athlete, relieve your frustrations, and develop some badly-needed self-confidence?

If any, or all, of these applies to you, read on as I offer you the one sensible solution to your problem.

The answer is Judo.

To indulge in this sport you need go no farther than Hart House, where Judo has been offered as an activity for about five years, having a very satisfactory turn-out of enthusiastic students each year.

The requirements are few - a reasonably sound body and mind, a judogi (the Judo uniform), and at least two hours of your time each week.

A student instructor is present at the practice sessions to assist with any problems you may have. Through conscientious practice the average judoka (or student of Judo) should progress through two grades in one session, receiving his yellow and then his orange belt for fourth grade.

Remembering that there are only three more grades before the first degree or the black belt, the more ambitious judoka may then go on to the more advanced and more difficult work.

Judo, an art and a sport, and a means of offense and defense, is one of the oriental martial arts and is really a modification and standardization of the violent art of jujitsu. Jigoro Kano uses the best of the jujitsu techniques and has eliminated the harmful ones to provide one uniform style.

In addition to timing and quick judgement, Judo develops the student's sense of sportsmanship and his character, and probably to a greater degree than most other sports do.

To display signs of poor sportsmanship or anger is taboo, making Judo a sport unique among most of the others indulged in today, where such outbreaks are not uncommon. Judoka are expected to watch out for the safety of their opponents, and thus try not to injure one another.

Varsity track supremacy threatened

By UNCLE HARRY

What a difference a year makes.

The Varsity track team last fall ran up the highest ever score in OQAA competition and more than doubled the count on the nearest college. This year Blues can only raise even money for their chances of perpetuating their two-year hold on the Tait Mackenzie Trophy.

Blues' biggest loss is Bill Crothers. In his four years, the Pharmacy flash won 12 Intercollegiate Championships. And in the double-point mile relay the world's best half-mile could always be counted on to bring the baton home in front.

Other key competitors departed through graduation are perennial high-jump winner Graig Cook and sprinter Al Brereton.

Several Varsity teams have severely hurt this fall by ineligibilities and the track squad is no exception. One hundred-yard champ Gerry Brown, long and triple-jump pointgetter Jerri Sutt, discus champ Jorma Salovaara, and javelin specialist Bill Heikkila all failed academically.

On the credit side of the ledger returning Rod Chintu and Bruce Kidd should win four events between them, and combine with Doug MacDougall and newcomer Bob Reid

U of T has spent 70 dollars for a fibre-glass pole. Next time vaulter Jerry Marsden should clear the crossbar. —vsp Turk for a mile relay win. Reid should be good for a 440-yard hurdles win, and defending champ Dave Cook looks good to repeat over the 120-yard barriers.

Other points are more doubtful. A stronger Peter Auksi could win the discus title and freshman Dave Whitson, with veteran Nelles Van Loon, could add depth to the distance events.

The Intercollegiate office has purchased a fibre-glass pole for Jerry Marsden in hopes he can transform last year's silver medal to gold.

Co-Coach Hal Brown in assessing this year's possibilities said the freshman turnout will be the decisive factor in the championship push.

"I hope the rookies won't get discouraged before even showing up at the track," Brown said. "We have a place for every athlete who comes out and works."

The Championship Meet will be held at Varsity stadium October 19th.

By COLLEEN KELLY

The most powerful Intercollegiate entry in Varsity's stable, the Rugger Blues, justified their glowing press clippings last night with a 18-0 whitewash of a select Toronto fifteen.

All three Varsity tries were tallied in the same efficient manner. The forwards and backs formed a flying wedge deep in their opponents territory and behind this bulldoze attack Larry Johnson, Bill Nelems and Rod Sanders raced to score.

Paul Wilson converted all three tries. The "Golden Toe" kept in practice by adding an insurance penalty goal.

Despite the onslaught, the score could have been much higher if Blues had passed more. Only with the return of injured Doug Bosomworth alongside Bob Dodds, will Varsity boast the best pair of wing forwards in the Intercollegiate League.

Solid performances in the pack came from hooker Bill Stow and from second-row backs Jim Humphries and Griffith Hughes.

IN THE SCRUM: On the team trampled by Blues were ex-Varsity star Bob Turner and Varsity coach Dick Gator . . . Tomorrow, Blues host arch-rivals Michigan on the back campus at 3:30. The Wolverine fifteen is usually stocked with beefy football cuts and last year handed Varsity its only defeat of the season . . . New players to watch tomorrow are former Queen's captain John McNeil, Paul Gray, and Griffith Hughes.

Hugh Parker ousts underdog Werner Mees to reach tennis finals

sity tennis championships last night by defeating unseeded Werner Mees 6-0, 6-1.

Monday, the other semi-final will see second seed Doug Coultis face third seed Pete Burwash. The final is also scheduled for Monday.

Both Parker and Coultis were members of last year's Intercollegiate team. Burwash, a freshman from Montreal, is rated one of Quebec's best junior netters.

Parker gained the semi-finals by eliminating Per Fursti in the quarter-final round 6-2, 6-3. Mees became the only unseeded player to get past the quarter-finals by ousting Paul Shepherd 6-2, 1-6, 6-2.

In the other quarter-final rounds, Burwash downed Mark Armstrong 6-2, 6-1, and Coultis defeated John Jacobson 6-3, 6-3.

HOME SEASON OPENS TONIGHT AS BLUES PLAY HOST TO 'STANGS

By SHEL KRAKOFSKY
Associate Sports Editor

The lights of Varsity Stadium will provide the setting for Blues' first home game of the season. The exhibition game tonight is against the Mustangs of Western and will be the first night game at the Bloor Street Bowl since 1960.

OQAA games were played at night from 1958 to 1960 but have been abandoned because they did not lend themselves to the established college atmosphere. Coach Dalt White misses the night games and feels the contests are played much crisper when illuminated by night lights.

Jim Israel and Bryce Taylor, who will be sharing the quarterbacking duties tonight, say the lights don't affect them in the least. This duct does not confine its talents to throwing a football. Israel handles Blues' punting while Taylor kicks converts and field goals and plays defence.

Israel's younger brother, Bob, will probably be at the helm of Mustangs for part of the game.

Jim wished his brother the best of luck last night. "I hope he does real well but I also hope the better team wins and I think we have the better team," said Israel.

Both Israels worked out together this summer and Jim feels Bob has all the potential to become an excellent signal caller. Bob can also punt and may be used by coach John Metras in that role.

After seeing the movies of Blues' 28-0 win over University of Ottawa, White pointed out the score could have been much higher for his charges. He feels the team will get smoothed out shortly and blocking assignments will be carried out more effectively in the future.

Injuries continue to plague Blues. Latest and most serious injury is to linebacker Jim Lunnie, who will be out for the season. Lunnie sustained badly torn knee ligaments in practice Wednesday.

This will give rookie Bob Pampe, a 205 pounder from University of Toronto schools, a big chance at the linebacker position. He was an all-star in high school and is a top prospect.

QUICK KICKS: Dalt White will dress 38 players tonight... Add Bill Waters to your list of two-way ball players. He will be playing both full-back and linebacker... Jim and Bob Israel's parents will take in tonight's game. They are from Kitchener... Ron Near, a league all-star last year and Varsity's "most valuable player", has returned to his alma mater after graduating in mechanical engineering. He is coaching the Engineering football team...

I have lost complete faith in love and the institution of marriage. Varsity's pudgy but mobile sports editor has announced his engagement to Miss Bambi Katz of Toronto. —Mazel Tov.

END OF THE WEEK FISTAMINATIONS

A few new rules have been added this season to the intercollegiate football rule book. One rule states the ball is dead once the ball carrier falls to the ground, even if an opponent has not made contact. This has been instituted to prevent players from being injured while defenceless.

The other rules make deliberate head tackling in the open field illegal and allow ineligible pass receivers to proceed down field for blocking purposes after the pass has been thrown.

An additional rule seems to be causing some difference of opinion. Although not included in the Canadian Intercollegiate Rule Book, it was suggested at an Ontario-Quebec Athletic Association meeting that the clock be stopped in the last five minutes of a game after every play. This would supposedly give a losing team a last-ditch chance to recover and make for a more exciting finish.

University of Western Ontario's head football coach, athletic director and most celebrated citizen — John P. Metras — says this rule was not accepted but only suggested. Metras relates the rule was tried in Mustangs' exhibition game with London Lords but proved unsuccessful.

It took nearly 17 minutes to play the last five minutes of the game and this sequence included 21 plays. Metras feels the suggestion should be dropped.

JOHN METRAS

Varsity's head coach and the world's youngest-looking football tutor — A. Dalton White — claims the rule has been accepted, although he doesn't agree with it.

Someone better get things straight. Western is here tonight and the schedule gets under way next Saturday...

Accepted opinion has it that Mustangs' star halfback of last season, Brian Conacher, failed miserably in his exams. Metras says this is "nonsense," that Conacher recorded all Bs and Cs. Conacher is now with Father David Bauer's Olympic Hockey team at UBC...

When asked to comment on his team's weaknesses and strengths, Metras had this prize quote: "The coach is weak and the hearts of the students are strong." ... We'll see how strong the hearts of the Varsity students are tonight by the attendance at the football game...

AM I MY BROTHER'S KEEPER?

Tonight's game will be something of a family affair. John Metras coaches Mustangs while John Jr. plays centre. Jim Israel quarterback Blues while his counterpart for Western is brother Bob. And Noel and Terry Bates put the brother act into action along the Varsity wingline...

Most of the railbirds' talk coming out of the Varsity-at-Ottawa game last Friday concerns the excellent play of Harold Hall, who has been moved from quarterback to halfback for Blues...

Five Canadian intercollegiate football players caught on with pro clubs this season. John Wydryny from Western is with Toronto Argos, Peter Quinn from Queen's is with Ottawa Rough Riders. Ian Monteith from McGill is with Winnipeg Blue Bombers, Peter Kempf of UBC is with B.C. Lions and Rick Black from Mount Allison is with Ottawa...

Varsity football coach and head scout John McManus says Queen's Golden Gaels have a prospect who could be another Jim Young. He's freshman Glen Robinson. Robinson was a standout in Queen's 69-23 devastation of Loyola last weekend... Unfortunately, McManus relates that Young looks as great as ever, even though he's still not in shape. Young reported to Gaels' camp only last week after he returned from a trip out west... McGill only defeated Loyola 9-6... It has been officially announced that Blues will defend their Atlantic Bowl title in Halifax Nov. 23 against the Atlantic Conference champions...

Both Varsity Rugger and Soccer Blues are well-stocked with veterans to defend their college titles. Soccer Blues unexpectedly lost captain Lou Mayhanovich when Mayhanovich was accepted as part of a student exchange with university of Moscow...

Shel (Splash) Krakofsky officially assumed the position of Associate Sports Editor of The Varsity last night when he was presented with a genuine notebook. Last year's Ass. Sports Editor, Bruce Kidd, will devote his time to running and eating bagels this season...

Students should note that Gate 9, Devonshire Place, is the new student entrance for Varsity football games...

KOLLINS KANDID PROGNOSTICATION: Blues start the home season off on the right foot tonight with a 23-10 victory over Mustangs... Season's record: none right, none wrong.

PIGSKIN PREVIEW

VARSITY BLUES

Gridders destined to move up ladder

By RICK KOLLINS
Varsity Sports Editor

Team Name: University of Toronto Varsity Blues.

Seating Capacity: 27,000.

1962 Record: 2 wins, 4 defeats.

1962 REVIEW

Superior conditioning gave Blues an edge over their opposition early in the season and they won two of their first three games. Most impressive was an 18-13 win over the eventual Yates Cup champion McGill Redmen in Montreal.

Injuries caught up to Blues in the last half of the season, however, and they lost three straight games. A leg injury to fullback Erkki Pukonen in the third game of the season sidelined Blues' top runner for the remainder of the schedule and this proved the greatest factor in Varsity's downfall.

Three Blues were selected to the Coaches' All-Star Team, defensive tackle Murray Rowan, linebacker Ranny Parker and end Ron Near. Near and Rowan have since graduated and Parker is playing with Varsity Intermediates due to academic ineligibility.

1963 OUTLOOK

Blues are in the enviable position of having more than 20 players on their roster with previous senior intercollegiate experience. Only five players graduated and four more are ineligible.

To compensate for the loss of veterans Varsity has added end Mike (Flash) Hollett, ineligible last season, and linebacker Ray German, a top performer at Ontario Agricultural College for three seasons.

Blues played with seven first-string rookies in 1962 and their exposure to intercollegiate competition move them into the "veteran" class for 1963. This is the largest single factor working in Varsity's favor.

The rookie group for '63 will be smaller than last season with less vacancies on the roster. But recruiting has been successful. The class of the newcomers are linemen Terry Bates, Jim Blakelock, Wayne Parsons, Ray Reynolds and Bob Pampe and backfielders Mike Gray, John Rumble and Tim Purves.

Also added to the roster are tackles John Fraser and Andy Grodzinski, who starred for Varsity Juniors in 1961.

Coach Dalt White has made some changes in his lineup, most notably on offense. Last season's regular quarterback, Harold Hall, has been moved to half back where he has been outstanding in pre-season activity. Tackle Bill (Moose) Jackson is now an offensive end and end Ross Dainty will likely be switched to the defence.

JIM ISRAEL

BRYCE TAYLOR

Jim Israel, hampered last season by a groin injury and never healthy enough to get a solid crack at the regular quarterback position, will be the signal-caller. Sophomore Bryce Taylor gives Blues the most depth of any team in the league at the pivot spot.

Taylor will likely play defence so that his ability and Israel's will not be wasted. But Taylor has the ability to star at quarterback if he is needed.

PREDICTION

Varsity's biggest problem in 1962 was a failure to score consistently. Although Pukonen will be sorely missed Blues have enough experience on the attack to make some noise.

The defence was strong last season but will have to find replacements for tackle Arnie Carefoote, end Hugh Cooke, linebacker Jim Rhodes, Parker and Rowan. If this can be done without sacrificing the offense Blues will be strong.

There is little hope of catching Queen's in the standings but Blues will finish second with a 3-3 record, ahead of McGill and Western. The best Blues can hope for is a big win over Gaels during the season to qualify for the Yates Cup playoff.

Pickets protest high book prices

A massive protest demonstration resulting from charges that the U of T Bookstore is "bilking students" took place front of the store at noon last Friday.

About 300 students, some carrying signs, gathered in response to charges reported in Friday's Varsity. But cynics termed it the "usual first-of-the-year rush."

The Engineering "Cannon Guard" issued an ultimatum that "if book prices are not lowered, we will lower the bookstore."

U of T Press Director Marsh Jeanneret issued a point-by-point denial of the charges in interviews with Varsity Editor Ken Drushka and Student Council President Doug Ward (III Emm).

"The bookstore receives no special discount from publishers," Mr. Jeanneret said. "In fact, over 90 per cent of our books are sold to us at 20 per cent off the suggested retail price, while most bookstores get 40 per cent off suggested list on most of their stock."

The bookstore is a completely independent operation which operates on a margin of about a half of one per cent. Any discount given to students would result in an operating loss, Mr. Jeanneret said.

Discounts are given to staff, he said, because any staff member can get a discount by going to the publisher. The bookstore only acts as a clearing house for staff members, he said.

The bookstore is also plagued by over and understocking, caused by shifting and uncertain enrolment and changes in required texts, he said.

Mr. Jeanneret also denied any pressures had been put on other bookstores to stop giving discounts. He urged students to buy where they could get a discount, but pointed out that most of their books could only be obtained at the U of T store.

Varsity Editor Ken Drushka last year tried to sell advertising in a student magazine to McAlinsh Bookstore, cited in Friday's Students' Administrative Council meeting as the store which had stopped giving discounts in response to pressures from the U of T store. He received the answer that the U of T Press would not allow McAlinsh to advertise in any university publication.

In a telephone conversation last Friday with Charles Ward, manager of McAlinsh, Drushka was told that the store no longer gives discounts. When asked whether the store would like to give a discount, the manager said: "no comment".

Mr. Ward also refused to comment on any other aspect of the controversy.

The press director also pointed out that the bookstore employs 45 students in part-time positions, in addition to a permanent staff which is putting in up to 16 hours a day in the present rush.

A co-operative store would have to contend with the problem of a $208,000 carry-over of stock during the summer, he said. In addition, he pointed out that other co-operative bookstores had been forced to branch out into higher-profit items to the detriment of their book business.

The U of T store does more than 90 per cent of its business in books, and has the largest selection of titles in Toronto, he said.

An open meeting of the Students' Administrative Council publications commission will be held tomorrow in the SAC building to discuss the textbook problem. Any student who wishes to make a submission to council should attend.

French demands may cripple NFCUS

The annual congress of the National Federation of Canadian University Students began on Sunday in Edmonton, Alberta.

While the main purpose of the seminar is to determine NFCUS policy for 1963-64, the demands of the French universities and their threats to withdraw from the federation will be under close examination.

As Students' Administrative Council President Doug Ward (III, Emm) said last Friday: "French students today seem to want to devote their energy to their own regional problems. They see nothing in NFCUS for themselves."

"The voting system is a chief problem, with Quebec members demanding equal voting privileges with English members, even though numerically English representation far outnumbers French."

This conference is of great concern to all Canadian students, as the loss of any one of the French universities, be it Montreal, Laval, or Sherbrooke, would without doubt weaken the structure of NFCUS. But if a solution to the French-English issue can be worked out the result will serve as an example to other Canadian organizations which are in danger of splitting over language differences.

About 125 delegates from all across Canada are meeting throughout the week to debate the problem.

Representing the University of Toronto are Ward, SAC Vice-President Mary Pat McMahon (III SMC), NFCUS Committee Chairman John Cosgrove (III APSC), SAC Administrator Robert Rawlings, Maria Greeney (III SMC), and Jack Tuttlebee (III SMC), head of the Ontario region of NFCUS.

Freshies squawk, Nude men squeal during shock Hart House tour

Twenty blushing freshies got a shockingly realistic tour of a men's locker room Saturday.

Hart House Undergraduate Secretary Alan Toff thought he had his freshmen tours well organized.

But St. Michael's College produced 50 extra freshies at the last minute.

Toff conscripted some older Hart House members, gave them printed itineraries and sent them out with the freshies.

The first tour leader decided he didn't need the printed instructions.

He led the girls into the main locker room.

About half a dozen bronzed and dripping young athletes — male of course — were caught in various stages of undress.

They squawked.

The freshies squealed.

Negro fined $100 for carrying gun

Cleve McDowell, Negro university student who was charged with carrying a concealed weapon after a student saw a 22-calibre pistol fall out of his pocket, was fined $100 Saturday. McDowell, expelled from the University of Mississippi the day of his arrest for carrying the gun, claimed he had reason to believe his life was in danger. He spoke of several "incidents on the road" — cars speeding up, passing him, then slowing down, which led to his buying the weapon. At the trial McDowell based his defence on a section of state law that allows a person "in fear of his life" to carry a firearm for self-protection. He carried the gun, McDowell testified, "temporarily, until I could contact the proper officials to get some kind of protection."

County lawyer William Lamb held that the defence presented was irrelevant.

Notice of appeal was filed to the state circuit court, as well as to the Board of Trustees of Institutions of Higher Learning, concerning McDowell's expulsion from Ole Miss.

No booze at Blues game

The Varsity football season got off to a record dry start Friday night.

More than a dozen Metropolitan Toronto police officers, four of them women, caught eight persons carrying liquor into Varsity Stadium.

It was not immediately known whether the eight were students.

Police last night declined to reveal the names of those arrested. Officials also declined to say whether charges had been laid.

The off-field activity was in marked contrast to that of last year.

The old jests of: "We know where you're going" were directed to policemen.

Sales of soft drinks (previously described by overzealous vendors as "mixers") was noticeably light in the stands.

No arrests were made in the stands. Few empty liquor and beer bottles were found after the game.

One jug of what a fan said was straight orange juice was confiscated by police.

The Students' Administrative Council asked for the extra police last year after charges of unruly behavior by fans were made.

At the first game patrolled then, four were arrested and 25 were briefly detained by officers.

NDP member stresses need for reform

Fred Young, New Democrat Member of the Legislature for Yorkview, stressed the need for reform and change in Canada at the first campus NDP meeting of the year.

Speaking to about 30 party members and visitors, Mr. Young called for equal educational opportunity and the best possible medical care for all without fear of its cost.

He went on to say that there must be a struggle to take the best advantage of modern science and technology. Attacking the "conservative" who holds on to the past, he said that man must be free to take advantage of today's advances. This freedom, he continued, would be obtained only if the elected legislators of the people take the initiative.

Asked about his concept of individual freedom for man, Mr. Young said there is no definite line which divides individual freedom from community responsibility.

He pointed out that freedom implies limitations, and again suggested that the legislators should make a decision concerning a person's individual freedom and community responsibility.

Other speakers on the agenda included Wilf Day, the president of the party's campus club. He explained the aims and purposes of the club and stressed the role of the NDP as one of effective opposition to the present status quo. Day also outlined the activities on the program for the coming year.

Co-ed named Miss United Appeal

An 18-year-old blonde U of T co-ed was crowned Miss United Appeal yesterday. Marion Wright (I Pharm) won over 11 other finalists after she entered to spite her boy friend, David Roffey (I Vic).

But she declined to say what the argument was about. "We've patched it up now," she explained.

Her prime interest (beside classes) is the Wolf Cub pack she has led for a year. "I like Wolf Cubs," she said. "They are so lively."

One of seven children herself, Marion plans to go into hospital pharmacy after graduation, then get married and raise a large family.

SMC wants college for all

Every qualified high school student should have a college education, an Elmsley Hall debate decided Sunday night at St. Michael's College.

Miss Diane Baressi and Miss Kathy O'Keefe represented the government in the debating "Senate" and Miss Karal Marling and Paul Connolly stood for the opposition.

After referring to the "hilarity" of previous Senate sessions, Miss Baressi said she hoped to defeat the opposition by defining "should have" as meaning "need" and with the emphasis on "needing" a college education.

She took the term "college" to include all institutions of learning beyond the high school level — such as trade schools.

What remained to be proved, then, was the existence of need, whether economic or philosophic.

Miss Marling refused to quibble over the terms of the resolution except to say that she understood by "qualified" that a student was acceptable to the admissions board of any college.

Under this definition, she said, many inadequate students were listed as "qualified" because of friends or relatives in high places.

She added that there always are colleges such as "St. Francis of the Simpleminded" ready to accept those turned away elsewhere.

College should be, she said, a place for an elite of seekers after wisdom and truth, not after job security and a return to the rarefied air of Olympus.

Miss O'Keefe termed Miss Marling's argument a "thalidomide argument without a leg to stand on."

Society must satisfy the definite need for "white-collar workers," she said. Only a college can train a mind to be orderly, she insisted, and society must give an apt student a chance to seek "continuity of experience."

Self education is not sufficient, she said. Self education, outside a university community, leads only to "a disorderly approach to knowledge."

Connolly decried what he called the "philanthropy" of those who would allow everyone an education. The path into the house of intellect, he pointed out, should not be too smooth and greased or it might be indistinguishable from the path to Dante's Inferno.

The motion: "That every qualified high school graduate should have a college education" was passed by an overwhelming majority.

Varsity veterans demand new staff

The informal conglomeration of occasionally professional journalists which put out the Varsity need help.

A general appeal for staff went out last week and veteran staff members rubbed their hands in fiendish glee as the office filled to capacity.

But it turns out the staff file and the assignment list have insatiable appetites. So . . . after due consideration, The Varsity is staging another of its inimitable meetings for new staff members.

The dress is informal, because The Varsity office is generally a pretty informal place. The only thing the staff asks you to bring is an interest in what is going on around you and desire to report, photograph, criticize, prognosticate, communicate and evaluate the events.

Some of the staff members are addicted to the office in the basement of the Students' Council building. They spend 40 hours a week there. But they do not insist that everyone do this. One hour is a help.

On occasion staff members have been known to have a good time. They have even been observed rolling on the floor in uncontrollable mirth. At other times they are so busy they haven't even time to direct the traditional hourly course, in unison, at the SAC members nervously prowling around on the floor above.

Once in a while The Varsity forgets the limitations of a student newspaper and, armed with its editorial lance, charges the windmills. On rare occasions it turns out the Sancho Panzas are wrong, and good triumphs over evil.

If you have any desire to participate in any way in these often chaotic goings-on come to the office today at 4:10 p.m. If you can't make it at this time drop in any Sunday, Tuesday or Thursday night for a guided tour of the Varsity editorial offices.

Plaques stolen? Nobody noticed.

In a telephone call to the Varsity office, Jack MacLennan, Students' Administrative Council president of McMaster University, Friday claimed that McMaster freshmen had taken three plaques from the University of Toronto campus.

The three plaques in question came from Simcoe Hall, the engineering building and the forestry building.

It was claimed that a McMaster SAC member intercepted the 10 freshmen on their return to Hamilton. MacLennan said he had no previous knowledge of the raid and that the plaques would be returned Friday afternoon.

But no one on the U of T campus had any knowledge of the raid, and an investigation Sunday night found all plaques in their usual places.

clarification needed

In the wake of actions taken at the Students' Administrative Council meeting Thursday protesting prices, service and other aspects of the University of Toronto Bookstore operations have come demonstrations by students and explanations from the university administration.

The protests made by the students are to be commended, for they represent a decision to act rather than merely to complain. It is such action which is needed to rectify the situation.

Some, but unfortunately not all, of the administration's explanations are also to be commended. Marsh Jeanneret, director of the U of T Press, has said that because of the large number of titles and texts the store carries, and because of the slack summer period, students are unable to receive a discount.

This statement would possibly be acceptable if financial figures for the bookstore's operations were available. Mr. Jeanneret has expressed his willingness to disclose these figures; but Frank Stone, vice president of administration, has stated they are the private property of the Board of Governors and will not be released to students.

If the student body, which for years has been critical of the bookstore's service, is to be satisfied with Mr. Jeanneret's statement it is up to Mr. Stone to support the claims with facts and figures.

In addition Mr. Jeanneret dismissed as ridiculous the suggestion that the U of T Press has coerced other publishers and booksellers into discontinuing discounts to students.

We find this answer unacceptable because the facts indicate otherwise. One bookseller, who a year ago said the U of T Press would not let him advertise in student publications, now refuses to comment on the situation, although he will not deny the allegations. In addition this store has had to discontinue student discounts.

We do not blame this firm for remaining quiet for the U of T store is one of its most important customers and an outlet it could not afford to lose.

What we do find reprehensible is that the U of T Press should be involved in any way with such actions, particularly when they are to the detriment of students.

Mr. Jeanneret has asked for an intelligent and unbiased explanation of the bookstore's operations. To this we agree, but insist that the explanation be complete, including all the facts and figures.

the voters' choice

The re-election last week of Kelso Roberts, Progressive Candidate for St. Patrick is a graphic illustration of the disadvantages of the democratic system.

A riding which returned a politician who was censured by the Roach crime report the way Mr. Roberts was appears to have left the realm of rational choice and voted on the basis of habit.

Even more unfortunate was the fact that the logical choice of the voters, the University of Toronto law professor, Mark MacGuigan, had no alternative but to throw his lot in under the equally undesirable Liberal party leadership of John Wintermeyer.

Exchange

weekends:

meeting

of minds

By DONNA MASON

Varsity News Editor

Recently posters picturing an ostrich with its head in the sand appeared on the University of Toronto campus advertising the weekend exchanges with Harvard, North Carolina, and the University of Montreal.

What does an ostrich have to do with this program? He represents those students who have no interest in anything outside Toronto, those who believe that the weekend exchanges are merely Students' Administrative Council subsidized parties with no useful purpose.

Perhaps this has been, to some extent, true in the past.

But a new concept is planned for the three exchange weekends this year. With the present situation in French Canada, the Carabin exchange with Montreal has taken on new importance, and revamped application forms stress the necessity for reasonably fluent oral French and at least basic knowledge of current conditions in Quebec. Similarly, applicants for the Harvard and Tarheel exchanges will be expected to know enough about American affairs, both external and internal, to make discussions more mutually profitable.

Basically the three exchanges should provide an opportunity for U of T students to learn more about the ideas and interests of students from different backgrounds and cultures. This function is especially important with regard to students from Montreal.

As last year's Carabin co-chairman stated in a final report to the SAC: "The underlying purpose of Carabin is both serious and vital. Canada may remain like a patchwork quilt, but the pieces must be attached together."

This is particularly valid now as the separatist movement appears to be gaining new strength, on the student level as well as provincially.

Furthermore, the desire of some French speaking universities to create two autonomous groups within the National Federation of Canadian University Students should provide new interest in the interchange of French and English Canadian ideas through the medium of the Carabin exchange.

These weekends are not merely seminars provided for the convenience of U of T students who want to learn. Participants must be ready to give as well as take, and they should be able to impart something about what English Canada is and how it differs from the United States.

One of the most damaging factors in the Carabin weekend to date has been the almost complete use of English during discussions. This will no longer be the case.

As Carabin co-chairman Richard Pope has said: "Nous voulons choisir des candidates qui n'ont pas seulement une connaissance de la langue française, mais ceux qui ont aussi le courage et surtout le désir de la parler. Aussi nous voulons choisir des étudiants qui connaissent le Canada français, mais la connaissance profonde n'est pas obligatoire."

The underlying purpose of the Tarheel and Harvard exchanges is not basically different from that of the Montreal program. As the Tarheel exchange enters its fifth year, the wide differences between the U of T and the smaller university of North Carolina have become increasingly evident. As the latter is situated in a small college town, dependent to some extent on the university, it is the focus for much of the town's activity. The Tarheel exchange is also more interesting this year because of the recent integration struggle in the United States.

Similarly at Harvard the Ivy League traditions provide a great contrast to the more cosmopolitan atmosphere in Toronto. Although it may be felt that Toronto has a very American outlook, the Harvard environment is radically different. Though the basic contrasts provided by separatism in Montreal and desegregation in North Carolina are lacking, there is, at Harvard, a foundation for discussion of a wide range of topics.

Doug Ward, U of T SAC president believes the possibilities of the exchange program this year are thrilling, especially with regard to Montreal.

But he said: "In the past it hasn't come off well because the emphasis has been on the social aspect. The SAC can't afford to subsidize entertainment, but we need more than ever to confront Montreal students on an intellectual basis. To do this the exchange with Montreal must be more bilingual. It is time for a serious rethinking of the entire program."

This has, in fact, taken place and as Weekends Chairman Diana Bennett said: the purpose of the program as a whole must be to give all participants an opportunity to lose regional prejudices and find grounds for a broader understanding.

Pas de separatisme

a Maillardville

By RICHARD SIMEON

(Assistant City Editor / The Ubysey)

MAILLARDVILLE, B.C. (Special)—There are no separatists in Maillardville, British Columbia's tightly-knit French Canadian community.

But residents are struggling to keep their language and identity from being swamped by the sea of English Canadians who surround them. So far they seem to be winning. Parents in the community of 6,000 try to maintain the French language and way of life against the overwhelming influence of English radio, TV, movies, employers and playmates.

Most families still speak French at home, but outside children talk English almost exclusively.

'Vien-ici,' shouts a mother calling her child into the house. "Coming mom," the child answers.

But residents are the community and its language will survive. "After all, we've been here for 50 years already," says shirt-sleeved Jean-Baptiste Goulet, 58, manager of the local Caisse Populaire credit union.

Maillardville had its beginning in 1909 when the Fraser Mills Co. brought 110 French-Canadians from the east to work in the Fraser Mills sawmill. Another group followed in 1910, and over the years mostly from the Prairies, settled here.

Isolated at first, Maillardville now is surrounded by English communities. In the last few years new subdivisions have encroached even more on the small town.

Today, many of the men still work in the smoking sawmills along the Fraser River below Maillardville, but others have branched out other professions.

The town has spread out, and new houses are scattered among the older buildings. The steep streets are full of kids chattering in English while their mothers gather on the back porch to gossip in French.

Chief guardian of the language are the priests at two Roman Catholic churches, and nuns who run two convent schools.

About 900 children attend the schools where classes are given in English and French.

"It's very difficult for the children to keep up the language because they are drowned in English; we must get them interested in their culture," said one of the black-robed Ursuline nuns from Quebec, teaching in the new $200,000 Notre-Dame de Lourdes School.

Only French is spoken in Cubs, Scouts, Brownies and Guides connected with the church. "It helps carry what they learn in school to their social life," says Mrs. Paul Filiatrault, an American married to a French Canadian, who is bringing her children up bilingually.

The flourishing Caisse Populaire credit union, with 825 members and $663,895 in assets, other church groups, and a cultural society, the Cercle Canadien Francais, all help to tie the community together against English influences.

"Our survival is a matter of attitude. If we can make the survival of the language and culture important to the younger people, we might be able to keep French alive," said Goulet's son Laurent, 23, who recently graduated from the University of British Columbia.

"The schools and churches are too formalized and don't tell the kids why they should learn French.

"It all depends on the parents. If they continue to speak French in the home, then their children will keep it up," said Mrs. Filiatrault, as she told her children to go to bed — in French.

"It's losing ground. They learn French but talk English," said Leon LeClaire, 64, a retired millworker, in the rapid guttural French spoken in the town.

Although Maillardville residents are three generations removed from Quebec, most look to Quebec as their spiritual home.

"The poorly-educated people tend to forget Quebec, but the educated ones are proud of their heritage," said Laurent Goulet.

Several community leaders visit Quebec frequently and read newspapers such as Montreal's Le Devoir.

Most residents feel the revolution in Quebec will strengthen French Canadians all over Canada.

"I'm proud of the way Quebec is moving forward, and its rejuvenation will have a strong effect on French Canadians outside Quebec," said Laurent Goulet, who hopes to visit Quebec soon. They support a reorientation of Confederation, but reject separatism.

"The basis of our culture is in Quebec, and if you cut down the trunk the branches will die too," said Jean-Baptiste Goulet. Since the Liberal movement took over in Quebec, there have been more contacts between Maillardville residents and Quebec.

Students from Maillardville attend Quebec universities. In 1962, 26 attended a French Jesuit college in Edmonton. The main complaint voiced by residents is against paying taxes to support provincial schools. They support their own schools as well without any government grants.

"We're paying double. We should at least get a provincial grant," said Mrs. Filiatrault. It costs about $100 a year for parents to send a child to the Catholic school.

Eating places on campus

Caffeine and culture — the clues to successful college careers — are both available in coffee shops on campus.

Clutching packed lunches, students have taken to picnic meals on the grass. Sleet and snow of Toronto's winters will disillusion these outdoor types. But a substitute is available.

University College people congregate at the "Zoo", more correctly called the Junior Common Room. One veteran told us members of the other colleges are welcome there, either to observe the "animals" or eat.

UC Literary and Athletic Society propaganda provides the only decor. Names of the group executives since the year 2 BC are printed on the walls in gold ink.

The room is heated by gross chandeliers dangling precariously, blinding those unfortunates forced to take to the balcony for lack of space below.

Why do people flock to the JCR? A second year fellow admitted, "to eat and meet girls." A female friend remarked that after freshman evaluation season, the room is less crowded, and chances of getting a place to sit are good.

The girls at UC have eating accommodations in the basement of the school. One sophomore remarked that it was better to eat upstairs and get claustrophobia and indigestion than "eating in that dungeon downstairs."

Vampire-like people congregate in the Buttery, Trinity's coffee shop. A sign, "only members from Trinity College", discourages wanderers.

The Coop (Oasis) attracts St. Michael's students for a dozen coffee breaks a day. "Day hops" (Toronto students) eat packed lunches here or buy food at the counter. The "Greasy Spoon", or Jasper Park, is frequented by St. Mike's during the Coop's closing hours. Somehow the waitresses endure everything from games of euchre to sing songs . . . on and under tables.

The Benson Building (WAB) has a lunch room for the girls stuck in that area with no place to eat. A pastry vending machine provides the hearty Phys. Ed. girls with required calories.

The atmosphere? Loud. Barefoot babes in blue beanies bellow to friends from across the room, and guitar pluckers amuse themselves with folk music.

In the same area are a few restaurants usually packed at noon with arts students. One girl was asked if she would recommend the places to freshmen. "I guess so," she said. "I suffered through it, why shouldn't they?"

Large green garbage cans and three electric fans lend atmosphere to the Arbor Room. A mural of flappers, raccoon coated college men, basket ball players, and football men was described by an observer.

"I love them", she said "They're angular and hideous with knobby knees", and don't look like my friend Bubblegut here."

But the atmosphere here is comfortable and informal, and brightens up after 2 p.m. when the female students flood the place.

Sigmund Samuel Library has a smoking room for co-ed watchers. Tables and chairs are provided for students who want to eat packed lunches. A tea and coffee vending machine has been installed this year.

Where do the engineers eat? This remains a mystery. With no cafeteria delegated to the mob, professors find lunches being devoured during lectures.

On College Street, the Grad restaurant, and The Elm are crowded with pharmacists, with a few engineers.

The Royal Ontario Museum has a cafeteria which is used during lunch hours by students who attend lectures there. Frosh can take advantage of the situation and get a look at the dinosaur. Something to write home about . . .

Queen's Park Symphony

by Judy Oplinger

An elderly man with a violin has become a landmark as familiar to the frequenters of Queen's Park as the fountain, the squirrels and the midnight wanderers.

It is unlikely that anyone interested in hearing music would go to this park for it, but this man sees to it that there is always some in the air, even if it must come from his own work—calloused hands playing a battered fiddle.

Curious souls have often questioned him trying to find out why he picked this spot to play. These questions have usually resulted in a look of suspicion and an unfriendly rebuff.

It was just such a reply that convinced this reporter to abandon the effort and make a hasty exit, which as it turned out was also a clumsy one. It resulted in a trip over his briefcase, spilling his music over the grass.

In his urgency to recover the music, he commented that he had written much of it himself. With this opening, his love for music overcame his reticence and he talked freely about his music and himself.

When not playing the violin, he spends a great deal of time collecting bits of information on current events which he files in boxes labelled "death penalty," "fluoridation," "abortion racket" and the like. This along with his music, he said, keeps him "busy every minute," and, as he showed, surprisingly well informed.

But he has acquired a slight distaste for journalism, partly because a photographer from a Toronto daily once took a candid picture of him with his shoes off. He wears no socks.

Why does he play in the park? He is simply an old man who has some time on his hands, who plays the violin, and who has neighbors who do not share his enthusiasm for the instrument. In the park he sometimes meets other wandering minstrels in a similar position with whom he can practise.

If you happen to walk by him, don't ask any questions but ask him to play. He plays Home on the Range and it's great.

Wilson paces Ruggerites to 14-11 win

Bob Dodds, Varsity's bone crushing wing forward, has returned to U of T after a year's absence to take post-graduate work and play rugger.

By COLLEEN KELLY

In a hard but unspectacular game, Varsity Rugger Blues defeated University of Michigan Wolverines 14-11 on the back campus Saturday afternoon.

Last year, the Michigan team handed Varsity its only defeat of the season.

In Saturday's game, Blues forwards were superior in the tight-ball play and gave their backs the ball consistently. After some dangerous runs, Varsity's backs were stopped by very close marking.

U of T opened the scoring in the first half when Paul Wilson split the uprights with two penalty kicks. Wolverines then came back with some excellent loose play and scored two penalty kicks, a try and a conversion to take the lead at half-time, 11-6.

In the second half, Blues utilized the long kick by fly-half Rich Hayman to keep Michigan pinned in its own part of the field.

Larry Johnson scored a penalty try, and the conversion by Paul Wilson tied the game. The strong toe of Wilson proved to be the difference in the game as he booted his third penalty kick to give Varsity the game.

Blues newcomers Paul Bray and Mike Treadwell played well and veteran Bill Stow continued to out-hook his opposite number.

IN THE SCRUM:

U of T's line-out play should be strengthened by the return of Jim Humphries for next week's league opener at Queen's... The Intermediates will also play in Kingston next weekend...

Michigan's players were smaller than last year's team but this will probably change before the return game in Ann Arbor...

Positions are still open on Varsity's rugger teams and all newcomers are welcome. Practices are held on the back campus on weekdays at 5 p.m.

Soccer champs begin defence

By KATY O'SULLIVAN

DOM DENTE

Varsity soccerites begin their defense of the Intercollegiate Soccer Championship when they meet Ryerson Rams on the back campus tomorrow at 3 p.m.

Ryerson, fourth in last year's standings, split two games with Toronto in 1962, losing 4-2 and winning 1-0. Roman Slobodzin and John Szilagyi, who scored Ram's goals against Toronto last year will again be in Ryerson's lineup.

Toronto will be fielding a powerful team this year. Of the starting lineup against Rams, ten are returning from last year. The forward line should be particularly strong with Jeff Mahon at centre forward, Bobby Lewis and Nick Roussanoff at wing, and Keith Murphy at inside forward.

Also at inside forward will be last year's outstanding rookie, Dominic Dente. Playing this summer for Toronto first division Calabra, Dom is expected to be one of Toronto's most valuable players with his fine playmaking ability, his speed, and his accurate shooting.

Of the other teams in the league, last year's second-place team, MacMaster, lost its ace scorer, Gary Kugler, through graduation. Consequently the Mac offence should be considerably weakened.

Third place OAC should be the same as last year with the return of most players. In the eastern division, last year's Blackwood Trophy winner, McGill Redmen, will be considerably weaker this season with the loss of most of their players.

Taking this into consideration along with Varsity's strength, Toronto should win both the intercollegiate championship and the Blackwood Trophy.

Western Grid season gets into swing

The Western Canada Senior Intercollegiate Football League opened its regular schedule Saturday with the 1962 co-champions posting decisive victories. University of Alberta Golden Bears, who tied for first place last season with University of British Columbia Thunderbirds, defeated University of Manitoba Bisons 28—8 in Edmonton. Thunderbirds won 15—1 over University of Saskatchewan Huskies in Saskatoon. Fullback Dmetro Rosiewich sparked Alberta with two touchdowns on short plunges. Rennie Bradley counted the other Golden Bears major. Ron Marteniuk kicked a field goal and three converts and Alberta added two safety touches for the rest of its points.

Gary White accounted for seven Manitoba points with a touchdown and a single. At Saskatoon, UBC scored on two long runs. Jim Friend intercepted a Saskatchewan pass and raced 65 yards for one t.d. and Bob Sweet scampered 60 yards for the other. Bob McGavin kicked one convert and Barry Wickland booted two singles to complete the UBC scoring. A 40-yard single by Ted Patterson was the only score for Saskatchewan.

CUCND plans activities for coming year

The Combined Universities Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament met last Friday and decided to elect officers Oct. 3.

The outgoing executive, meeting in Peace House, decided four introductory meetings for new members will be held starting Oct. 8 and extending into November.

Tentative activities for the year include seminars, meetings and a folk music concert.

Speakers may appear at Soldiers' Tower from time to time in conjunction with the CUCND's projected film series.

President Barry O'Neill was asked how he thought the CUCND would succeed on campus this year following the government decision last year to acquire nuclear weapons.

He said he felt the organization now can broaden and that more "excitement" will be generated.

Western Head coach John Metras, discusses some strategy with rookie quarterback Bob Israel. The signal calling duet of Israel and Woody Deschamps completed 14 out of 31 passes.

PURVES MAY SOLVE THE WATTERS PROBLEM

Exhibition football games mean absolutely nothing once the regular schedule unfolds. And any observations one makes of an exhibition game usually hold just as little water once the combatants start banging heads for real.

But from my vantage point at the Varsity-Western football clash Friday night at the Stadium, there were a few inescapable impressions that could mean something.

—Blues' experienced offence should be able to move the football during the current season.

In the early stages of the game when Coach Dalt White employed his first-line charges, the Varsity front wall had little trouble moving the Mustang defence. The holes were there for the backfielders and quarterback Jim Israel was given plenty of protection when he elected to throw.

The Varsity attack was something less than outstanding after the first 20 minutes, but as one Varsity lineman noted after the game: "Once we got our blocking adjusted to meet the Western defence the reserves started coming into the game and they weren't familiar with the blocking patterns."

BILL WATTERS
Full-time linebacker?

Even so, Blues moved the ball steadily throughout, gaining 298 yards and 17 first downs.

—White has in the past toyed with the idea of converting fullback Bill Watters to a linebacking assignment on a permanent basis. Watters is perhaps the best corner backer on the team. But for the lack of an adequate replacement he has remained at the fullback spot.

Blues may have found the answer in Tim Purves, a strong, fast fullback from York Mills Collegiate. Purves sat out his rookie season last year with a leg injury and has not been overly impressive in pre-season training.

In Friday night's game, however, Purves showed great potential in rambling for 41 yards on only seven carries, about six yards per carry. Purves only saw limited action but showed enough to indicate he might be the answer to the Watters question.

† Big Bill, usually Blues' busiest backfielder only carried once from the fullback spot. On that try he dragged a host of tacklers for seven yards. At linebacker, where he saw most activity, Watters was solid.

In the opinion of his teammates, Purves, at 6' 1" and 200 pounds, has all the potential to be a great if he wants to be. Two years ago at York Mills he stole most of the headlines in Toronto high school football.

WESTERN HAS ITS USUAL TOP PROSPECTS

—White employed most of his backfielders at one time or another, and all looked promising. Harold Hall, the ex-quarterback, leaves nothing to be desired as a halfback, Mike Kelly is as good as ever, and flanker Dave Galloway, who grabbed six passes for 68 yards, has the finesse and hands to do the job.

Both quarterbacks, Israel and Bryce Taylor, have the talent to move an intercollegiate team. Israel completed six of 11 passes and Taylor seven of 13 as Blues used the air lanes to a considerable degree.

—The Western picture was as expected. Mustangs are thin at many positions but have excellent rookie prospects, as seems to be the case every year.

Both Bob Israel and Woody Deschamps appeared polished and confident at quarterback, although freshmen. Israel should be the regular q.b. with Deschamps a competent back-up man. Ted Miller, Mustangs third quarterback, was used on defence.

Western's prize backfielder is freshman Art Froese (pronounced Frees—with a long "s"). This 6' 1", 200-pound fullback carried Western's running load with 71 yards on 14 carries. His running-back partner is Dave Garland, a product of Western's Intermediate Colts.

End Pat McConnell, another freshman from Montreal, was Western's top pass receiver with five grabs for 72 yards and he also handled the punting. He's another fine prospect.

In summary, Blues were the better team although they only scored one touchdown. White said the game gave him a good indication of what has to be done before the regular season begins.

He hinted there's still a lot of work to cover. But the time is short. Blues play at Queen's Saturday when the games start to count.

Enough said.

BLUES WIND UP EXHIBITIONS WITH 13-7 WIN OVER 'STANGS

By BRUCE KIDD

Varsity defensive end Ross Dainty lunges in vain to knock down a pass thrown by Mustang quarterback Bob Israel. This was one of eight completions thrown by the Western rookie.

VARSITY-WESTERN SCORING & STATS

FIRST QUARTER

Varsity—Harold Hall went over for a touchdown from the one-yard line after Blues moved 40 yards in six plays. A 19-yard pass from Israel to Dave Galloway was the big play in the sequence. Bryce Taylor converted.

Varsity 7 Western 0

SECOND QUARTER

Varsity—Taylor kicked a field goal from the 25-yard line. Blues halted their march at Western's 44-yard line after a short punt by Mustangs Pat McConnell.

Varsity 10 Western 0

THIRD QUARTER

No scoring

FOURTH QUARTER

Varsity—Woody Deschamps made his debut for Western by completing six passes in a row, the final one a five-yarder to Bill Sasso for the touchdown. Three completions to McConnell and two penalties against Varsity, one for interference in the end zone, aided Western on its t.d. march. Weber converted.

Varsity 10 Western 7

Varsity—Taylor booted a 23-yard field goal in the last minute of the game. Passes from Taylor to Mike Hollett and Doug Phibbs set up the score.

—vsp, beatty

The 1963 edition of the Football Blues gave notice for a winning record by disciplining Western Mustangs 13-7 Friday night at Varsity Stadium.

Despite the hardly overwhelming score, there was little doubt after the first quarter that Blues would win. Thereafter the game developed into a coach's experiment with both coaches substituting players frequently.

The second time Blues had the ball, they marched to pay dirt in just six plays. Harold Hall made good gains along the ground behind the effective flip-flop setup of the experienced Varsity line, while Jim Israel threw two strikes to Dave Calloway.

Hall climaxed the 40-yard march by plunging over the goal line from the one. Bryce Taylor converted.

Galloway ran his same button-hook pattern 19 yards to the Mustang 35 yard-line the next time Blues had possession. Bill Watters bulldozed seven yards and Israel hit the elusive Galloway for another ten.

But this time the drive was stalled on the visitors' 13 yard-line Bryce Taylor booted a 25-yard field goal.

That was all the scoring for 35 minutes. From then on, Blues substituted freely.

Of the new faces introduced to Blues' backfield, Galloway and fullback Tim Purves made the best impressions. Purves carried the ball 41 yards in seven carries. Galloway caught six passes for 68 yards.

The Thames River Boys erased the shutout just seven minutes from the final gun. Woody Deschamps replaced Bob Israel at pivot and the rookie southpaw immediately took to the air. Dividing his targets between freshman Pat McConnell and ex-Colt Bill Sasso, Deschamps completed his first six throws. This aerial drive from mid-field almost petered out when Mustangs blew a third-down gamble on Blues' 38 yard-line. But a Varsity piling-on penalty gave the visitors a first down 15 yards closer.

Deschamps hit Sasso on the end-zone for the score and Jim Weber added the extra point.

Blues finished out the scoring with three minutes left on the clock. Taylor booted his second field-goal, a 23-yarder.

Mustangs' dependence on youth should give several promising rookies an opportunity to play regularly. Starting quarterback Bob Israel made a classy OQAA debut, as did fellow freshman fullback Art Froese.

Most conspicuous Blue was inside linebacker Ray German. German made kickoffs, snapped on third-down punt situations, and made key tackles all over the field.

Blues experimented with an eight-man defensive line which made them vulnerable to a pass attack. Despite the numerically strengthened charge, Blues couldn't find many holes in the veteran Western line, which gave both Mustangs young passers plenty of protection.

Footnotes: Western veteran centre John Metras Jr. played his usual strong game, but his third-down snaps left much to be desired. Once punter Pat McConnell was forced to run a grounded snap. He fortunately made 18 yards and a first down. But on another instance Blues took the ball at the Western 14-yard line . . . Art Froese led all rushers with 71 yards on 14 carries, Harold Hall had 41 yards for 12 tries and Tim Purves made 41 yards as well on only seven jaunts . . . McConnell was top receiver with five grabs for 72 yards. Dave Galloway gathered in six passes for 68 yards for Blues. Mike Hollett caught two passes for 38 yards . . . Bob Israel completed eight of 21 Woody Deschamps six of 10. Jim Israel was six for 11 and Bryce Taylor seven for 13 . . . Both punting averages were low, hindered by the strong wind. McConnell punted for a 31.2-yard average and Israel for 29.6. One of Israel's punts was blocked by Mustang linebacker George Chris.

Quebec students renew demand for NFCUS split

EDMONTON (CUP) — Three Quebec universities Tuesday renewed their demands for a split in the National Federation of Canadian University Students.

The universities of Montreal, Sherbrooke and Laval asked the 27th annual NFCUS congress here to set up two autonomous groups — one French and one English speaking.

They asked that the two equal groups be connected by a national superstructure to be set up after a special commission studies the "problem" of two Canadian cultures.

Similar demands were made a week ago by the three universities and the University of Montreal indicated it would secede from NFCUS if the demands were not met.

At that time Doug Ward, University of Toronto Students' Administrative Council president, said he would go to the NFCUS conference to try to work out a compromise solution.

But he added that the essential structure of an all-Canadian NFCUS is more important than the loss of one member — Montreal.

When the three universities restated their demands Tuesday, immediate speculation arose that NFCUS was in hot water.

Last week there had appeared to be incomplete agreement between the three Quebec universities.

But some observers were optimistic about Tuesday's demands because the Quebec groups made it clear there would still be a national body controlling all Canadian university student affairs.

The "split" would only be a regional one.

Expectations were that the predominantly English-speaking NFCUS would not approve the French resolution.

But it was hoped that a compromise plan suggested by McGill and the University of British Columbia might salvage the student organization.

It was not immediately clear what the McGill-UBC plan was. Delegates were meeting late Tuesday behind closed doors.

Bookstore repels invasion by 200 Skulemen

The embattled University of Toronto Bookstore repelled an invasion Monday by 200 demonstrating engineers.

Turned back at the door, the engineers formed two lines on either side of the door and sung the Skule song. Students inside were asked to leave before the store was "lowered."

The Engineering Cannon Guard then fired the Skule Cannon, loaded with confetti.

Monday night the residence council of Sir Daniel Wilson Residence passed a motion censuring the bookstore for "academic piracy," citing the "unjustifiable pricing policy" of the store.

The Council said "failure to launch a full-scale investigation at this time would be deplorable."

A meeting of the Students' Administrative Council publications commission Monday at noon took a quieter attitude towards the bookstore controversy.

A meeting was arranged between delegates of the commission and the director of the bookstore to discuss the problem, and representatives of the commission were selected to compare prices between the U of T store and other Toronto bookstore.

Further action was delayed until more information could be obtained.

MOM to picket Massey College

Massey College will be picketed Oct. 15 it was decided Monday at the first March on Massey committee meeting. The protest, started by women graduate students, is in opposition to the construction of more residential space for men, while women students still lack quarters, said Rosemary Speirs, MOM leader and Varsity Weekend Review editor.

"In particular we object to the fact that Massey College has no residential space for graduate women," Miss Speirs stated.

Miss Speirs stressed the protest is not a feminist movement, but is asking for additional graduate residential space for men.

The march will take place at noon. Miss Speirs said there will be a second organizational meeting Oct. 4 at 4:30 p.m. in the Weekend Review office. Cathy Vdovjak (SGS), in charge of placards, asked for volunteers for a poster painting session on the Saturday before the picketing.

Cheerleaders selected for '63 - '64 season

Beautiful chicks in short shorts frolicked in the sun. There were men trying out for the cheerleader spots this year too, but nobody noticed them much.

The gals (and guys) did cartwheels in Varsity Stadium Monday. Then they jumped on each others shoulders and all sorts of keen things. Finally eliminations left seven men and 15 girls.

So the judges started interviewing individuals.

"If this guy asked you out, would you go?" they asked one girl.

"Did you say you were a fresbie at Vic or Trinity?" Finally they selected:

Judy Christie, Head Cheerleader, (III Phys Ed); Peggy Dewhurst (I UC); Janice Burnstein (II UC); Judy McAdam (II Vic); Gail Oberschulte (II Vic); Barb Burgess (I Vic); Sue Firth (II Vic); Nancy Lash (II Trin); George Huouinen (SGS); Stew Aikman (OCE); Paul King (IV UC); Vance White (II Phys Ed); Tony Lewis (II Phys Ed); Bob Smagala (III Phys Ed).

U of T student wins architecture scholarship

By VOLKMAR RICHTER

Canada's first recipient of the British Rome Scholarship is a graduate of the University of Toronto School of Architecture.

Stephen Van Egmond Irwin who graduated with honors in 1961 won the award after a two-stage competition with architects and students from the entire Commonwealth.

In the first stage the heads of schools nominated students submitting a portfolio of their work at the same time. A maximum of 10 candidates were selected and given a design problem to work out.

The Scholarship gives students of exception promise the opportunity of spending one or two years in Rome studying the fine arts.

Mr. Irwin is no stranger to winning awards, having got six during his course and two more after graduation.

While at U of T he was an active participant in track and field.

He leaves for Italy in about two weeks.

What is a Christian

The Varsity Christian Fellowship Tuesday night wrestled with the basic problems of Christian students.

What is a Christian in fact? The panel discussion at the first VCF meeting of the year decided that a true Christian is one who is deeply aware of the personal relationship between man and God and who accepts Jesus Christ not merely as a concept but as a real person.

Panelists were: Judy Briggs (II Vic), Bill Fitch (IV Trin), Paul Pitts (IV Meds) and Rick Elphick (IV Vic). They said that Christianity influences their lives as students by giving them a key or an organizing principle for their lives and the feeling that they always have guidance.

They felt students tend to forget their religious background when they reach university because they fail to re-assess "Sunday school beliefs" in the face of new challenges.

Moderator was Dr. Richard Vozberg.

The VCF fall conference will be held Oct. 4-6 at Campus in the Woods, Fairview Island, in the Lake of Bays, Muskoka.

Our arithmetic scholars

EDMONTON (Special)—University student delegates bogged down on an arithmetic problem at the National Federation of Canadian University Students assembly here Tuesday.

The conference was asked to rule on a motion requiring a two-thirds majority.

The vote was 26-14.

The chairman ruled the motion passed.

Delegates objected. A two-thirds majority really ought to be 26.666666 to infinity.

So they voted again and the motion was carried by a larger margin.

Exchange "overflowing"

"We're overflowing with books," complained Michael Warren (SGS), manager of the non-profit SAC book exchange. "We have 500 volumes waiting for room on the shelves".

Sciences, French and English were in greatest demand. But good supplies still remained and new books were coming in every day.

The exchange has an especially large number of texts in biology and economics.

"We try to serve the student," said Warren. He accepts cheques and will reserve books. The store is never too crowded, he expained, but the exchange expects to break even before it closes in the third week of October. The operation is paid for by a 10-per cent commission on all books sold.

Located in the military building on St. George St. just south of Bloor, the exchange is open from 10 a.m. to 5.30 p.m.

Tory leaders to speak

The speakers for the Progressive Conservative annual conference at Caledon Hills Farm were announced yesterday by Dave Woodward, the president of the campus club.

They include John Diefenbaker, leader of the opposition in the federal Parliament; Senator Allister Grosart, former national director of the party; William Davis, Ontario education minister; Egan Chambers, the party's national president, and Dell O'Brien, former president of the Young PCs.

In preparation for this year's Model Parliament, Woodward expects five seminars to be held in order to form party policy. These seminars will be open to all party members. The topics for the seminars are foreign affairs, defence, economics and trade, education, and social and legal reform.

The question: "Should Canada enter the OAS?" will receive special treatment during the foreign affairs seminar.

an answer to act on

One of the most important reports concerning post-secondary education in Ontario was released Monday by the academic sub-committee of the Committee of Presidents of Provincially Assisted Universities and Colleges of Ontario. The report is also one of the most encouraging to appear on the subject.

The report among other things, urges the creation of new colleges of technology and applied arts to take some of the pressure of numbers off universities and to broaden the range of training open to students leaving high school.

The report also stresses the danger that can harm universities if they are forced to perform functions other than those for which they are best suited — the teaching of academic skills.

Last year at a University of Toronto seminar Dr. Stewart Reid, executive secretary of the Canadian Association of University Teachers, said there are no longer any institutes of higher learning in Canada. He said the rapid expansion of university enrolments and the attempt at providing one type of post-secondary education for all high school graduates have resulted in the development of institutes of "middle learning."

Robin Ross, U of T registrar, echoed Dr. Reid's beliefs at the same seminar. He said a mistake is made in defining post-secondary education as university education, when in reality the universities should only provide a small part of the facilities for higher learning. Mr. Ross also pointed out the need for more good technical institutes on the Ryerson model.

As the report points out, the new colleges would allow for a wider diversification of higher education. They would eliminate the present situation where a graduating high school student has only a choice of university or technical school education if he wishes to continue this education.

At the same time the colleges would, hopefully, eliminate the pressures now being felt by the universities, and, to a lesser degree, the technical institutes. The universities would not have to accommodate the large numbers of students who are enrolled for reasons other than purely academic; and the technical schools would not be pressured to provide an education different than that they are best equipped to handle.

The presidents of the 13 universities who signed the report have offered a partial solution to the multitude of problems now plaguing the academic communities.

They have presented their report to the Ontario government with whom the power to act lies. We hope the recently re-elected Robarts administration has the foresight to act quickly — without allowing political considerations to water down the report.

to judge a government

Despite vociferous criticisms from both within and without the province the British Columbia government of Premier W. A. C. Bennett was returned to its fifth term of office Monday. While we hold no brief for the Social Credit party, either provincially or federally, we do give credit to good government.

The support given the Bennett government is some indication of the esteem in which it is held by the people of British Columbia.

Although it is not impossible that the West Coast Secreds are completely duping the people, it seems only reasonable to assume the best judges of a government are those who are being judged.

An incredible number of reporters write rooms upon rooms of copy, while the masthead gave thanks. John Cook, Tim Plimpton, Marco Neri and Bruce Lewis represented the old guard, while new types Bob Sorgkollit, Volky Richter and Bob Oliver led the invasion of future journalists. Blessings upon Lyn Owen who typed and typed, and upon Donny Izanberg, Caroline Hulbut, Cindy Lovett and Susan Stumpf who wrote and wrote. Katy O'Sullivan, Rodney Sanders (sorry) and Bruce Kidd divided the Sports department with Gord Bellmore and Colleen Kelly, while Ian Gillen mixed unspeakable chemicals in the darkroom. And Bill Brooks, N. David, and Noel Bates kibitzed.

Let's set things straight

by John Iannuzzi

This article was written by John Iannuzzi, co-designer of The Varsity and a designer of Italian newspapers in Toronto for several years, who also studied special courses in design at the School of Graphic Arts in Montreal. (Ed.).

After much advance publicity and with a great deal of fanfare the Toronto Daily Star came out on Sept. 30 with what was called the Open-Up Look Star.

Prominently displayed on the top of the first page was an explanation of the paper's design.

The article pointed out that there is "more white space between the columns of type and around the headings."

It also claimed that "the Star becomes the first Toronto newspaper to break with the tradition of capitalizing most words in headings."

The page 1 article and all of page 5 goes on to describe, in glowing terms, the multitude of changes the Star made in order "set the page" in Canadian newspaper design.

I realize a commercial newspaper like the Star has to be cautious in presenting a design change to its readers. It must advertise in advance in order to prepare the readers for the new impression the design will create.

But these advance warnings should at least tell the truth. The Toronto Star was not the first, or only, Toronto newspaper to use more white space between the columns and around the headings.

As early as Feb. 3, 1962 the Corriere Illustrato, one of Toronto's leading Italian newspapers, used the wider space between columns of type.

This paper was also the first to put most words in headings in lower case.

The Varsity Weekend Review last year brought these design principles to a Toronto English language newspaper for the first time.

The Star made much of its use of more white space between the columns of type. As stated by the Star, additional white space is used "between columns of text to help rest the eye and prevent it from making the mistake of slipping over into a neighboring article."

With this much white space the lines between the columns could be eliminated altogether. In fact, the line is now a distraction.

Since 1961 the regular issue of The Varsity has not used the line.

Although The Varsity is a student newspaper with a limited circulation, the paper this year will have a definite influence on the designers of Canadian newspapers.

This student paper, which is not put out by regular, professional newspapermen, is one of the best examples of what modern newspaper design can and should be.

The Varsity, starting with the basic principles, has thrown out all the old and outmoded ideas of newspaper design and started a new trend for Canadian newspapers.

Writing on The Open-Up Look Star Desmond English, the paper's designer, said: "The Star is Canada's pace-setting newspaper in news coverage and editorial content, it must also set the pace in the way in which its contents are packaged."

If the Star and Mr. English wish to set the pace in Canadian newspaper design they will have to do a lot more than what they did in the issue of Sept. 30.

Although I do not question the reasons for the Star's design changes, there are additional reasons why they may have been instituted.

They may have been implemented to save time and money; and they may have been made merely to gain the edge on another Toronto daily newspaper which has announced extensive design changes that will take place next week.

Campus Co-op reaches for college status

By HOWARD ADELMAN

You're a freshman. Or perhaps you're a graduate student coming to Toronto for the first time. You have been accepted into residence and look forward to new companions and a fresh environment. The residence rules will either limit your freedom or direct it, depending, of course, on your personality. Your surroundings will either relax you or depress you, either inspire intellectual endeavor or tempt you into a continuous quest for a "good time."

If the residence you enter is the Campus Co-operative, familiarly known as the Co-op, you will not find simply a backdrop, but a dominant focus for your dreams and ambitions. No other residence is approached with such a broad spectrum of contradictory feelings.

Some young students are bewildered and overwhelmed by the mass of material they are sent upon their acceptance.

What do they know of financial statements and budgets, consumer price indexes, by-law amendments, mortgaging, debenture issues, expropriation, house purchases, and the myriad of policy changes? And what is that business about starting a credit society, amendments to the National Housing Act, a new building costing $300,000, and that most fantastic of all proposals, the idea of becoming a residential college owned and run by students?

If one student is bewildered, another is amazed for on studying the material, he discovers he is an owner of a corporation worth $400,000 operating 23 houses in the immediate vicinity of the university. Another is proud that his residence allows him to have all the milk and bread he wants each day — this includes an evening snack — and has reduced the cost by bulk purchasing and astute bargaining from 20 cents per day per student in 1957 to the present price of 13 cents when costs of milk and bread have risen everywhere else.

Letters to the Editors

HART HOUSE FEES

Sir:

This year I and all the other male graduate students of this university paid $20 as part of our fees for the use of Hart House. This is quite reasonable, I thought, since I often like to make use of their pool or athletic facilities. However I never use Hart House for anything else and you can imagine my anger when I found that unless I paid an additional $15 for the use of the athletic facilities I couldn't even get a lockerette there. Because of this I decided that the cost of two or three swims a month would be prohibitively expensive and decided to forego the athletic membership.

Now I find that unless I have that membership I can't buy student tickets to the Varsity football games even though the students of law and the Ontario College of Education can. So we have the ridiculous situation that a graduate student can't go to the games unless he pays $17.50 whereas OCE need only pay $2.50 for seasons tickets.

Something needs reforming somewhere. Why should it cost me $35 to go swimming in Hart House two days a month or use their basketball courts periodically? Why the discrimination against graduate students in favour of OCE? But more important, where amongst all the red tape and bureaucracy can anyone appeal?

E. Valeriot, SGS

Questions accuracy

Sir:

In referring to the Words and Music bookshop you said that the staff was not familiar with the titles in stock. Obviously your reporter did not come by when I was there.

Tom Wauh,
Bookbuyer and salesman,
Words and Music.

Co-op residents relax dreaming of their new furniture which is about to arrive.

(Continued from page 4) One student confessed that she felt very important. Everywhere else in this gigantic university she had been told to do this, go there, pay so much, and obey so much. At the Co-op she was consulted. Her opinions were needed. Her support was requested.

Some students were inspired by the Rochdale Principles of Co-operation they received while others entered the Co-op on guard against the possibility of brainwashing.

What is this academic bargain basement whose fees are $180 less for the year than the next lowest priced residence at the University of Toronto, while differing financially from those residences in carrying the inequitable burden of municipal taxes and covering capital costs out of current revenues? What is the Co-op?

The Co-op is a history of idealism and practicality. Inspired by the message of Dr. Toyohiko Kagawa at a conference in Indianapolis in 1936, four members of the Student Christian Movement at the U of T returned to Toronto to start what was then called the Student Co-operative Residence. Under the sponsorship of Victoria College, they occupied the attic and rear of the second floor of the building in which, 25 years later, New College was born. For the first year 14 students slept in one large attic room, using orange crates as combination desk-dressers. By 1939 they were ready to move into two rented houses and incorporate as an independent Campus Co-operative Residence. By 1944, there were five houses, and the first house, Kagawa House, was purchased, coincidentally enough, on the very site where New College is being erected today.

By 1958 the Co-op had gradually replaced all their rented houses with owned properties. Two dining halls were in operation which serviced 110 students. Five years later 220 students operate 23 houses, 16 of which are owned. It is the only residence with facilities for married couples. Residence rates which began at 25 percent less than the regular university residences ($6 weekly contrasted with $8) are now 33 percent less. (Present rates are $460 for the academic year.)

More important than the impressive record of growth and service is the prospect of the future. A new residence to house 90 students has been planned and only awaits two hurdles — an amendment to the National Housing Act to make government loans available to student co-ops on the same terms as presently available to universities, and the purchase of a new site, the old site having been expropriated by the university. But the biggest plan of all is the proposal presently being studied by the university and the government of Ontario to incorporate the Co-op as a residential college having a similar status to Massey College, but differing radically in its democratic structure and bootstrap history. The proposal is typical of the Co-op's ability to interweave idealism and practicality.

At present, municipal taxes cost each student $30 per year. As a recognized educational institution, the Co-ops would be relieved of this inequitable burden which no other college student in residence bears. At the same time, the Co-op plans to use the financial savings to construct a library, institute a lecture series, and offer scholarships to ensure an academic atmosphere which will be the envy of other residences. The long-range goal is the vision of an Institute of Co-operative Studies which would make the Co-op an academic as well as an economic credit to the U of T.

But plans are useless without people, and the most important part of the co-op is the members. Without their effort and time, the Co-op could not operate on its very tight economy. Without their imagination, ideas, and initiative no dream could be envisaged discounting the difficulty of turning it into a reality. Without their minds and bodies, the Co-op could neither be serviced, nor serve in return. The members hail from 20 different nations, male and female, single and married. They are an excellent sample of the wide range of courses offered at the U of T both on the undergraduate and graduate levels. The Co-op is a record of savings and service, and a promise of future challenges. It is an inspiration and dream concerned with the most practical of practicalities, eating and sleeping. In no other Canadian corporation approaching a half million dollars in assets, could you come from the Bahamas or Lady-smith, B.C. Napanee or Nigeria and within one year become a director of that corporation and even president.

THE ROCHDALE PRINCIPLES

The following are the Rochdale Principles on which the Campus Co-Operative Movement is based:

- Have open membership
- Be democratic — one member, one vote
- Pay limited interest on capital
- Sell for cash at market prices
- Be neutral concerning race, religion, and politics
- Educate constantly
- Expand continuously

Parking hare

By LEN SHIFRIN

"No room," said the March Hare, "no room, no room." "But there's plenty of room," said L, pointing to the half-empty lot. "No room," repeated the March Hare stubbornly, "no room at all." "What nonsense," said I. There are fifteen empty spaces over there and another five near me."

"They're reserved for staff," said he, ignoring the rows of staff cars already occupying their marked-off section. "You'll have to move along now. There's just no room, you see."

I tried to argue, I tried to cajole, to reason and to plead. "No room, no room," insisted he.

So I shot him.

Dynasty dies with Skypeck era

RICK KOLLINS

Varsity Sports Editor

Team Name: McGill University Redmen.

Colors: Red And White.

Head Coach: Bill Bewley.

Assistant Coaches: Ron Murphy, Tom Moran, Dave Copp.

Home Field: Percival Molson Memorial Stadium, Montreal, Que.

Seating Capacity: 26,215

1962 Record: 5 wins, 2 defeats

1962 REVIEW

Redmen had one of the most spectacular seasons in Senior Intercollegiate Football League history in winning their second championship in three years. After losing their first two league games, they bounced back to take five in a row, including a sensational 15-13 victory over Queen's in the Yates Cup playoff.

Redmen's measure of success was their uncanny ability to defeat Queen's, regarded as the best in the league. After 38-24 and 14-10 wins over Golden Gaels during the regular season, Redmen won the Yates Cup on a 15-13 comeback victory in the playoff.

The championship victory will be remembered as one of the greatest comebacks in the history of Canadian intercollegiate football and a personal triumph for McGill All-Star quarterback Tom Skypeck. Skypeck tossed five completed passes in a row in the game's dying seconds to account for the title win.

McGill's powerhouse placed nine players on the Coaches' All-Star Team—halfbacks Willie Lambert and Eric Walter, the latter the league's scoring champion; Skypeck; tackles Dick Feidler and Andy Connor; end Don Taylor; defensive ends Russ Zelko and Al McKenzie; and linebacker Tony Blair. Lambert, a perennial all-star, and Feidler, the league's best lineman, were selected both on offence and defence.

Of the all-stars, only McKenzie, Feidler, Lambert and Taylor are back with Redmen. Walter was an academic casualty, Zelko returned to Cornell Meds School, and the rest graduated.

1963 OUTLOOK

The Skypeck era is over.

The Fabulous Turkey, one of the most talented and celebrated players in the history of Canadian college sport, is no longer with McGill and with this symbol of McGill's famous "American Airlift" goes the McGill dynasty.

Some 20 players from last season's champions have departed, 14 of them first-stringers. The entire backfield, excluding Lambert, is no more. Skypeck, Walter, George Telesh and fullback Ian Monteith, will have to be replaced. Telesh has returned to Cornell and

McGILL REDMEN

Monteith is with Winnipeg Blue Bombers. Also gone are halfback Whitey Reimer, linemen Dave Morton and John DiFederico and linebackers Sal Lovecchio and Steve Longstaff.

The returnees include fullback Leon Abbott, import tackle John Bowler, guard Brian Marshall, end Gord Potter, tackle Ray Lawson, and halfback Bruce Johansson, along with McKenzie, Feidler, Lambert and Taylor. But the McGill power has been depleted.

Redmen have come up with some excellent prospects but they can never hope to adequately replace those departed. Glen St. John, from Carleton, is the new quarterback. The fullback is Pete Howlett from Loyola. Along the line McGill has added tackle Irv Narvey; guard John Costaregini, an American from St. Lawrence College; centre Ed Reiger and end Larry Cullen.

IRV NARVEY

GLEN ST. JOHN

RAY LAWSON

DON TAYLOR

There are many holes in the McGill lineup and even at this late stage the Redmen coaching staff is not set on its starting squad. The coaches are worried and they have a right to be.

PREDICTION

With Skypeck and the bulk of McGill's Americans gone, Redmen are no longer a championship threat. Without their import aces in the hole they will have to depend largely on homebrew talent — as the other teams in the league have done for so many years. In Feidler, Lambert, McKenzie and Taylor, Redmen still have dangerous threats but they are too weak elsewhere. The most McGill can expect is two victories and a tie with Western for third place.

Baby Blues get set for opener

By GORD BELLMORE

Dave Creswell and John Casey, the brain-trust of the reincarnated Baby Blues Football team, face a tough job in the next few days. They must pare their inflated roster of 50-plus to a workable size and mould a starting unit before Saturday's game in London against Western Colts.

Surprisingly, the coaches aren't too worried about the problem.

"Sure we're a bit behind," Casey noted, "but the fellows are all in good shape. We'll make our cuts after our intra-squad game tonight, and really start working as a team after that."

"The toughest part is the cut-down," Casey added. "You just have to hope you don't make too many mistakes in the ones you drop."

Campus golfers decide four-man Varsity team

More than 30 University of Toronto golfers scoffed at classes yesterday in an attempt to gain a spot on the Varsity four-man intercollegiate team.

But the unfavoured golfers tried in vain, as Albie Garbe (II UC), Norm Mogil (I UC), Mike Whitney (I Law) and Richard Hamel (I Law) whipped around York Downs country club during the 36-hole qualifying round.

Failing to make the team in his first try last year, Garbe recorded rounds of 74-75-149 for low qualified. Ontario Wilington Cup team member and former intercollegiate champ Whitney carded a 77-74-151 for second spot, while 1962 Canadian Junior champion Mogil scored 77-75-152. Hamel recovered from an 80 first round, coming home with a 76 for a 156

The confidence the coaches have shown, despite their lack of time, stems from the fact they have a core of experienced gridders. Such players as fullback Ron Peroff, whom they hope will regain his fine form of two year ago, Jim Rhodes, Ranny Parker and Arnie Carefoote are the corner stones.

Particularly pleasing have been the showings of the many fine rookies in camp. Rookie backs Dick Krol (Vic) and quarterback Craig Williamson (Vic) as well as freshmen Bob Hyland (UCC), Brin McKee (Humberside) and Terry McTaggart should combine with veterans Peroff and Ben Hutzler to give the Rinkies an excellent set of ballcarriers.

The line, while about average in size, also looks like it will develop into a fine unit. End Al Giachino (Vic), who just missed making Blues last season, tackle Jim Fowell, just down from Blues, rookie centre Bruce Boyd (Richview), and veteran Rhodes, who is slated for a guard spot, seem to have nailed down spots on the offensive line.

On defence, Parker, Carefoote, and newcomers Terry Bates (UTS), Dan Moorehouse (Riverdale) Steve Cartan (Malvern) and Bill Kyle all appear to have earned positions.

total and the last spot. Mike Shea (I SMC) and Bob Dool (II Vic) both picked up 157's to nail down alternate places on the team that has copped university honors in the last two years. Larry Johnson and Cam Watson, former U of T team members, soared out of contention.

The golfers will converge on Windsor Friday for the 36-hole Intercollegiate event at Beach Grove Golf Course.

TENNIS

Freshman Pete Burwash overcame Doug Coulitis 7-5, 1-6, 6-3 Monday to move into the finals of the Interfaculty Tennis Championships. Coulitis was a member of last year's Intercollegiate team.

Burwash will face Hugh Parker for the championship this afternoon. Parker gained a final berth last Friday by downing Werner Mees.

MURPHY'S TWO GOALS NOT ENOUGH

Soccerites lose opener

By KATY O'SULLIVAN

In a hard fought contest, University of Toronto Soccer Blues dropped their opening league game to a determined Ryerson Rams 3-2, yesterday.

Keith Murphy scored both Blues' goals, one in the first ten minutes of play and the other halfway through the second period. Ray Matthews, Joe Salvatore, and Vince Carrubba each tallied one for Rams as they took advantage of scrambles in front of Varsity's net.

Blues' showed poor ball-handling as they constantly failed to break through Ryerson's defence. Murphy led the offence while Urs Maag sparked the halfback line as Varsity pushed on Rams' goal. But disorganized team play prevented Blues from winning.

For Rams, halfback Pat Mc-

Laughlin starred, repeatedly pushing the ball up the line to Ryerson's forwards.

The play was very uneven as both teams fought to control the ball. Greater cohesion within the team gave Ryerson the winning edge.

This was Ryerson's second game of the regular season and their first victory. They were defeated by Western Saturday 3-0.

Soccer Blues will meet OAVC this Saturday in Guelph.

lodel for a 50-yard touchdown run.

Blous don't intend to make any major changes in preparation for the game in Kingston. Friday night's game against Western left Varsity with no serious injuries except for the usual assortment of bumps and bruises.

Backfielder Ken Davison received an infected leg and has missed practices for the last couple of days but is expected to play Saturday. Besides Davison, the only real question mark is defensive halfback, Gerry Sternberg. Sternberg, who injured his ankle three weeks ago, took part in tackling drills for the first time yesterday and coach Dalt White was pleased with his progress.

QUICK KICKS: OQAA football games will not be televised this year, so if you want to see Saturday's game, see your local travel agent . . . Bill Waters missed last night's practice with a touch of the flu . . .

Queen's have won three exhibition games, swamping Loyola 69-23, Ottawa Intermediate Sooners 38-6, and RMC 21-0.

THE GULLIBILITY OF CANADIAN COLLEGE STUDENTS

It's a fallacy that American college sports, especially football, are more glamorous, more exciting, better run, more heavily patronized, and more popular than the Canadian brand.

Anybody who believes these contentions is a damn fool. If you believe them you're just falling into a pit created by public relations men, advertisers, newspaper men, radio and television personnel and the organizers who run American college sports.

When you watch an American College football game on television, you see as many as 100,000 spectators — at least the television commentator tells you there are 100,000 people in attendance.

Your eyes are glued to the screen when a student card-section in the grandstand forms large pictures and names to dazzle the audience.

When half time comes you don't leave your television set. That's when the most spectacular things begin to happen. A high school band numbering in the vicinity of 200 musicians plays march music with the quality of a professional orchestra. They're not satisfied with this alone. They have to march in all sorts of patterns and shapes to show you that they know what a duck, a horse or a cow look like.

It's all pretty glamorous, isn't it?

Don't believe your eyes. You, my gullible friend, are being deceived.

There are no more spectators at these games than the few thousand who attend our Varsity games. It's all done by trick camera work. Five cameras show the same small crowd simultaneously. On your television screen, the crowd seems like thousands. And, of course, the announcer gives the attendance as 102,469.

It's the same thing with the card section, the half-time band and the rest of the trimmings that seem to make American college sports so spectacular. Publicity men fool you. And you lap it up like a duck to water.

What am I getting at?

Just think what a team of these publicity hounds could do around here.

Here is a good example for a start. Below is a letter written to the University of Toronto Athletic Association by a youngster, probably about 12 years old, who lives in Bronx, New York.

To Whom This May Concern:

If possible could you please send me some information about Canadian College football.

Do you select All-Canadians? Do you have bowl games as we do? Name some of the great rival games among Canadian colleges — like in the States, Army-Navy, Harvard-Yale, etc.

I'd really appreciate this very big favor honestly.

From a Real Football Fan,
Howard Delfik
Bronx, 52, New York.

This is the meat for a hungry and ambitious publicity man — a chance to spread the picture of Canadian college football internationally.

His answer would be something like this:

Dear Howard:

Canadian college football is similar to your game but more exciting. Our players are more talented. As infants, once they show any football ability — like kicking their father in the shins for three points — they are given the best coaching in the country. By the time they reach college they're the best in the world.

We have All-Canadians, who are selected by a special committee of the federal government. These players receive a $10,000 grant, a new Cadillac and a home. They appear on national television and are held in great esteem by the nation.

Our bowl games are unbelievable. One of these, for example, the Atlantic Bowl, attracts half a million people to Halifax every year. The game is witnessed by more than 300,000 roaring fans and is played in an ultra-modern stadium with a glass roof in case of rain.

Marching bands from all over Canada flock to the bowl games and at half time the stands are moved by electricity out of the way for their performance.

There are many college rivalries, the greatest of which is between the Varsity Blues of Toronto and the University of Western Ontario Mustangs of London. This game usually has to be policed by 1,000 constables to prevent the players and spectators from engaging in a wild brawl. That's how fierce the rivalry is.

So you see, Howard, we are well ahead of the U.S. in college sports.

Yours truly,
Joe Fistaminator.

All-star Gael Jim Young may miss opener

By SHEL KRAKOFSKY
Associate Sports Editor

Queen's Golden Gaels may have to open the OQAA football season without the services of all-star fullback, Jim Young. The hard running Young pulled muscles in his leg last week in practice and hasn't dressed in full equipment since.

The loss of Young for the game against Toronto will be a big blow to Queen's. Last year in his rookie appearance, he scored 24 points and potted 39 out of a possible 45 votes to win the fullback berth on the Coaches' All-Star Team.

Gaels' head coach Frank Tindall gives Young only a 50-50 chance of playing in the league opener and will probably start Toronto-bred Pete Broadhurst at the fullback position.

Tindall is high on Broadhurst who hasn't had a chance to play in the past because of an assortment of injuries. He is a former "Athlete of the Year" at North Toronto Collegiate.

Queen's was in the same position of losing one of their stars before the league opener against Toronto just one year ago. Quarterback Cal Connor, an all-star in 1961, broke his left wrist while training with Montreal Alouettes and was only given an outside chance by Tindall to play against Varsity.

Connor came to Toronto with his wrist in a brace and led Queen's to a 32-13 win.

That game was also the baptism of Young into collegiate football. He averaged 8.8 yards in 12 carries and ex-

Ward key man in NFCUS conference

Maria Greeney (SMC) a member of the U of T NFCUS delegation, wrote this story for THE VARSITY.

By Maria Greeney

EDMONTON (Special) — Doug Ward, University of Toronto Students' Administrative Council president, was a key personality in the compromise reached between English and French speaking universities at the National Federation of Canadian University Students Congress. The character of the Congress has been a little misrepresented. The mood is one of intensity, creativity and concern. Before the solution was reached, it was realized that the revolution was a fact. The change was assured by a liberal reaction to the compromise proposals. Everyone was aware of the importance of the work at hand. No one equated preservation of the status quo and the prevention of a split.

Ward was a key force in assuring a guarantee of the position of English students within Quebec. The English and French students in Quebec will present a solid front to the Quebec provincial government in their negotiations with it.

NFCUS agrees to form two national groups

EDMONTON (CUP-Special)—The threatened split of the National Federation of Canadian University Students has been averted by basic changes in the organizational structure of NFCUS.

Nine resolutions, setting up a division of the lower structure of NFCUS to incorporate French and English caucuses, were passed unanimously by the 27th Congress here Wednesday.

The resolutions provide for "the establishment of two equal groups, with internal sovereignty on questions within their exclusive jurisdiction, within the new Canadian Union of Students."

Two vice-presidents will be elected, one by each of the caucuses. Their duties will include changing the structure of their respective cultural groups.

The positions of National Affairs vice-president and International Affairs vice-president have been abolished.

On the provincial level, equal votes will be given to the French and English groups in the NFCUS congress on such issues as establishing the original structure and constitution of the "Canadian Union of Students."

NFCUS president Dave Jenkins commented "No other organization in Canada recognizes the two cultural groups — the French and the English — as separate linguistic and cultural entities in the way NFCUS does."

"The recognition of these groups is effected by holding two caucuses, in two different rooms during some part of the annual congress" he continued.

The final hurdle in the solution of the problem, the fate of the English-speaking students in Quebec, has yet to be solved. But the two groups will co-operate in approaches to the Quebec Provincial Government.

Great Hall invaded by female horde

Sophisticated male diners at Varsity's most exclusive club, Hart House Great Hall, were shocked Thursday to see a covey of boldly giggling female trespassers. Amid howls of "Out, out" from irate members, it was learned that special permission had been obtained for the girl members of the Blue and White Band to dine in the Hall.

The band makes its debut tonight at the Freshmen Welcome in Varsity Arena at 8:30 p.m.

New ideas are being tried on the band by a professional advisor, Bob Cringhan, who graduated from University of Toronto in 1951. "Everything's new," he boasted.

Veteran handmaster Roy Patterson (II APSC) said tonight's performance should "get a few laughs" but that their big show was reserved for the Queen's game Saturday.

This year more than 30 of the 42 band members are freshmen.

Folkniks featured at freshie bash

The Towne Criers, a Canadian university student folk-singing quartet was obtained at the last minute to headline the student talent at tonight's Freshman Welcome in Varsity Arena.

Because of union regulations it is possible the acquisition of the group will eliminate the planned 50 cent admission charge for students other than freshmen. The quartet were offered free of charge to the Students' Administrative Council as part of an advertising campaign for the coming hootenany at Maple Leaf Gardens.

But union regulations do not allow the professional performers to appear for nothing at a show where admission is charged.

As a result the sponsors of the Gardens hootenany may pay the SAC the estimated admission revenue, making the Welcome a free affair.

The Towne Criers were a hit at this year's Mariposa Folk Festival and will appear at the Gardens show Oct. 18.

The Welcome, which starts at 8:30 p.m., will also feature dancing to the Frank Evans Orchestra. The Lady Godiva Memorial and Blue and White Bands will provide intermission entertainment.

Most campus organizations will have display booths advertising themselves and group members will be in attendance to answer questions and enroll new members.

Dr. Moffat St. Andrew Woodside, University of Toronto academic vice-president, Larry Ward (IV Vic) and Don Cunningham (IV Dents) will welcome the freshmen.

Philosopher explains art of Biblical interpretation

A noted French philosopher explained the problem of hermeneutics in this year's Laidlaw Lectures.

Professor Paul Ricoeur, from the Sorbonne, Paris, addressed about 100 people in Knox Chapel Wednesday night, opening the lecture series entitled "Crucial Points in the History of Biblical Interpretation."

In this lecture he traced the interpretation of the scriptures concentrating on allegory until the time of Origen, an Alexandrian philosopher of the early third century A.D.

Hermeneutics, the art of interpretation, passed through three critical stages in Biblical history before Origen, Prof. Ricoeur said.

To the early Greeks, interpreting the scriptures meant to convert mythology to an implicit philosophy.

Plato's doctrines explored the realm of the apparent in contrast to that of reality.

Thirdly, the Christians interpreted the prophecies of the Old Testament as promises fulfilled by the coming of Christ — the word was made flesh.

The lecture concluded with an elaboration of the problem of hermeneutics in the case of Origen, who interpreted every word of the scriptures, even apparent contradictions, as meaningful and intentional. He compared this to the Freudian concept of dreams. The series continued on Thursday when Prof. Ricoeur delivered lectures on the topics: "Interpretation from Augustine to the Theory of the Four Senses of Scripture" "Schleiermacher and Dilthey — a New Approach to Hermeneutics".

The concluding lectures will be given today.

The topic at 11 a.m. is: "The Modern Critique of Religion and the Problem of Interpretation," to be followed at 4 p.m. by "The Present State of the Problem of Interpretation."

Frosh are not the lowest form of humanity

"Frosh are the lowest form of humanity" was the subject for debate Wednesday night as the Oratorical Society of St. Michael's College held their first bi-weekly debate in the Loretto Lounge. Speaking for the government were Prime Minister Danny Knight and Chris St. Peter (both sophomores). Bob McLaughlin and Mad Dart (both frosh) opposed.

A large turnout of freshmen combined with the "Benedict Arnolds" of the sophomore class to defeat the resolution. Knight began by reading a parody on G. K. Chesterton's poem The Donkey.

Knight then defined the resolution in terms that no one including himself, he admitted, quite understood. He said: "Frosh, from the Latin froshum, froshara, meaning froth or scum, and form — pure actuality whose quidity is to actuate pure potentiality in order that the thatness becomes the wahtness."

Miss St. Peter followed this with several corruptions of literary works.

The freshmen were charged with submissiveness (paying $2.50 for a beanie), ingratitude (not one frosh thanked the sophs for the privilege of being initiated), and finally, stupidity (some frosh are still asking if the WAB is the school of Italian Studies.)

The opposition, with great support from the floor, countered this attack by stating that the frosh agreed to the childish amusement of the sophs in a spirit of deep charity in order to humor their "sadistic and depraved minds."

Moreover it was noted that a member of the sophomore class (the honorable prime minister himself) was dating a member of the freshman class.

At this point the government decided to make a last-ditch technical stand, and proceeded to confuse the issue with points of order, information and personal privilege. During the confusion, Paul Greco

(I SMC) attempted to prove that there is one form of humanity lower than the frosh — sophs!

He cited the instances during the mock trial where the sophs, carrying bizarre weapons, succumbed to their "vicious animal natures" in an outburst of "carnal, primitive behavior."

On rebuttal, the government stated that they had never claimed that sophs were humanity, thus leaving frosh as the lowest form.

Grads election

The Graduate Students' Union will hold a byelection Oct. 23 to fill the positions of president and treasurer.

Nominations will be received until noon, Oct. 11, by Alan Bailey, at 37 Kendal Ave., or at Graduate House, 16 Bancroft St.

The nominations must be signed by the nominee and no fewer than three members of the Graduate Students' Union.

Voting will be from 4-6 p.m., Oct. 23.

Issue 54 parking stickers

This week the Students' Administrative Council began issuing parking stickers to the 54 lucky commuting students who will have a fighting chance to park free at the university.

Although the secretary cited 23 actual parking spaces on the west side of the access road from Hoskin Ave. to Hart House, there were 34 cars in a diagonal strip by the back campus earlier this week.

The U of T guard on duty said: "We could have 38 cars, if they were parked half decently."

This year they're mostly new people."

Another guard will direct drivers into the spaces for several days to bring the compacts into a compact arrangement.

No cars have been turned away yet because of a crowded lot.

Some of the unsuccessful applicants from the original 125 had listed their commuting areas from as far away as Timmins to as near as St. George St. They will have to park for 50 cents in the blossoming west campus lots or on the side streets and play parking license roulette with the police for $2 a round.

Last spring the reserved SAC area on the east side of the access road was closed on requests from the fire department and delivery trucks, since the lane was usually blocked.

CUCND shows confusion

The Combined Universities Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament byelection meeting Thursday displayed marked confusion in the opinion of several observers. After a quorum call, debate started on the validity of the Roberts' Rules of Order and the necessity of a quorum.

A sign posted on the door of Rm. 104 of UC stating: "Please disregard all signs announcing the cancellation of the CUCND elections. They are here today," indicated the tone of the meeting.

The byelection was necessitated by the graduation of Ian Gentles, the president, and of a few other important members.

Amid the confusion, Gentles was able to conduct some business. Tentative nominations would be held at a policy meeting Oct. 8.

Tentative nominees are: President: Barry O'Neill and Al Levi; vice-president: Matt Cohen; secretary-treasurer: Lana Lockyer. The date of elections will be announced at the Oct. 8 meeting.

Ponder Canada's defence

"Canada's defence effort is becoming a public works project" was defeated 21 to 18 in the University College Parliament Oct. 2.

Observers termed this a disorganized debate in which one side talked about the defence effort, the other side talked about public works and nobody talked about the resolution.

The same night Friendly Relations with Overseas Students held a spirited discussion with representatives of the campus Liberal, Conservative and New Democratic parties.

Practical politics and political theory were both discussed.

This was the first of a series of discussions and debates that FROS is organizing.

Cancel Architecture course

A special course scheduled to start at University of Toronto this year has been postponed.

The course entitled "Architecture in the Extreme Environments" will study the problem of architecture in the Arctic. It will involve other departments also as it studies all phases of existence in the far North.

It is also planned to move further and study life in the other extreme, the equatorial regions.

Headed by John Andrews, a 29-year-old Australian architect, the multi-discipline Master's course now is scheduled to start next fall. Mr. Andrews, who was also a finalist in the Toronto City Hall contest, explained that the postponement was necessary to allow time for better preparation.

Once started, it will be the only course of its kind in the world.

Thomas Howarth is the director of the School of Architecture.

Tonight, tonight, won't be just any night. ...!!

an eye for an eye

The University of Toronto football Blues play their first scheduled away game Saturday in Kingston and a few hundred U of T students will be making the trip to support the team.

We suggest — nay, urge — Toronto students to get as drunk as possible, act in as belligerent a manner as they are able and create as much hard feelings as they can.

Last year Queen's students visiting U of T for a football game managed to wreck a good part of the annual Freshmen Welcome.

Since the U of T is Canada's largest university, it is only natural to assume that U of T students will not let the Queen's types retain the title of Intercollegiate Boor Champions.

And after all, the only Christian way to right one wrong is to commit another.

'cause he couldn't stay away

I understand that Dr. Robertson Davies, the master of Massey College, has informed his junior fellows — all graduate students — that he does not wish to hear dinner table discussions on "horses" and "women."

The Champus Cat hears that Dr. Davies stated he would post a topic of discussion at the dining room if he found the culinary conversations lacking in intellectual content.

It must be great to be a graduate student in Massey College and not have to think about what one will talk about.

My agents also tell me Dr. Davies has started posting a "thought for the week." This week's thought is: "Si les triangles avaient un Dieu il aurait trois cotes." Roughly translated this means: If triangles had a God he would have three sides.

I bet that if Massey College students had a single god he wouldn't object to discussions on horses and women.

EDITOR'S NOTE

The Champus Cat, born in 1922, is back. The Varsity's oldest living staff member has been reinstated after being forced to undergo a malicious firing by a group of spurious scoundrels who for a few years took over the paper.

The Cat, aged and in somewhat worse health because of the scandalous treatment he received, will be writing for The Varsity on an occasional basis for the rest of the year.

Because of his age The Cat is a little slow on legwork. He requests the aid of the whole student body in providing him with material for his column.

Although he plans to keep a close watch on the Massey College "thought for the week", The Cat is also anxious to find out about any and all of the ridiculous situations which exist on this campus.

Any messages for The Cat can be delivered to The Varsity Office.

Snap U of T Easy way to courses: BA

By JIM MACKENZIE

At the University of Texas there is a popular course called Pharmacy 340 (home emergency health problems), which students have perceptively dubbed "Band-Aids". This course gave high A's last year to student pharmacists who could answer such in-depth questions as: "Name 10 items you would be likely to find in a family medicine cabinet."

This is only one case of the intellectual poverty often cited in American schools — usually by self-satisfied Canadian students. Pharmacy 340 — and thousands of courses like it — are commonly known as "gut" courses. Not a few of them can be found at the University of Toronto. Guts fall mainly into five groups. But in any classification they all have the same function: easy marks and an assured pass.

The classic type cited in bull sessions is the most farcical. This includes old and dying guts and euphemized guts. Among them are the now-scraped water-skiing course at the University of Miami; other colleges' bait casting and bridge playing courses and "art education" where teachers are taught to paint like children, someone has observed.

Or there are the appreciation courses, exposed very graphically in the Feb. 22 issue of Time magazine. Some of the more appreciable of these include the University of Washington's opera appreciation and Yale's "Introduction to Iconography".

Washington poses one grueling final exam question, such as asking for a summary of one opera plot. Yale's gut has no term paper, just afternoon tours to Manhattan museums. Among the more lamentable bastardizations are the essentially good courses that have been mollified by equally good — but soft — professors. Chief among these is Crane Brinton's history courses for undergrads at Harvard. Brinton gives only one term paper — 30 pages. But he quickly adds that one page of aphorisms will suffice.

Brinton is on many prescribed reading lists in U of T history and humanities courses. This group also includes Yale's "TB" course, where the professor has never been known to give a grade less than B in Tennyson and Browning.

Or there is the archaeology course at the University of North Carolina where the professor failed fewer students than any other professor in the history of the school.

When a few students found it necessary to cheat on the final exam, the entire state was "shocked". Not because they did cheat, but because they should have to cheat.

Of the guts in traditionally gutless colleges, Princeton's Aerophysics 301 stands as an affront to any cretin taking an objective exam. The marking system gives three points for a correct choice, one for a wrong choice and two if the candidate circles the "don't know" box. This is a definitive gut — a course that can't be failed.

But, after all our chortling, we can sense that even non-flexible U of T has traces of this type of education.

Perhaps the area of strongest liberality is the social science bloc.

The last day of class for Pre-Dents last year was marked by gems of understatements. The professor of the Anthropology class "suggested" some questions that might be on the exam. This was followed-up by an outline of how he might answer them. Few students flunked their year because of Anthropology.

First year honor Sociology reached a similar climax in March when the professor gave typed questions for "review purposes". A number of them — no others — were on the exam. If the student had "reviewed" well, two good days of work all year in the course could have paid off. Or there are the college Religious Knowledge courses. Trinity College asked first-year candidates on last year's exam if they thought the course should be compulsory. The marks given the question would almost ensure a pass. The question was accepted by students as a sop to notorious class-cutters.

One RK lecturer at St. Michael's College openly told his class to tell their errant friends to come to the last class if they wanted to be able to pass the course. The class was another outline for "review purposes." Another Philosophy (M) lecturer is revered for his last-minute outlines which can make or break the hopes of the studying student. Last year students took carbons of the "lecture" and sent them to friends home studying.

The same professor also marked the exam.

But the Varsity situation is different from the American-type gut. There, an A is an A. An A in water-skiing is of equal help in getting one on the dean's list as is an A in Metaphysics. At U of T, a pass A is just a pass and nothing more. So the RK and other pass subjects are geared to give interest, not marks.

And U of T objective exams will always be demanding and, hence, feared. A final Zoology exam a few years ago had 300 objective questions and covered the course more efficiently than any essay exam could. Only one answer for each, too.

Pourquoi je suis separatiste anglais

A speech prepared for Douglas Fisher, MP for Port Arthur, to be delivered in Quebec.

by JIM LAXER
Varsity Features Editor

The logic is — the logic is after agonizing reappraisal, that I am opposed, yes me, opposed to the practice of responsible government.

Papineau and Levesque are essentially similar (both French I believe); but one is long dead and respectfully loved by a progressive mind like me. The other alive, a republican-gallican, is too threateningly nationaliste. With Lili St. Cyr and Marcel (not to mention the toll collectors on the Jacques Cartier Bridge), they're liable to try it again. Get Bond Head on the telephone quick, Quebec's trying to run its own show.

But never fear! The Chateau Clique, the Family Compact, and the Port Arthur

English-National-Guard — WE THREE — will reverse all that on a march to Quebec and rewrite the Corn Laws to boot. (One must ally with seeming reactionaries on our crusade to the promised land). Two nations warring within a single Ottawa will never do Lord Durham, Craig Dalhousie, Vicky and me.

NDP, QSP—Baldwin, LaFontaine. We'll never be able to coalesce the mess, that's sure. We cannot last both French and free—not now or ever. A house divided — ask old Abe—must one or t'other be.

To let the French do as they please, that may be democratic. But I for one will not be pleased to see them do as pleases them. Perhaps a bias here? But maverick me, a fly-wheel shooting intends to turn his thoughts alone on what he wishes.

At last I see I must deny the Canadian his self-determined course. But what does this mean for the Rights of Man and a myriad declarations of independence? Can I impede the mighty river as it sweeps at the feet of French Canada? I shall because I wish it. Benevolent, welfare-static me.

Silly separatist, have you never had a fiscal thought? You can't do really what you say, there'll be too many bills to pay. Convince me first you're worth a damn; appreciate me; love my innate superiority.

Who else could give you TCA, CNR, baby-bonus, Polymer? What have you mere six million got to offer in your measly triple-Texas sized Quebec?

Either accept benevolent me (a trifle despotic perhaps) or else I'll write you soon and tell you pourquoi je suis separatiste anglais.

William Burroughs: The Naked Lunch (Grove Press, McClelland and Stewart in Canada — $7.25 or Olympia Press, Paris, paperback — $3.60; The Soft Machine; and The Ticket That Exploded both Olympia Press — $3.60)

William Burroughs is the most degenerate pornographer in this century. He is a literary fraud.

William Burroughs is the greatest satirist since Jonathan Swift. He is a literary genius.

The author of The Naked Lunch, The Soft Machine and The Ticket That Exploded has been called a man of brilliant invention, and a purveyor of boring rubbish. He has been praised as the only living American author with anything worthwhile to say; and he has been sneered at as the "spearhead" of the beats.

Burroughs is a tall, frightfully thin and pale man with giant glasses. He tends to disappear into his fedora and raincoat. (His young boy-friends in Tangier call him El Hombre Invisible).

But behind his calm expression is a mind troubled by drugs and sexual exploitation; outraged at a universe he envisages as a macabre and grotesque war of obsessions.

In a mood that is a peculiar mixture of white rage and cruel coolness he spews on to his pages a fantastic, whirling mass of parodies, metamorphoses, distortions and anarchic comments. His whole conglomeration of fiendish characters clots at length into a mouldy haze shot with his favorite fluid image — green, jelly-like ectoplasm.

Burroughs first came to the world's attention in 1958 when the University of Chicago withheld its planned literary magazine and editor Irving Rosenthal resigned in protest. The Chicago Review was to have contained 10 episodes from The Naked Lunch. Burroughs was then known only as the author of an intriguing article on drugs in the British Journal of Addiction. Friends and literary acquaintances knew him for his exploits and for two insignificant autobiographical works. The Naked Lunch was a work in progress.

Rosenthal started a quarterly called Big Table. Its first issue (spring of 1959) contained all the suppressed material from the Chicago Review.

Immediately, Burroughs stepped into the lurid limelight as a man of staggering imagination and vicious, vomiting satire. The 10 episodes are among the best sections of the completed picaresque Naked Lunch, part one of a trilogy, and introduce horrifying characters such as Dr. Benway who performs complex heart surgery with a toilet plunger (Shouldn't it be sterilized, doctor? "Very likely, but there's no time") and Bradley the Buyer, best narcotics agent in the business, who becomes a "contact" addict and can only satisfy himself by enveloping an ordinary addict in ectoplasm, which he exudes, and assimilating him in some unspeakable manner.

Both what Burroughs said and how he said it appeared surrealistic, Dadaistic, even nihilistic at first. He was accused of getting high on dope and then chattering incoherently into a tape recorder.

Nobody knew for sure how he wrote until last year's Edinburgh Festival when he explained his fear that writing lags behind painting and music. He insisted writers must adopt techniques belonging to other art forms and then he explained his method. Delegates and visitors were baffled. Even The Times' report next day didn't cope well with what Burroughs said. So Burroughs tried again in Transatlantic Review:

"...I have used an extension of the cut up method (collage, used by painters) i

by Alan Walker

call the 'fold in method' — A page of text — my own or some one else's — is folded down the middle and placed on another page — The composite text is then read across half one text and half the other — The fold in method extends to writing the flash back used in films, enabling the writer to move backwards and forwards on his track — For example I take page one and fold it into page one hundred — I insert the resulting composite on page ten — When the reader reads page ten he is flashing forwards in time to page one hundred and back in time to page one — The deja vu phenomena can so be produced to order — (This method is of course used in music where we are continually moved backwards and forward on the time track by repetition and rearrangements of musical themes).

"In using the fold in method I edit delete and rearrange as in any other method of composition — I have frequently had the experience of writing some pages of straight narrative text which were then folded in with other pages and found that the fold ins were clearer and more comprehensible than the original texts. Perfectly clear narrative prose can be produced using the fold in method — Best results are usually obtained by placing pages dealing with similar subjects in juxtaposition."

It reminds one of Burroughs' character A. J. whose repartee often refers to future events. "He is a master of the delayed squelch."

Burroughs was born in 1914 in St. Louis to calculating machine parents with pots of money, but Burroughs soon decided he favored plain pot. "I will smoke opium when I grow up," he said at an early age, and he has carried out his threat with deckled edges. He has tried almost every known narcotic and hallucinogen and critics often get themselves hopelessly mixed up trying to decide whether Burroughs' output is automatic writing or not; and if it is, does it matter, as long as it is good; and if it is, can it be good at all, and so on.

He lived in Europe for a year and returned to the United States in 1936. He took a degree in English literature at Harvard. Since then he has been behind bars in three continents, has been in several hospitals, became addicted and unaddicted many times, accidentally shot his wife and flitted back and forth across the line between "normal relations" and homosexuality. From 1954 to 1958 he commuted between Paris and Tangier "steeping himself in vice" as one critic puts it, and then worked out a few of his ideas in his trilogy.

Writing in Critique, Ihab Hassan trifles with the possibility of Burroughs' insanity. "We may outlaw madness without comprehending it," he says, "but we must still ask: what monition is there in insanity, and how is the affront of the crime relevant. "Like the later Swift, like Bosch or Hieronymus Breughel, he pushes satire toward the threshold of pathology, claiming from self-hatred the hate humanity harbors. Personal outrage may be made into an indictment of history."

But besides his "hate me, it's good for you" technique, Burroughs also says "laugh with me at us," departing from his science fiction world and using situations more closely connected with modern man for his satire: "AMERICAN HOUSEWIFE (opening a box of Lux): 'Why don't it have an electric eye the box flip open when it see me and hand itself to the Automat Handy Man he should put it inna water already.... The Handy Man is outa control since Thursday, he been getting physical with me and I didn't put it in his combination at all.... And the Garbage Disposal Unit snapping at me, and the nasty old Mixmaster keep trying to get up under my dress...."

From the predicament, self-earned, of the American housewife, Burroughs turns to the southern United States and in one pungent and grimly humorous piece of dialogue sums up the current civil rights issue:

"So this white girl down from Texarkana screeches out: 'Roy, that ol' nigger is lookin' at me so nasty. Land sake I feel just dirty all over.'

"Now, Sweet Thing, don't you fret yourself. Me an' the boys will burn him."

It is more difficult to pluck examples from his stream-of-consciousness phantasmagoria of recurring distorted images of disgust. His vision is of a whizzing hell. He describes The Naked Lunch:

"This book spill off the page in all directions, kaleidoscope of vistas, medley of tunes and street noises, farts and riot yipes and the slamming steel shutters of commerce, screams of pain and pathos and screams plain pathetic, copulating cats and outraged squawk of the displaced bull head, prophetic mutterings of brujo in nutmeg trances, snapping necks and screaming mandrakes, sigh of orgasm, heroin silent as drawn in thirsty cells. Radio Cairo screaming like berserk tobacco auction, and flutes of Ramadan fanning the sick junky like a gentle lush worker in the grey subway dawn feeling with delicate fingers for the green folding crackle..."

Burroughs' view of sex is what gets him into trouble with censors. Sex for him is all animal and no romance. Hassan points out that in Burroughs' work, sex is usually violation. "It is sterile, inhuman, malevolent. It is a perversion of the life instinct, an organic process turned mechanical. Sadism, masochism and pederasty prevail; tenderness, love, and knowledge are absent. Sex is simply the obscene correlative of alienation."

In his imaginary universe, Burroughs say sex, which for him is synonymous with obscenity, is a weapon. In The Naked Lunch it is more of a personal weapon used in individual and solitary combat. In The Soft Machine the conflict extends to a war between the sexes, involving the Lesbian Colonels and the Mongolian Archers. The latter guard the Baby and Semen Market where the sexes gather to exchange the "basic commodity." By the appearance of The Ticket That Exploded, the whole idea of sexual conflict has taken on an intergalactic form in which the Venusian Flesh Addicts battle with the combined forces of the Rewrite Department, the Nova Police and Hassan i Sabbah.

Sex being a weapon, semen becomes a sort of combination ammunition and food supply. Prisoners are milked and then killed.

The erotic qualities of Burroughs' writing combine the fetishes of love and death brilliantly. Burroughs evidently believes there is only one worthwhile condition of existence and that is continuity of beings. Paradoxically, such continuity is only found in death (for death destroys discontinuous beings without harming the continuity of existence) or in pre-birth.

The conception of two beings as one is romantic and unrealistic. "Her" death is not "his" death no matter how much "they" might want it to be so. But in sexuality persons can achieve a certain degree of continuity — can share in eternity, Burroughs feels — particularly if they base their sexuality on a fascination with death.

So in what is the most immediately revolting passage in The Naked Lunch, the all-American boy Johnny and the deb queen Mary (he has red hair and freckles, she is slim and has long black hair) perform the most shocking quasi-cannibalistic sexual acts on one another, eventually ending in their deaths.

Burroughs' constantly recurring erotic theme involves the death of one partner at the point of the other's orgasm. In such an act the active and surviving partner can achieve as great a feeling of continuity as possible without dying himself. The homosexual's dream, for Burroughs, is to sodomize a hanged youth. With the crack of the youth's neck and resulting simultaneous orgasm the survivor at once shares in, and cheats, death.

It is both logical and moral to try to bring as much continuity as possible into a world based on discontinuity and peopled by discontinuous, bewildered, miserable agnostics who live alone and die alone. But in a practical sense, eroticism really is experiencing and cheating death up until the actual point of death and no further. That is, there must be no real, permanent injury done and there must be no actual death involved. Anything beyond this barrier is a perversion and Burroughs' exceeding of this limit makes him culpable and is the main excuse for banning his books. Just as it is the main excuse for banning de Sade.

It also explains why Burroughs can deal sympathetically with an essentially romantic concept (the concept of two beings as one — which we know in the West as the Tristan and Isolde myth, they being tormented because they keep counting up to two when they yearn to be able to count up only to one) and at the same time destroy that upon which ordinary romanticism is based — "religious" love.

Burroughs' other favorite theme is authority. Where his true love is escape through eroticism from discontinuity, his pet hate is authority in all forms. This is to be expected. Eroticism usually involves breaking taboos. The two primary taboos of Western society are sexuality and death. Standing in Burroughs' way always, then, are persons he usually symbolizes as politicians and policemen, all corrupt and driven by their own perverted erotic desires. They are usually sadists.

"To speak is to lie," Burroughs says bitterly at one point. The right person never gets arrested. Harmless creatures (he would of course include drug addicts here) must suffer for the crimes of the genuine professional sinners.

Aracknid, a worthless chauffeur barely able to drive, runs down a pregnant woman in Interzone.

"She miscarried a bloody, dead baby in the street, and Keif got out and sat on the curb stirring the blood with a stick while the police questioned Aracknid and finally arrested the woman for a violation of the Sanitary Code."

Authority figures, for Burroughs, can obtain sexual satisfaction only by persecuting the "innocent," never the guilty.

The Naked Lunch is the most straight-forward book of the trilogy. He uses flashback, repetition and collage but this is not annoying to the reader. In The Soft Machine, Burroughs is using his fold in technique almost constantly and it infuriates a reader easily. Unless you are prepared to read closely and let the book as a whole take possession of your mind, it won't make any sense. It's also dangerous to treat The Soft Machine and The Ticket That Exploded as bedtime reading. Not only will you have suicidal nightmares but you will get hopelessly lost in Burroughs' mazes if you try to read the works in little pieces.

The Naked Lunch seems more readily applicable to a sane person's experience. One can become involved with the characters. But in the last two books of the series, a reader tends to stand back curiously and marvel rather than to participate. The terror Burroughs wants to make us feel is blunted in The Soft Machine and The Ticket That Exploded by the wild prose method on the one hand, and the insistence on the use of science fiction techniques for realism on the other. It is no great loss to Canada that only The Naked Lunch is available here.

The Naked Lunch, actually, has had a peculiar career in Toronto. Its availability is a sometime thing. Early this summer the attorney-general's committee on obscene literature studied the book and declared it not obscene, by a narrow margin. But the committee stressed that their judgment was merely for the guidance of police and book-sellers — that if "somebody" decided to lay a charge, the committee's declaration would not be valid evidence that the book was safe to sell.

Some copies of the Grove Press edition were distributed by McClelland and Stewart

wkr writes

"They told me to warn you about this book," the customs inspector said when I appeared in the Long Room to claim an Olympia Press volume reviewed elsewhere in this newspaper.

"What do you mean?" I asked feebly, noticing that he was clutching a brown package marked "LIVRE" in green ink.

I was surprised they had bothered to send me a document telling me they had the book. Surely, I thought, any package marked "LIVRE" (in French yet) would be instantly destroyed by the customs department in a burst of prurient vigilance.

But my torment was to last longer.

The card had said the department was holding a package ambiguously described as being "from Great Britain or another country other than the United States." Well, it could have been the genuine HP sauce a bird was sending me for my birthday. But the French stamp had given that away. The agent continued:

"Well, just because we're releasing it to you doesn't necessarily mean that it doesn't come under the Criminal Code.

I tinkered with the idea of denying any knowledge of the book. Headlines sprang up before me:

JOURNALIST ARRESTED IN FILTHY LIVRE CASE; WARD TESTIMONY PEANUTS COMPARED TO WALKER EVIDENCE, SAYS JUDGE.

But then I heard the echo of what he had said — just because we're releasing it to you ... I pressed him.

"What's the matter with the book?"

"Well, it's all sorta sadistic, sorta awful, really dirty if you know what I mean."

I had a fair idea, and that sinking feeling returned. Suddenly this feeling was replaced by indignation:

"But if the book is pornographic," I said incredulously, "why are you going to give it to me?"

He looked slightly puzzled as if he himself did not understand completely the bureaucratic minds "upstairs." Then he blurted out:

"Well ... it's not on our list.

"I mean, well, you can have it but don't show it to anybody or sell it or reproduce any dirty parts out of it or you might get charged."

My indignation rose. I, a voting citizen of this country, surely have the right to be protected from filthy livres just as much as anybody else.

"I demand that you confiscate this disgusting livre at once!" I shrieked, my voice rising in an orgasmic crescendo of outraged prurience.

But he was ignoring me. He had opened the package. The book fell open at what proved later to be a particularly hot spot. He noticed my noticing.

"Heh heh, supervisors you know," he said. "They get to read all this sorta stuff and look at all the films that come in and everything."

"We down here, we guys never get to look at anything like this."

He thumbed pages excitedly. I stood before him for five minutes while he read.

I thought how William Burroughs and Henry Miller would love to meet this man, a perfect example of all they have decry in customs men and post office officials.

He read on. His face grew redder. His right hand dropped below the desk where I couldn't see it.

Time and The Canadian Press wait for no sub editor and I was overdue at the office.

"Well, I'd like to stay and let you finish it," I said slowly, "and I can see you're keen and all that, but I really do have to go back to work, so if the supervisor (I yelled that word and he jumped) says I can have the book I think I'd like to have it right now."

"Yeah, yeah, sure," he said and wiped his sweating forehead. Then he glanced hastily at a few more pages and wistfully handed me the book.

"Whew, boy a boy a boy, really somethin' hunh?" he said with a final chuckle of pure glee.

"Yeah man, and thank the boss for me, will you?"

Incest and all the rest

By David Sexter

Toys in the Attic is the latest addition to the plethora of dramas about degeneracy in the Deep South.

Julian Berniers (Dean Martin), a chronic failure, returns to New Orleans after his latest fiasco in Chicago. His recent bride Lily (Yvette Mimieux) dreads losing him since he frequently runs off to a mysterious older woman. After a week of squalor, Julian makes a hasty deal with a tycoon and returns $150,000 richer. He comes to see his aging spinster sisters, bearing expensive gifts. They were expecting him to return impoverished as usual, and are suspicious at his sudden wealth.

The younger sister Carrie (Geraldine Page) is enraged at Julian's success. He can not understand why, but his sister Anna (Wendy Hiller) can. For a long time she has been aware of Carrie's unnatural affection for her brother. Carrie can only maintain her grip on Julian when he is broke and broken. Now that he has made his fortune she feels her hold slipping. In the best southern tradition, Carrie's incestuous lust wreaks havoc on the rest of the characters. She plays on Lily's insecurity, inciting her to betray her husband. Bitterness and bloodshed follow. The movie is based on the Broadway hit by Lillian Hellman. Like most of her plays, it is set in her native New Orleans. Miss Hellman is second only to Tennessee Williams in her mass exposes of southern decadence.

The unexceptional story is raised out of the bayou by the superb acting of Geraldine Page as Julian's possessive sister. Miss Page is recognized as the most talented and versatile alum of the Act-

A volatile scene from TOYS IN THE ATTIC at the Odeon Carlton. Julian Berniers lashes out at his naive wife Lily who has unwittingly betrayed him. His sister Anna rushes to aid Lily, while Carrie sits stunned at the destruction she engineered. The movie, adapted from the stage hit by Lillian Hellman, is another saga about decay in the South.

Modern gods stumble stupify millions

By Joan Murray

By this definition, Cleopatra is a total failure. It cannot encompass us for it's boundaries are too small. What the film offers us is a world so trite, so mundane, so cute, and so lacking in any nobility of spirit that even we, who lack much cannot find a corner in it wherein we may fit. One feels that the film script was written by someone pressing his ear to the great sea where old movie scripts go to die. This great sea with its algae of hackneyed ideas, its fishes of deep and dead phrases, is a pathetic source. That is, the script writers of Cleopatra were not convinced enough in their own creation. They, too, could not fit into their created world.

Even the actors in the film cannot hide their incompetence, their own uninvolved with the world they are supposedly trying to create. We know the actors are only acting, but worse than this, they know it, and so they leave the movie in a condition little better than farcical.

But, as a farce, does the movie have value? We must answer yes, for Cleopatra offers us some surreptitious and unsuspected values.

The first unsuspected value comes from the complete unoriginality of the script and the incompetence of the acting. For, in reaction, we, the audience, actually feel more clearly what the "real" situation must have been like, far better than any world that art could offer us.

For, in reaction to the pathetic vision of the twisted and weak Mark Antony, we are made to realize the remarkable vitality of the man AS HE MUST HAVE BEEN. And because, Cleopatra is well constructed in curves, and leans forward too often, we realize how ugly she must have been. That is, everything in the film impresses us exactly in reverse from that which was intended. So that instead of the trivialities that the movie offers, we recognize the unswerving greatness of Caesar.

It is perhaps best to mention here that the movie offers us in undigested form an unbaked, unsound bit of homegrown philosophy. It suggests in every moment of its unending tale that history is static, lacking any development. Caesar is motivated by none else than carnal lust, a motive which one feels that the script writers felt would appeal to the much abused "man in the street."

That is, all things are the same and nothing changes. The import of this is obvious: if nothing changes, history is denied, for history is a record of change. And if history is denied, then we must deny the nobility of man, for where in himself can he find the source which would desire change where there is none possible? In the end, the proud course of time becomes just one long, unchanging worm.

But let us turn from this depressing point to a happier one for there is one area in which the movie is a complete success and works perversely to perfection. Caesar, Cleopatra, and Mark Antony were, as we know, literally, the gods of the ancient world.

Deified, they expressed the brilliance of the civilization which produced them.

Today, millions watch with stupefaction the contortions of Elizabeth Taylor in her love affair with the press. She is, in fact, an item of such importance that international news is placed far, far below her head. She is even more important than the death notices, more important even than the daily horoscope. She is a goddess, the greatest of the pantheon which Hollywood has to offer. With her help and good advertising, poor Richard Burton stands a fair chance of also becoming a god.

As a goddess and god of our world, do not these two point up, with all their trivialities and tritenesses, the confusion and endless muddle of the modern world. Is it not a shame that our modern gods and goddesses should be so empty of nobility? And is it not a further shame that they should so truly reflect our (yours and mine) secret desires and our hidden triteness? For if our world was filled with the honour of Rome, these would not be our gods... but they are, and we are stuck with them.

An early Bergman - Dreams

By Barbara Kirshenblatt

Dreams, made in 1954, is the second installment of the Bergman trilogy beginning with A Lesson in Love (1953) and ending with Smiles of a Summer Night (1955). In this film, Bergman concentrates upon the illusions of two women. Suzanne (Eva Dahlbeck) the mature woman, is involved in an unsatisfactory affair with Hendrik, an uninspired, married business man. The futility of their compromise with reality is brought into focus by Hendrik's reconciled wife, whose penetrating analysis demolishes their already tarnished dream.

Doris (Harriet Andersson) the overgrown adolescent, steps into a self-contained incident with the aging consul, Uncle Otto (Gunnar Bjornstrand). The whole thing has a dreamlike quality. Sugar daddy sweeps little girl up in whirlwind of champagne and roller coaster, jewels and whipped cream. Each individual is operating within his own illusion.

In neither case is the role fulfilled. The illusion is destroyed by Otto's daughter. In her bitterness, she confronts her father with the ugly reality of his whole situation. He is left naked in his pointless lust, and Doris is sent on her way, back into the arms of her infantile fiancé.

Structurally, the film is very well-knit. The entire action is confined to an intervening day in Gothenberg. The two contrasting situations are economically worked into a unified study of senile lust, youthful impetuosity, middle-aged listlessness and frenetic desperation.

The tone of the film is intensified by the careful use of detail. The opening credits are superimposed upon close-ups of equipment in the photography studio, which is the setting of the first scene. Through the meshes of the letters the audience sees a monumental pair of lips on photographic paper. This touch, plus the electric silence which fills the first minutes in the studio, effectively give the film a throbbing momentum.

One of the most sensitively handled moments in the entire film is the love scene between Suzanne and Hendrik. After a seven month separation, the two lovers meet with deep misgivings. With compelling truth, the actors convey the tight and strained closing of the gulf which separates them, physically and emotionally. Two fully clothed adults, in just a few frames, move from intensely controlled love-play to wild and soaring passion, revealing in a compressed instant the quality of their whole relationship.

After Hendrik leaves the hotel room, Suzanne is seen standing utterly alone, her back to the window. In the distance, TAVERN in neon lights is visible. This delicate touch captures much of the indefinable tone pervading their relationship.

Dreams is a skilful and perceptive film, worth seeing.

The ups and downs of a Paris whore

By Jim Thwaites

Irma La Douce is a naughty little comedy about a naive Parisian cop (Jack Lemmon) who falls in love with the "numero uno" prosty of the street, Irma (Shirley MacLaine). Officer Poitieu has been promoted from his former beat, a children's playground, to policing the area around the notorious Hotel Casanova, where the girls are lined up almost shoulder to shoulder. Innocent officer Poitieu is soon outraged by the number of couples marching in and out of the Hotel. So he phones the station and calls the paddy-wagon to stage a raid.

The customers and girls all race downstairs with a bare minimum on and Poitieu lines them up for questioning. While the girls are struggling to get their undies back on, Poitieu tries to look very matter - of - fact, L'incorruptible himself.

Soon, thoroughly disconcerted, he loads all the girls into the wagon and they give him a hot time. At the station, Poitieu is called and goes into his chief expecting some reward — after all he had halted a straightforward violation of Section 34. Then he finds that the chief is one of the men that he disturbed at the Hotel.

It takes a fight with the local chief mobster, "the ox," to put Poitieu on the good side of Irma. The hilarious mock battle ends with an invitation to Irma's flat and the fun begins all over again.

Lemmon's performance is wonderful — his facial expressions are as telling as those of Danny Kaye. Shirley portrays perfectly the dumb, gorgeous little prostitute, who really has a golden heart, but can never quite understand Poitieu's feelings. Jack becomes feverishly jealous, of course, and on this hinges the whole plot.

The leads are surrounded by some forgettably funny characters — like "the ox" (a rough and tumble clod and Irma's former man), "Moustache" (selon lui former professor of law, pediatrician, bank-robber, etc., turned bartender) and the police sergeant (so matter - of - fact he misses everything, and never quite figures out what is going on).

From the first bedroom scene to the wedding scene Irma La Douce is an excellent comedy, well worth seeing.

The Girl Hunters is not big game. In the latest Mike Hammer sideshow nobody is real except Hy Gardner. In fact, unless you are a sadist, most of the film's merit lies beneath the quartet of bikinis barely exhibited by Shirley Eaton.

Produced in black and white by Colorama Pictures, it is another tale of the never-ending struggle against the Red menace. Alcoholic rehabilitation develops into a struggle involving an international espionage ring (Butterfly Two). Mike Hammer (Mickey Spillane) is the link between a federal agent (Lloyd Nolan) and a murdered politician's wife (Shirley Eaton) known affectionately as the Dragon. Mike is lifted from the skids by news that his long-time friend and associate Velda is not only alive but in danger. Since Mike is barely alive himself, he seeks stimulation from federal agent Rickerby, whose murdered friend knew Velda, and from the Washington widow (Shirley Eaton), whose husband was killed years before by the same calibre bullet. From Rickerby, he gets a gun permit. When he isn't walking the streets of New York, he gets more from the senator's widow. Flitting in and out of the action are a half-dozen murders, barrels of stale dialogue, mediocre photography, and Hy Gardner. Mickey Spillane fails to elevate him from the mer (his creation). His closest brush with success comes when he pounds a spike through a killer's hand in religious fashion. Even this fails to elevate him from the inarticulate mumbling stub that he is. Shirley Eaton is young and conspicuous. Lloyd Nolan is grizzly and innocuous. Other people with problems also drift by.

Who made women of the world?

By Vicki Wang

Who ever said that women were the superior sex? Certainly not the people responsible for Women of the World. Actually Peter Ustinov, who gives the commentary to this sensational reportage, said hardly anything. He merely smirked at the implications of the film.

Why did Mr. Ustinov smirk? Well, imagine watching young Cannes girls trying to become famous actresses by giving gratis burlesques, Tahiti girls slithering away the better part of their youth, matrons undergoing facial torture for a pretty face, women at the height of gracelessness . . . the last few seconds of labor. So there you have it. A film with nice music, good photography, and clever commentary. In spite of all its technique, it remains basically just plain sensationalism.

Not that a film about women has to be "deep". Its just that when a film is titled

Women of the World, one expects to see just that.

Instead, one sees a onesided view of women in unusual societies, in very private quarters, or in embarrassing situations. There is absolutely no attempt to capture on film the quiet, the subtle, the beautiful.

It seems a shame that such a well-trained camera could find only the obvious, and for the most part, depressing aspects of women to photograph.

A new Kind of love

By Emily Mandy

In A New Kind of Love, Director-Producer Malville Shavelson gives an old theme a new twist—with spectacular results. Moreover, this particular comedy might have been just a mediocre farce, but it isn't. The principal reason is that there are, literally, no dull moments.

The pace of the plot alone is meteoric. But linked with panoramic shots of New York and Paris, unusual camera tricks, dazzling colours and allround good acting, the yarn becomes a virtual kaleidoscope of entertainment.

In the cast, Paul Newman is more or less apt as the suave and caustic columnist, Steve Sherman, whose amoral antics in Harrisburg Pa. force his publisher to banish him to Paris in disgrace. On the plane, Newman encounters a brush with an equally-caustic Samantha Blake, played by Joanne Woodward. "Sam"'s business is pirating haute-couture designs from Givenchy and Dior for cheap reproduction back home.

Miss Woodward is outstanding in her role as the fierce career girl once-thwarted in love and unwilling to go through the mill a second time. The fact that she does (albeit with some highly unorthodox help) accounts for much of the hilarity.

Accompanying "Sam" is Thelma Ritter as the middle-aged buyer, Lena O'Connor, and George Tobias as Joseph Bergner, their more-than-middle-aged employer. Miss Ritter's angling for a marriage proposal from the boss is amusing and convincing, while Eva Gabor is in her natural element as the free-wheeling socialite in pursuit of the same quarry. "Big-game Bergner", of course, is unaware of all this.

By the end of the film, naturally, everything works out the way it should. But getting there is half the fun; and for sheer fun, A New Kind of Love is hard to beat.

Meals cont'd.

Company. Then Inspector Herbert Thurston, head of the Toronto police morality squad, read parts of the book and decided the whole novel was obscene. It was understood he then formed a special committee within the police department. That committee decided by one vote that the book was not pornographic.

But still the book has not been placed on unrestricted sale. Some booksellers say they have been approached by police officers who warned them to remove the book from their stands. Two officials of McClelland and Stewart gave varying statements. The first said the company had a stock of the books but that it wasn't shipping any more to booksellers "pending developments." The other said the book was "out of stock" and declined further comment.

Bruce Surtees, owner of the Book Celler on Bay Street, has sold the Grove Press edition at $7.25 and says at that price "no kids are liable to get their hands on it."

"There is no paperback version of the book yet in North America," he continued, "but I have no doubt that if it did come out in paper it would be banned."

There have been no prosecution arising out of the sale of The Naked Lunch and some booksellers still can supply it.

The question of the law's verdict in its varying forms must ultimately be put aside. Whether Burroughs' trilogy is literature, or junkie culture, or just plain junk, will be argued by future generations. Poetry is always hard to recognize when it comes in a strikingly new form, and it is risky to condemn something just because it is too different and difficult to be easily inserted into a preconceived, allegedly universal, pattern of literature.

It was not so long ago, Philip Toynbee remarks in a review of Burroughs' work, that purple-faced literary men were breaking furniture in London because they could not agree on the incomprehensible nonsense, or so it seemed to them, that T.S. Eliot was flinging in their faces.

Letter of advice to a new overseas student

By Ravi Gupta

Massey College,
Sept. 27, 1963.

Dear Rajendra:

I am so pleased to learn that you are coming to Canada for your graduate studies. This is almost the best thing that can happen to anyone — I don't mean coming to Canada in particular, but the opportunity of coming in contact with a different culture.

It is sad, though, how few foreign students avail themselves of this splendid opportunity. In so many cases all that remains of three years of stay abroad is a degree, a taperecorder, a refrigerator, a few slides of some outstanding engineering feats and the vain glory of having been abroad. Many foreign students never really come in contact with the culture of the country they are visiting and the opportunity it offers for another experiment in living. Thus, their exposure to another approach to the basic problems of life is very superficial — their contact is merely physical for they do not allow disquieting questions to arise in their minds. A critical evaluation of their own way of living doesn't occur to such students. Sadder still is the fact that in many cases this loss is not even felt. These people go back to their countries, supposedly experts on the other world, and promote strange generalities and tell fantastic stories.

Most of these students seem to go through a fairly standard procedure. The student gets off the plane tired and tense. For several hours he has been with strangers who appear to be acting very correctly and confidently. To him as they would their unsure mind this is discomfiting. And, above all, however much he hates to admit it, in many cases he is tense because these strangers are whites. Besides, the food has been so different and tasteless. All he wants is somebody to tell him "things are not that bad after all." The World University Service (WUS), Friendly Relations with Overseas Students (FROS), and everybody else make sure that he meets somebody from his own country as soon as possible — as if nobody else could give him this simple assurance.

He feels very relieved and is only too happy to accept the patronage of a compatriot who introduces him to the "group." Once he has joined the "group" he talks the same language, eats the same food and thinks as he always did. He gets quite upset if he has to interact with the other world. He watches Canadian life as on a screen.

DISCRIMINATION

In the group, everybody agrees that Murthy didn't get a summer job because he was discriminated against. (It doesn't even occur to them that the Canadian who got the job could be more qualified. They have many such incidents of alleged injustices against them, and they derive a strange pleasure exaggerating them.)

Occasionally, he does go to the open houses arranged by FROS and Rotarians. At such gatherings he feels morally bound to defend all the actions of his government and all the customs of his society. And he proceeds to do this by misrepresentation or idealization. Just like most teachers, cornered by clever students, he feels it is more important to defend his position than to find out what is right. These gatherings always end up as meetings of the formal representatives of the various countries rather than as encounters of individuals. If anything ever is discussed, it is politics — largely those aspects which require no thought or action besides reading a standard newspaper column.

SEARCH FOR FLAWS

Even if he is forced to concede the material superiority of society here, the overseas student cites the figures of the North American divorce rate and the number of patients in mental institutions to help him maintain his belief in the superiority of his own culture. He very conveniently forgets the number of people starving in his home country and refuses to admit that somewhere there must be a flaw in his system too. He stubbornly rejects the heritage of experience and thought of the rest of the world.

If ever he finds himself confronted with a slightly searching question about his way of life, he eagerly takes refuge in the primitive sameness of human life in all lands — in fact confusing the sameness of question and the sameness of the answer. He is not made aware of this lapse on his part by the well-meaning groups here. They all make mistakes and never call out 'fault'. He fails to learn the rules of the game and neither of the parties really enjoy the play, in spite of all the contrived polite smiles. Slowly, this social game ends. Some good Christian group arranges a farewell party for him. He tells them how enjoyable his stay has been. The plane moves and he starts thinking "How sad it is that I'll have to work so long to buy a car in my country. Here it was so easy."

Now, I have no wish to tell you what questions you might meet when you come to Canada. All I ask is that you do not come as messenger from a superior culture loaded with eternal verities, and do not avoid facing the uneasy questions which will be raised largely by your own mind. You can be acquainted with certain problems of life only when a way of life is challenged!

I wish you a very rewarding stay in Canada.

Sincerely yours,
Ravi Gupta

Special gesture language explains Indian dance

By Barbara Kirshenblatt

Shanta Rao is significant in the world of dance, not only as an outstanding performer, but also as the prime exponent of a fast-disappearing art. Dance, as it exists in India today, is fragmentary and vestigial. Dance used to be the art that dignified Sanskrit drama — it was a dramatic mode of worship, establishing a mystic contact with nature and the elements. The sources from which Indian dancers today must draw their material are ancient manuscripts and temple sculptures which illustrate dance poses, groupings, and costumes.

Indian dance is primarily traditional. It is improvisation in accordance with classical rules of a controlled nature. The artist is concerned with the re-creation and interpretation of tradition. The genius of the interpreter-performer shines through the well-known form.

Songs in Sanskrit, Tamil or other South Indian vernaculars often accompany the dance and inspire a complicated series of gestures and expressions. The dancer, either singing the words in unison with the accompanist or forming them silently on her lips, enacts the song in the minutest detail, with highly exaggerated facial expressions and clear formations of the fingers and hands.

To interpret each word, meaning by meaning, a special gesture-language (mudras) is used. The name of any Indian god has unlimited manifestations which lend themselves to interpretive movement. An accomplished dancer exploits the permutations of any word or phrase to an extent which exhausts all possible variants.

The most completely preserved dance form is the Bharata Natyam. This form is also the most anciently documented of any living classical. An entire performance takes around two hours.

The program opened with a ten minute fragment of this dance, which displays a rich variety of body movements and complex rhythmic stamping. The stamping is made more audible and tambourine-like by the anklets of silvery bells. Shanta Rao is the first dancer in fifty years to essay a Thana Varnam, with it the most elaborate and elevated expression of Bharata Natyam.

Shanta Rao abandoned herself in an exuberant outburst of "pure" dance, called Tillana. This dance is neither narrative nor descriptive. It is a joyous celebration of the pleasures of dance. The dancer explodes onto the stage with swift, lively bends and dips, bursts of smiles, symmetrical leaps back and forth and to right and left. It is performed to a chant of meaningless syllables, often without regard for the melody of the music.

It is indeed a pleasure to watch a brilliant performer recreate the complex and vital part of Indian dance. Miss Rao needed no assistance from fancy lights, sets or ingenious props. She filled the bare stage with her presence and consummate skill.

Dos Passos pictures Brazil on the move

Thomas slams life under coconut tree

By DOROTHY THOMAS

Twothirds of a coconut tree, by H. Allen Smith. (369 p.) Little, Brown & Co., Toronto.

"It occurred to me today," writes H. Allen Smith, "that I am a collector of bores." And goes on to recount how he has been forced to spend endless hours listening to detailed accounts of oabics, teeth, aching backs and (titter-titter) the diminishing sexual power of the male American octogenarian. These tidbits of universal experience are sparkling compared to the doings of Smith and the other middle-aged juveniles in Tahiti.

For this book purports to be a rollicking tour of that mystic island of love, the paradise of the south Seas, where food and women are plentiful. As things work out, however, the Tahitians are there only to provide background colour since Smith finds himself the most interesting phenomenon on the island. So we read about how Smith went to a doctor to get drugs to stimulate his sexual potency (although he assures us that, at 53, he is as vigorous as ever).

He gives his own snobbish opinion of American tourists abroad — he lavishes his "wit" on the little old ladies and gentlemen who work and save all their lives to get the time and money to go to the south Seas, when they're too old to enjoy it. This is not funny; it's mean.

But Smith wastes most of his words on his own funny, funny doings and those of his "oddball" pals.

The highlight of the book is when they take an old tub of a boat and sail it to a nearby island in the tradition of the great Pacific adventurers. Their ship's supplies are a can of peanuts and some beer. The peanuts are lost. Ha ha. Actually the book could have been about half its length were it not for the endless cataloguing of Smith's near-famous and quite unknown drinking partners. The only names worth repeating in this recitative are Stirling Moss, whom Smith didn't meet, Marlon Brando who refused to have his picture taken with Smith (and who was therefore peevishly characterized as rude, fat and pasty-faced), and Bengt Danielsson, who is so polite he will talk to anyone.

All this might be all right, perhaps, except that Smith (despite his continual references to "we writers"), has the literary finesse of a high school student writing on "What I did last summer."

By Donna Mason

Brazil on the Move by Dos Passos. Doubleday, $4.50, pp 205.

The Latin American countries have long been a source of concern to the United States and Canada but most people know very little about them. The general idea of a Latin-American is that he is either a fat greasy revolutionary with an untrimmed beard and explosives bulging under his belt or a picturesque type with an enormous sombrero and a bright coloured serape drowsing in the sun. The countries are pictured as primitive backwaters with dusty streets and adobe houses. One of the least known of these countries is Brazil.

Since 1948 John Dos Passos has made three extended visits to Brazil and this book is the result of his observations. Starting with a brief and fascinating survey of Brazilian history since the arrival of Portuguese settlers in the 16th century, he goes on to provide a panoramic description of the political and social developments to the present day.

Speaking both Spanish and Portuguese, Dos Passos had a unique opportunity among American writers to get to know the Brazilians, and his thumbnail sketches of the important men in the country are one of the best features of the book.

One of the most effective of these descriptions is that of Dr. Bernardo Sayao, a Brazilian with an unusual hobby — roadbuilding. Hatting office work, Sayao built miles of road in the Brazilian interior, and between roads, founded agricultural colonies. His fondness for roads is understandable when you consider that the vast interior of Brazil has about half an inhabitant per square mile. Roads are of primary importance if the country is to be opened for settlement.

For years Brazil, has been without a capital. It was eventually decided to locate it in the interior, as a further step in the opening of the country. Dos Passos describes the growth of this city, called Brasilia, from the beginning when it was only a dream and a handful of plans until the summer of 1962 when it began to function as a city. Few North Americans have had the chance to watch the birth of a city, and the section of the book dealing with Brasilia is most interesting. The creators of the city, President Kubitschek and Brazilian architect Oscar Niemeyer, are clearly and sympathetically portrayed, and the description of the myriad problems involved is well handled.

Brazilian government is a fairly recent experiment in democracy. The country has been under fascist rule in the past, but the chief problem now is communism. The inevitable turmoil in a western hemisphere country caught between democracy and communism is the subject of the last part of the book.

The logical order of this book is disturbed in a few cases, mostly early in the first section, by anecdotes which have little real connection with the basic ideas presented. The section on early Brazilian history is not really sufficient in a book obviously written for people who know little about the country. The introduction and conclusion are the weakest sections. But the main body of the book is close knit and Dos Passos makes excellent use of his material.

The writing is informal and easy to follow, though at times Dos Passos' fondness for terse sentences creates a choppy effect. Especially in the introductory and concluding sections, it is occasionally dull. But for the most part the author's journalistic sense allows the presentation of a great deal of information simply and fluently. The book is entirely without flowery description and tortured adjectives and provides a good introduction to a little-known country and its people.

Sommer slumps

By Sue Lyons

Expertland, Robert Sommer, Doubleday and Co., 210 pp.

The dustcover of Robert Sommer's Expertland claims that Professor Parkinson's great tradition of biting satire is admirably sustained in this latest dissection of the North American myth of Expertise. It isn't!

Sommer has picked a subject with plenty to make fun of, but he lacks the essential sense of the ridiculous to make the whole thing come off. One of the main problems is his metaphor: there are so many coy references to the organization, purposes, fetiches and inhabitants of this peculiar and supposedly isolated little state that instead of hovering delicately over the landscape, Expert-land slumps slowly into the murk of its generalizations.

The criticisms Sommer has of the academic community — and they are many and just — are too familiar to give off the odour of righteous indignation that might have been achieved by an outsider. Certainly they lack the wit and point that have made Parkinson's work a classic.

An uncalled for history of the Soviet Union

By David Gershenowitz

Russia, Anyone? by Eric Nichol and Peter Whalley The Ryerson Press $2.95

When the authors themselves call "Russia, Anyone?" a "completely uncalled-for history of the U.S.S.R.", can a reviewer dare to disagree? Hardly.

Called for or not, it is now in print, and worth a glance, or at least a sneaky peek in the bookstore.

Eric Nichol, a Vancouver columnist and Peter Whalley, a Montreal cartoonist have again joined forces to present us with another satirical view of history. Having completely maligned the U.S. and Canada, they now take aim at the third great world power, the U.S.S.R.

While not always an accurate account of the pearls and perfidies of the Soviet past, "Russia, Anyone?" is recommended for any serious student of world affairs, or any non-serious student of puns. Of the latter, there are some really shaggy dogs.

While the book will not have you doubled up in stitches throughout, there are some good laughs, and enough rapid fire double entendres to provide at least a smile per page.

I promise not to liken it to "1066, and all That", an earlier historical spoof which has become the classical standard.

Whalley's drawings are delightful, and a sample of Nichol's writing will give you an idea of what to expect:

"The main part of Marx's system was the accordion, as expressed in his famous statement: 'From each accordion to his ability; to each accordion to his needs.' This appealed to the Russians who were getting tired of hearing nothing but fiddles playing 'Ochi-Chornye'."

(Editorial comment: ha?) You can read more for $2.95.

Hart House Concert

The first Hart House Sunday Evening Concert, featuring Jan Rubes, has been postponed one week. Mr. Rubes, who played as Leporello in "Don Giovanni" with the Canadian Opera Company this week at O'Keefe Centre, has a severe sore throat. The Hart House Concert, "Around the World in Eighty Songs", will take place on Sunday October 13, rather than on Oct. 6, as previously announced.

ART

By Ruth Kosinec

"Emily Carr — the genius we laughed at"—thus a Canadian weekly newspaper recently headlined its article on the late Emily Carr. This very exciting painter and authoress maintained a complete individuality throughout her life—an individuality so pronounced that her fellow-citizens in Victoria, British Columbia could never understand her. According to current criticism of the Canadian scene, such a quality is decidedly un-Canadian. But Canadian Miss Carr certainly was and this is being proved at the moment on campus at the Hart House Gallery until Oct. 13. The first point to be made is that this is a retrospective exhibition. As such, it consists of paintings from all some in her mature style.

some of a rather eclectic nature, some masterpieces (Indian Church) and some works of a not-so-high calibre. The show is a broad study of the Carr vision and as such it is excellent. Generally the themes of Miss Carr's work are the vast forests and Indian culture of British Columbia—she deviated into portraiture only twice in her lifetime: Spotted Apron in the Hart House show is one of these canvasses. The swirling vastness of wind, rock and haunting green captivated her imagination. There is a feeling for the organic, the primeval in all canvasses in the exhibition — trees, rocks, sky and earth, even totem poles are all closely and very tightly interrelated, developing from periods in her development; each other. After her visit to France in 1910 she tried to capture this western panorama in the broken-light style of impressionism (Logged-over Hillside and Sky). In Trees the development towards a new interest in pure form is evident, a development which, encouraged by her first contact with the Group of Seven in 1927, led ultimately to such masterpieces as Indian Church, Kitwano Totems, and Western Forest. These canvasses represent the mature Carr style which is known throughout Canada today. Generally Canadians are used to seeing rather faded Carr reproductions in the local bank or office building. The originals are at Hart House for one more week and definitely worth a visit.

Winter offers plentiful diet for folk fans

By Linda Halverson

Once folk music was a wild poppy blooming untended in everybody's back yard. Then an esoteric few began to savour its narcotic qualities in a specialized way and it was not long until a new trend was blowing in the wind.

The attraction of the campus set provided the major magic ingredient in making folk music the enterprise it is today. Unfortunately the field has also spawned the inevitable school yard pusher (with the resulting Newport and Mariposa abuses). Some of the purists have moved on or out unable to accept the tense generation as fellow folk.

What is happening can be sad-making but there remains the challenge to be selective. And there is a great deal to select from this year. The roster of coming events on the folk scene in Toronto reads like a year-long hootenanny. The coterie of solos and groups who will sing their way in and out of our town this year includes every conceivable dimension of folk music.

The professional concert series swung in on an up-tempo beat last week at Massey Hall with the New Christy Minstrels under the direction of Randy Sparks. This ten-member group (two are girls) combines infectious spontaneity with a neatly staged and disciplined presentation — no easy task when every member both plays and sings.

The Minstrels will be followed in student-budget-spaced intervals by the Clancy Brothers and Tommy Makem, The Smothers Brothers and the Hamilton Singers,

The Weavers, The Rooftop Singers, The Brothers Four and a thus-far mystery package called Canadian Hootenanny.

There have also been hushed and reverent whispers about the possibility of Bob Dylan (really) making an appearance in Toronto this year. But that is something to pray for rather than sing about just yet.

All of Toronto's native and adopted singers seem to be busy becoming affluent. Ian and Sylvia's new record release, Four Strong Winds, is doing very well and the title song (written by Ian) has now been recorded by seven groups. Their next scheduled local appearance — at Ontario Art College in October — will be taped for CBC presentation.

Al Cromwell's first single has just been released (Dylan's "Don't Think Twice, It's All Right" which locally at least has become Al's song) and he is currently appearing at the 4th Dimension in Regina.

Also heading westward are the Travelers who left yesterday on a tour of western Canadian universities. Malka and Josie are at the Castle George room (upstairs at George's) and Judy Orban is scheduled for a return engagement at Le Hibou in Ottawa toward the beginning of next month.

Cedric Smith, the magnetic lad who played the Black Swan in Stratford this summer is currently on a western tour while the Fernwood Trio have left Orillia's Club of Two Levels to embark upon an eastern tour from Montreal to the Maritimes.

Despite all this travelling, there is sufficient talent here to have kept the television cameras rolling all week videotaping shows for future viewing. At McGill and McMaster a new series of weekly half-hour shows to be entitled "Let's Sing Out" has been televised for CTV and includes, among others, Oscar Brand, Josh White Sr., Judy Orban, Dave Campbell, The Ivy-League Trio, Sylvia Sydney and The Raftsmen. Jim McCarthy and Bob Wowke have done a show for A La Carte to be seen tonight, and Malka and Josie will be appearing on a new program called "Night rap" on October 7th.

Those whose interest in folk music is two-dimensional will be happy to hear that the Guild of Canadian Folk Artists will be sponsoring a nine-week series of informal talks on folk music beginning October 23rd. A myriad of topics will be covered including the pace-setters in American and Canadian folk music, new songwriters, blues, ballads, instrumental styles, blue grass and old time music.

The Guild also foresees future workshops like the two recent ones with the New Lost City Ramblers and Alan Mills.

The Guild-sponsored Sunday night hoots at the Bohemian Embassy continue to serve as a testing ground and sometimes launching platform for new talent in the field. Two of the more notable new faces in recent weeks have been Kevin Fitzgerald, an impish Irishman with a refreshing repertoire, and Mike Griss, a velvet-voiced lad who expresses himself best in the blues. The hoots are a parade square as well for the established singers (Jim McCarthy, Carol Robinson) and occasionally for the very established (Ian Tyson).

A GREAT TRIUMPH IN A DIFFICULT MASTERPIECE

It is doubtful if the romantic veil which has clouded our view of Mozart's Don Giovanni since E. T. A. Hoffman will ever be lifted. Within a quarter century of the composer's death, a superior example of the Italian opera buffa had been transformed into a disturbing forerunner of the romantic mystification that produced Undine (Hoffman), Faust (Sophr) and Der Freischütz (Weber), and was shortly to become the basis for Kierkegaard's Diary of a Seducer in his Either-Or. The character of the Don himself soon reappeared in German literature absorbed in Faust. But poets, composers, philosophers, all at least are agreed on one point, that Mozart and Lorenzo da Ponte created in the summer of 1787, one of the noblest and most perfect of all works of art.

I have indicated that the problem of Don Giovanni is now difficult, perhaps of classic difficulty. For a modern audience, and depending on the nature of the performance, it may appear powerful, artificial, lyrical, silly, blasphemous, inhibited, immoral — any or all of these impressions may occur.

But how can this be if the opera is so perfect? First of all, we must remember the circumstances of its composition. Da Ponte working on two other librettos at the same time, Mozart alternately performing, seducing (the singer playing Donna Elvira) and intriguing in Prague and leaving the composition of the overture until the eve of the performance. At least this is what Don Giovanni's detractors will cull for their argument.

There is also the question of the "first libretto" published in Vienna before the Prague performance in a curiously incomplete form, possibly to escape the black pencil of the imperial censor. The occasion was a Festoper in honour of the Archduchess of Austria, but it was also the same day as the intended premiere. Since the new opera actually was not yet ready, the ever-popular Figaro was substituted for the pleasure of Maria Theresa.

Earlier in 1787, Vienna had seen the appearance of an opera by Gazzaniga with libretto by Bertati, called Don Giovanni Tenorio, and it became the immediate source of Da Ponte's libretto. It is not clear, however, to whom Bertati or Da Ponte we owe the peculiar collage of lines, characters and incidents from the work of Tirso Molière and the Spanish cape and sword dramas that became the most Casanova Don Giovanni. On the musical side, Mozart was Mozart, reluctant to force his views on his cast, thus allowing them to play havoc with form in many instances; each principal in the cast invariably demanded an aria for himself. And unlike most composers, almost, without exception, Mozart's revisions did real damage to the work.

But the most vexing problem for modern audiences is usually the symbolism of the statue or the Stone Guest as it was known. The masonic obscurities in the Magic Flute are not especially palatable but what are we to make of a rather unlucky rake (the Don has no success whatever in the opera itself) who is carried down into the first of hell by the ghost of a man he has killed against his will. I am suggesting that Don Giovanni is less a callous villain than a rather amiable cavalier.

All we are justified in accusing him of is rough treatment of Leporello, but even so, perhaps the Don, like ourselves, may be forgiven for losing patience in the face of the servant's constant complaining.

Unfortunately, Leporello never becomes more than the stereotype buffoon and in recitatives between them, we tend to see a period dress Abbott and Costello rather than a classic badman and his unwilling valet. Although the official reaction from contemporary religious authority was horror and condemnation of such blasphemy, (they reasoned that since no man could be so bad the moral went for naught) few if any of us are usually repelled by the Don in modern performances. When he is carried off by the statue we are impressed not by grand and just omnipotence of the almighty but rather by the awesome gravity or the fiery opulence of the scene, depending on the producer. For this reason I would urge the reinstatement of the final sextet, restoring Mozart's symmetry and removing the falsity of a Wagnerian climax. It would remind us how similar to the design of Figaro this opera is and how mistaken were the romantics. The only other alternative would be to doctor the villainy in the Don's character so that his compunction might be earned, and hence blazing and didactic climax might be in order.

Personally, I feel the intentions of Mozart and Da Ponte will be better served if we place less stress on the uniqueness of the work and more on the parallels to the style of Figaro. But this is not to suggest that Don Giovanni is thereby inferior, for in the hands of the master himself, the Mozartean forms are in no need of defence.

The current production of Don Giovanni by the Canadian Opera Company, I must admit, was an unexpected pleasure. The English translation (Edward J. Dent's was used) did not bother me a bit, and together with the judicious cuts made, (including not only tiresome chunks of recitative but also whole scenes) the total effect was one of fluent formal beauty, and above all, of inevitability and pleasure.

One scarcely knows where to start in the matter of allotting admiration to all concerned. First of all, the much-maligned Toronto orchestra players played with taste, and that rarest of all musical virtues, gusto. Mario Bernardi conducted with great confidence.

But I feel that the secret weapon was Mavor Moore who moved his people as always with great wit and imagination, but also added bits of business that for once did not cut across the stylistic delicacy of the work. Opera lovers will probably be cursing him for cutting favourite arias like those of Donna Elvira and Donna Anna in the Second Act, but make no mistake, he knew what he was about. His intention was to increase the pace of opera as Don Giovanni's doom draws fast upon him. To this end, he has Don Ottavio sing his Il mio tesoro in front of the curtain, then skips the irrelevant scene between Leporello and Zerlina, and Donna Elvira's equally irrelevant Recitative and Aria (however beautifully) to cut in immediately with the graveyard scene.

Then instead of giving us the flabby, redundant (and criminal according to Berlioz) scene with Donna Anna and that patient dummy Don Ottavio, we move directly to the supper. And lo and behold, Mr. Moore had the courage to reinstate the final sextet (although a good deal of it was omitted) as I have advocated above.

The voices with only two exceptions were very fine indeed. A great triumph in a difficult masterpiece; it is this kind of performance that reaffirms the awesome genius of Mozart.

THE BC ELECTION AND THE UNIVERSITIES

By MIKE HORN

The recent election in British Columbia had a generally unexpected outcome. Most observers expected a narrow Socred victory; few anticipated an increased majority for Premier Bennett's flamboyant regime. But the electorate played the pundits false, and the premier has another "mandate from the people".

To most British Columbians concerned about higher education Mr. Bennett's mandate must have come as an unpleasant intimation that B.C.'s public universities will remain in the limbo of half-support. Both the NDP and the Liberals could have been expected to be more generous than the Socreds.

Not that the Bennett government has ignored the needs of the universities; to say so would be unfair even to an administration which is mainly concerned with conspicuous bridge, highway, and ferry construction.

But Social Credit's evaluation of how much money the universities need stays shy of the facts. The government's attitude was indicated by Mr. Bonner, the attorney-general, some months ago when he stated that UBC's requested increase in operating funds would have been used to "spoonfeed" students.

Universities that receive sufficient funds do not find their students canvassing the populace with petitions requesting increased government support. Yet students from UBC and Victoria during three days last March collected more than 200,000 signatures for this purpose. Their efforts were supported by the faculties at Vancouver and Victoria, and a number of instructors cancelled lectures so that their students could participate in demonstrations or in the canvass. In retrospect the activity seems to have been a waste of time. The "Back Mac" campaign—"Mac" is Dr. John MacDonald, UBC president—was an exhilarating experience, but the petitions probably went straight from the education minister's desk into an incinerator. Whatever happened to them, the final operating grants of the two universities were some $4,000,000 short of the requested sums. Higher education, moreover, was hardly a major issue in Monday's election. Overcrowded buildings, undersized library holdings, inadequate graduate facilities and insufficient faculty salaries seem fated to remain for at least five years.

The battle isn't over. Student officials at UBC have said that they would continue the "Back Mac" campaign if more money were not made available to the universities. This may not be necessary, for Professor Ralph Loffmark, elected for Social Credit in Vancouver/Point Grey, is being touted for minister of finance and some people believe that this may mean more funds for UBC, Victoria, and Burnaby's embryonic Simon Fraser University. But there is room for skepticism. Premier Bennett is not likely to be guided by a new finance minister, especially because he himself has up to this time filled that post.

B.C.'s premier is above all an opportunist with a superb eye for political necessities, possibilities, and red herrings. If he ever becomes convinced that adequate aid to higher education is a political necessity which no convenient red herring can put off, higher education will receive ample money. At present he seems unconvinced and with a mandate which suffices until 1968 he is unlikely to change his mind because of additional student action.

SCIENCE

The specific relation between philosophy and science has been one of controversy throughout the ages. Yet recently, with the growth of science and the reflection upon its martyrs and its dignity, there has been a high reverence for scientific thought among philosophers. Some philosophers have gone so far as to restrict philosophy to the clarification and organization of scientific presuppositions and method. One by one the grand philosophic systems of the past have been shown to lack the apodeictic certainty at which they aimed, and the increased authority of science has placed fact over the fiction of arbitrary assumption and hypothesis. But is this sharp distinction between scientific fact and philosophic fiction fair? Let us first discover what we mean by a fact. In any conceptual system there must be determinable objects of thought, which is to say that every philosophy must assume intelligible existence. There must be objective items which, if they are to be communicable, must also be public, as are most of the objects of language. For those people who hold the view that professional philosophers since Descartes doubt the existence of their own shoes, I shall further clarify this point.

We cannot deny their existence both as things and ideas without being self-contradictory. This paper, my pen, blue birds, and square cartons are intelligible as facts, and the philosopher only tries to find out how they exist. However, I doubt that such a simple description could ever pass without the sententious injection of a few stock questions by the intellectuals of the Arbor Room or JCR. I shall endeavor to answer one, leaving the rest as meat for intellectual self-esteem. This objection, commonly aimed at the existence of intelligible things, is that they all might be hallucinations, illusions, dreams, mirages, etc. In answer to this objection, it should be understood that all of these forms of deception are known only through the difference between them and the more general experience of man. And even if this confusion is taken in its metaphorical sense suggesting a "more truthful" but unknown reality, I can see no theoretical advantage in the substitution of an unknown reality for the concern and experience of man — the reality of man. It should also be noted that an unknown reality would have no greater claim to veracity than the known reality; it could only of necessity be different.

If science, however, were only to make factual statements, if this were the sole function of science, then philosophers could have no out look on science other than an astonishment at why scientists would ever perpetuate this odd pursuit. This brings us to the fiction or hypothesis of science. I should mention that when I use the word "fiction," I merely mean that which is artificial — a product of the human mind which has direction and particular presuppositions but lacks the definite existence of objective things.

That factual existence is not a matter of decision at a specific point in time is the factor which differentiates fact and fiction. That is to say, the existence of any particular thing, such as the table I am writing on, at a point in time, is not a matter of dispute or decision. In the case of science, these facts are not randomly collected together in a senseless aggregation, but rather, they are ordered and evaluated according to their pertinence to some directed investigation. In this sense, scientists are not strictly objective.

The fiction or theory of science is found in the method of ordering these facts and the motive for doing so in the first place. Neither the ordering nor the value of ordering facts can be found in the facts themselves, but are a product of thought. This, of course, makes both method and value in science hypothetical.

For the sake of consistency, I should point out that even if this value is knowledge for its own sake, the value does not lie in the fact a fact is not valued as knowledge when knowledge is not held as a value in itself.

My point so far has been that science includes both fact and fiction. Facts are investigated by scientists and philosophers who are not attending to their own business; they only have an illustrative use in philosophy. On the other hand, the fiction of science is the subject of inquiry for both scientists and philosophers. Both the reflective scientist and the philosopher stand upon the same ground in this endeavor — to seek the logical consistency of general method, and to make explicit the values of scientific investigation.

Women rule America

By Tasneem A. Khan

The other day I asked an American friend: "Don't you think it is odd that Elizabeth Taylor receives a salary seven times that of the president of the United States?"

In reply he merely reminded us of the words of Mark Twain: "The average American would rather see Lillian Russell naked than General Grant in full uniform."

What was true in 1863 is still more so in 1963.

It cannot be denied that women rule the U.S. It can be seen every day; it can be felt; it can be shown by statistics. Manufacturers are laying greater emphasis on style and chic color schemes rather than engineering to satisfy the female aesthetic requirements. Perhaps soon we shall have cars in 17 pastel shades of pink "to match your favorite lipstick," with frills and embroidered seats. Perhaps we shall live to see the day of the embroidered carburetor and the Chanel "new look" fuel pump.

If you still want to be convinced look at a tractor or pneumatic drill advertisement and if you don't see a scantily clad, tempting female, this correspondent is prepared to eat his turban. At universities this tendency is most easily observed. I came here from Europe where apart from a few delightful exceptions the rule still is that woman is for love and man for intellectual conversation. (In our own country — Pakistan — both are for love).

In fact, the well-known humorist Sirlol Hugh-Jones says of the English system of female education: "The girls' schools of England have perfected a technique by which no trace of education is allowed to mar the pristine quality of a young girl's mind. The charms of this are obvious. She can be molded gently and surely to whatever pattern suits."

Not so the American girl. Whereas bright young men are condemned to study such dull subjects as mining and engineering, the women take the majority of places in the liberal arts.

If they do not become intellectuals it is not for lack of trying. The young undergraduate college girl will talk to you on any subject from counter-revolution to contraceptives, from Camus and Bertrand Russell to the Kama Sutra.

Their male counterparts will in general be confined to a few lucid and far-sighted remarks on the season's football or ice-hockey as the case might be. It seems to me that soon the only people in America who are left worth talking to will be women.

The other day I was talking to an American girl on this theme and she insisted men are "at least equal to women in the U.S."

"Would you leave your seat for a man in a subway?" I asked her.

"No."

"And yet you would accept it if he offered his seat."

"Yes."
 "You have one vote, he has one vote. Then why this inequality?"

"Well, that is tradition," she said.

"What about dish-washing?" I asked her. "Would you expect your husband to do any dish-washing?"

"Oh, no. Unless I asked him as a favour."

This sounded to me like the thin end of the wedge especially with my experience of certain young husbands I know who are wasting away in modern electrically-equipped dungeons "as a favor to their ladies." This theory is called: "You are free darling, except when I decide."

What is more, it seems to me that men here have been slightly brainwashed and seem to like this. Here is what a young man had to say about dishwashing:

"I never wash dishes except when she wants me to."

"How often is that?"

"Three times a week. The days that I make breakfast." "And what about the other four days?"

"She does them," he said proudly. "Except Friday and Saturday when we eat out."

Next we came to the important question: "Who wears the trousers in your house? Who makes the decisions?"

"I do!" he said decisively, adding: "Except the important decisions."

"And who decides which are the important decisions?"

"She does!" he said, rather weakly.

That women rule here is beyond question. The only question is how. How is it that the American woman has acquired as complete a mastery here as "Big Brother" in Orwell's nightmare novel?

Is it shortage of women?

Have they overcome through sheer force of numbers?

Neither seems to be the case. As far as I am able to ascertain, of every 100 Americans 50 1/2 are women, 49 are men (we shall not go into what the remaining one-half is.) So numbers are fairly evenly divided. A Marxist might say that the greater part of the capital here is controlled by women, but that explanation too seems shaky.

Perhaps it is just that women of this continent have at last learned our great weakness, that we can't do without them.

We hear that in Pakistan some misguided men are fighting for our last privilege of having more than one wife. Perhaps the experience of the American male will be a warning to their misguided zeal. Once our women acquire the American woman's technique they too might become the masters. And would it not be worse by far to have a dictatorship of four masters instead of a dictatorship of just one? Let our harem-seekers be warned!

FATHER OF EXISTENTIALISM: IS HE REALLY A SON OF GOD?

By John Sewell

"Imagine a big, well-trained hunting dog. He accompanies his master on a visit to a family where, as all too often in our time, there is a whole assembly of ill-behaved youths. Their eyes hardly light upon the hound before they begin to maltreat it in every kind of way. The hound, which was well trained, as these youths were not, fixes his eye at once upon his master to ascertain from his expression what he expects him to do. And he understands the glance to mean that he is to put up with all the ill-treatment, accept it indeed as though it were sheer kindness conferred upon him. Thereupon the youths of course become still more rough, and finally they agreed that it must be a prodigiously stupid dog which puts up with everything.

"The dog meanwhile is only concerned about one thing, what the master's glance commands him to do. And lo, that glance is suddenly altered; it signifies — and the hound understands it at once — use your strength. The instant with a single leap he has seized the biggest lout and thrown him to the ground — and now no one stops him, except the master's glance, and the same instant he is as he was a moment before. — Just so with me."

So writes, the great Danish theologian — Søren Kierkegaard in his journal. The "biggest lout" is a specific reference to his contemporary mid-19th century Protestant church which he lashed for its mediocrity and its inconceivably naive view of what he considered to be Christianity.

An even yet bigger lout which Kierkegaard threw to the ground—with gigantic repercussions—was the school of European philosophy which had reached its climax in Hegel. He virtually founded the existentialist school. As well, modern literature seems to find its unity in existentialism: Camus, Hemingway, Grahame Greene, Kafka, Hesse—they all concern themselves with problems posed by Kierkegaard in the late 1840's.

STRANGE WRITINGS

Kierkegaard's writings are a strange lot: they attempt to prove nothing; they solve no problems; they are almost too passionate, too imbued with a continual quest to be considered 'philosophical'. As Kierkegaard himself states, few if any of his books can stand by themselves. They are somewhat like a diary: to leave out part would not give a full picture. To quote from a diary does not do it justice either, and again it is the same with Kierkegaard.

All that can be attempted here is an introduction to some of his basic concepts. His worth for our generation is inestimable. 'The whole age has sunk into the profoundest indifference, has no religion whatever, is not even in a condition for religion.'

Kierkegaard begins his thinking with a direct attack on Hegel. He claims that a "system," and explanation of everything, is impossible because of the stumbling block provided by existence.

He first attacks the problem by discussing the possibilities of truth. Either truth is subjective—in the thinker alone—or it is objective—exterior to, but discoverable by, the thinker. An objective thinker would be one who could divorce himself from his state of flux, his becoming, so that nothing could taint his perception of the truth. A systematic or objective thinker, he states, "would have to be someone out of existence, someone with finality and not becoming." This would be impossible since the abstract thought thus produced would be thought without a thinker. Accordingly, truth cannot be something objective, but rather it must be subjective, in the mind of the thinker. Thus, "only the truth which edifies is truth for you," and, to add a final blow to the systematic thinker, he thinker who can forget in all his thinking also to think that he is an existing individual will never explain life."

TRUTH IS SUBJECTIVE

So much for objective truth: all truth is subjective and the thinker must become a subjective thinker. Truth is subjective; around what will it be centered? Kierkegaard comes back to his basic idea: there is no truth in objectivity.

Anything outside myself cannot be truth but only an approximation to truth since an existing individual qualifies the exception. Thus, "all historical knowledge—something existing in time—is illusory;" also seen in that no one ever knows "all the facts" in a given situation. Kierkegaard continues: 'The only thing that can become infinitely certain for me is the fact of my existence.'

Why he is called an existentialist is clear.

This, very briefly, is the philosophical basis of Kierkegaard's religious ideas. From this point on—he brings out difficulties in existential thinking.

For instance: 'Subjectivity is difficult since everyone has a passion to become something more and different ... Existence is difficult to deal with: if I think it, I abrogate it and then do not think it.' Further, there is no way of getting across this existential reality, since it is incommunicable, it is something for the existential thinker, the individual, himself. A religion, then, is centered around the individual, not around a set of doctrines, and it is the individual alone who is important.

Thus: '... A crowd is the untruth. In a godly sense it is true, eternally, Christianly, as St. Paul says, that "only one attains the goal"—which is not meant in a comparative sense, for comparison takes others into account. It means that every man can be that one, God helping him therein — but only one attains the goal. And again this means that every man should be chary about having to do with "the others", and essentially should talk only with God and with himself — for only one attains the goal.'

SELF IS ESCAPE

Kierkegaard becomes quite terrifying in his continuous emphasis on this point: there is no way out, only through oneself. It is on this theme which he builds his little book Fear and Trembling, a study of the story of Abraham and Isaac. Abraham must do something entirely immoral for God, namely kill his son. Kierkegaard interprets this as a raising of the individual above the universal.

This, he claims, is faith: "But he who gives up the universal in order to grasp something still higher which is not the universal—what is he doing? Is it possible that this can be anything else but a temptation? And if it is possible but the individual was mistaken—what can save him?" This, Kierkegaard states, constitutes the fear and trembling with which the leap of faith is made: it is a leap of the individual alone. Seen objectively, before the result (i.e. the sending of the ram for the sacrifice instead of Isaac) "either Abraham was every minute a murderer, or we are confronted by a paradox which is higher than all mediation."

The paradox is the axis of Kierkegaard's religious thinking. It is only by virtue of the absurd that faith can have any meaning. And of course the paradox, the absurd, is a leap beyond reason which objectivism cannot grasp. The meaning is in the individual himself, or nowhere. It is the paradox alone which constitutes religion: the faith, the subjective understanding which gives validity to it. One here encounters the supreme paradox that Christianity is based on an historical event—an approximation—namely that Christ existed as a man. It is here that one encounters the paradox that "Man's need of God constitutes his highest perfection."

MEDIOCRE THINKER

"The thinker without paradox is like a lover without feeling: a paltry mediocrity. But the highest pitch of every passion is always to will its own downfall; and so it is also the supreme passion of the Reason to seek a collision, though this collision must be in one way or another prove its undoing ... This is like what happens in connection with the paradox of love. Man lives undisturbed a self-centred life until there awakens within him the paradox of self-love in the form of another, the object of self-love ... The lover is so completely transformed by the paradox of love that he scarcely recognizes himself". Reason then, seeks, or might one say stumbles upon, the unthinkable thought, the paradox. Kierkegaard inquires into this paradox:

Reason collides when inspired by its paradoxical passion, with the result of unsettling man's knowledge of himself? It is the Unknown. let us call this unknown something: the god. It is nothing more than a name we assign to it. The idea of demonstrating that this unknown something (the god) exists could scarcely suggest itself to the reason. For if the god does not exist it would of course be impossible to prove it: and if he does exist it would be folly to attempt it."

Kierkegaard then twines the problem of existence with the idea of proving God. He has been considering Spinoza's 'proof' of God (I think of a perfect being, perfection includes existence, therefore the perfect being, God, exists):

GOD'S EXISTENCE

'And how does the God's existence emerge from the proof? ... As long as I keep my hold on the proof, i.e. continue to demonstrate, the existence does not come out, if for no other reason than that I am engaged in proving it. But when I let the proof go, the existence is there. But this act of letting go is surely also something: it is indeed a contribution of mine. Must not this also be taken into account, this little moment, brief as it may be—it need not be long, for it is a leap.

"The Reason has brought the God as near as possible, and yet he is as far away as ever." And similarly, excerpts have brought Kierkegaard as near as possible, and yet he is as far away as ever. It seems that Kierkegaard, after a certain point, cannot be condensed: his work is too tightly woven.

And, it must be admitted, we have not touched on his religious thoughts: but, following Kierkegaard, we must first provide a condition for religion. Surely interest is one of the basic conditions.

A VIEW OF THE UNIVERSITY

By Ferguson

For many of you, University is a novel exciting experience, academically, culturally, and socially. It is also, however, an arena of factions, cliques and societies, where perpetual tempests shake organized teapots, and rival armies do battle for frequently dubious causes.

One of the most useless arguments, in my opinion, is the perpetual Engineers-Artsmen wrangle. You have probably heard something of this already, but if not, you soon will. The Engineers loudly proclaim their ability to drink forty bottles of beer and to perform other acts intended to demonstrate their exuberance and virility. There exist, of course, individuals in this liquid mass who consider such performances basically infantile yet support them to promote a fictional esprit de corps. Supposedly, the Engineering Society benefits from the resulting publicity.

Perhaps so, but I find the manifestations of this spirit most alarming. A few examples from last year's "round of activities":

At all debates that I attended between SPS and other faculties of colleges, the Engineers in the audience voted as an apparently mindless block and so did the Artsies.

Evidently students are exhorted by their colleagues to attend debates not to broaden their minds, but to help the ranks of the "home team". (Rah?)

At one debate against St. Mike's on birth control, the Engineer herd really outdid themselves. A barrage of lewd remarks accompanied by contraceptives thrown to the front of the room, utterly ruined what should have been a witty, stimulating tournament.

I exemplify the Engineers only because I am an Engineer and therefore familiar with their activities. True, the other faculties and colleges on campus have similar herd groups. You can observe them best at intermural football games, debates and at various initiation rites (civilized and barbaric).

To those who argue that yelling, screaming and throwing questionable objects at games is a good way to let off steam, "provided no one is hurt", (that statement is always delivered in a tone of sanctimonious piety) my one word reply is unprintable. All too often some one is injured or property is damaged. I contend that the solidarity expressed by these herd groups is really nothing more than collective narcissism.

One Engineering Professor recently remarked to me that students are not at University to learn a jumble of disjointed facts, but to develop the art of rational thinking. The responsible, intelligent student does not seek the herd but tries instead to apply his classroom approach to life problems. Science students can use scientific methodology as their guide; the Arts students have the great contemporary or ancient writers, philosophers, and historians.

University life can be very stimulating or it can bore you to death. While many fascinating people are here if you want to look for them, the herd needs new blood too. The choice is your own. Good luck!

The sound of surprise

an occasional jazz column By Dave Jackel

By now the serious jazz fans among the student body have probably had time to survey the local scene. And as usual, nothing worthwhile is happening. Among jazz centers, Toronto presently ranks slightly behind Medicine Hat, Sask., as a place to hear "real live jazz musicians".

"Real live jazz musicians", with the exception of Don Thompson, are not to be confused with the depressing array of local talent. But the Thompson group can't seem to find regular work, so the listener is forced elsewhere in the search for jazz other than Dixieland.

Those who believe, with Patrick Scott (the Barry Goldwater of Toronto jazz critics), that jazz ended shortly after the advent of Louis Armstrong can stop reading now. Those who have inordinate local pride, and believe that serious jazz can be produced by Moe Koffman playing the original ideas of somebody else, are also advised to stop reading.

Those among you who are reading on, will probably have noticed that the imported talent featured at local taverns has included in the recent past some of the finest second-rate jazz groups on the continent. First-rate musicians seldom come to Toronto. A number of us are still waiting for the first arrival of Horace Silver. Thelonius Monk, Sonny Rollins, John Coltrane, Roland Kirk, and Jimmy Smith. These are just a few of the most influential modern jazzmen, but the Toronto jazz fan can appreciate them only on recordings.

The blame for this cannot be attached entirely to the policy of the local clubs. Bill Evans brought his trio to the Town Tavern two years ago, and those of the locals who thought that being seen in the audience made them jazz fans, turned out in force. During the engagement they displayed their sophistication by not applauding, and talked loudly enough at all times to drown out Evans' introspective piano solos. The few who came to listen seriously gave up after one set. After two days Evans gave the impression that he had also given up.

Between unimaginative booking on one hand, and uninterested listeners on the other, the general standard of out-of-town groups has remained incredibly low. Two possible exceptions loom in the future.

Art Blakey is coming to the First Floor Club, Oct. 14 to 19, and Chico Hamilton to the Friars' Tavern. Whether Blakey can overcome the pseudo-beatniks at the First Floor and whether Hamilton can overcome the tone-deaf drunks at the Friars' remains to be seen.

Blakey has a slight advantage over Hamilton in contests of this kind. His drum solos, which conjure up visions of the entire nation of Sierra Leone playing drums at one time, have been known to render shell-shocked all but the most vociferous.

But for the near future things look bleak. Those who make the local scene in hopes of hearing good jazz, had better retreat to radio and records.

The jazz recording industry is undergoing a relative boom at present. This flood of new releases can submerge the unwary listener unless extreme caution is exercised within the doors of local record dealers. What follows is an attempt to make the follower of modern jazz aware of a few recent recordings which stand out from the mass of routine blowing sessions.

Ornette on Tenor (Atlantic) is not, strictly speaking, a new record. Released in early 1963, it is the latest of the Ornette Coleman albums, and deserves special attention for a number of reasons. Coleman is the foremost exponent of what is known in jazz as the "new thing". Or, as those who don't like it say, he plays anti-jazz. This consists of improvising, not on the chord changes of a given song, but in the general emotional climate which the theme statements conjure up for the soloist.

There are perils in this sort of venture. It leads easily to long aimless solos, and a good deal of what sounds suspiciously like just plain noise. And since Coleman has waived all the rules, the critic is never quite sure when the soloist has made an error in judgment. (Like, maybe he wants to play noise.)

The early Coleman albums contained these faults in excess, but were listenable for their occasional flashes of brilliance, and for the excellent rhythm section work which seems to be an integral part of the "new thing". From his latest effort it appears that he is finally learning how to sustain his emotional impact throughout a long solo. And on one selection (Mapa) he and trumpeter Don Cherry engage in an extended simultaneous improvisation which succeeds far better than anything previously attempted in this relatively unexplored area of jazz.

Passin' Thru (Impulse) marks the resurgence of Chico Hamilton. At the same time it illustrates the tremendous impact of Coleman on other jazzmen, some, like Hamilton, older than himself. An early associate of the cool school, Hamilton-led groups had of late degenerated so far as to play jazz even more bloodless than that perpetuated by Henry Mancini. In general, Hamilton aggregations could be counted on to contain a cellist, and to try hard not to offend anyone.

To judge from the Impulse album, things have changed considerably. Tenor saxist Charles Lloyd, the musical director of the quintet, has discovered how to arrange and compose in the Coleman idiom, and the music has taken on a freedom and vitality previously lacking. The musicians also pay conventional heed to chord changes, so the novice should not become easily lost.

Highly recommended are the title track, one of the more memorable jazz compositions, and Lonesome Child, on which Lloyd demonstrates that he is a more than able soloist.

Columbia has recently released Monk's Dream, a new production by pianist Thelonius Monk. Monk has been avoiding recording studios of late, and this album should reaffirm the pianist's place as one of the few authentic jazz geniuses. Once an accompanist for the late Charlie Parker, Monk is not closely associated with the "new thing". But he is probably more progressive than any of his contemporaries, particularly as a composer.

His originals have a bitter, nervous sound to them, and his solos on old standards seem designed to prove that even the tritest selections have unplumbed harmonic depths.

Exclusive rating of local attractions (clip and save): ...

At the Town a girl named Shirley Horn sings pleasantly, but then so do a lot of other girls ... at the Friars' Wild Bill Davis plays the Hammond organ very unpleasantly, but then doesn't everybody except Jimmy Smith and Ray Charles ... at the Colonial Phil Napoleon leads a group which plays traditional jazz with great gusto but little originality ... at the Globe and Mail Patrick Scott is still trying to prove that Charlie Parker and Miles Davis are frauds. Next week: jazz on radio and how to find the little there is.

In defence of a Liberal budget

By Bruce Lewis

Many criticisms can be directed at the Liberal budget of last June 13 but no-one can deny that it exhibited political bravery.

An important plank in the Liberal platform in 1963 was gaining Canadian control over Canadian industry. This was something the Tories, Liberals and New Democrats had been promising for years. The financiers, who supported them in the last campaign, apparently overlooked it in the Liberal program. In any case the Tories were the rabid anti-Americans in the last campaign.

But once in office the Liberals undertook to keep this promise by putting a 30 per-cent tax on sales of shares in Canadian corporations by a Canadian to a non-Canadian.

As it turned out the tax was unworkable. The government stands convicted of haste and bungling. The tax was withdrawn and we now are back where we started.

There is much controversy about whether it matters who owns our industry and whether a sales tax is the way to get industry into Canadian hands.

But there is no doubt about this: The very people who would be most hurt by the tax on stock sales, the very people who would be most likely to fight tooth and nail against it, were those same financiers and stock brokers who had provided financial backing to the Liberal party in the last campaign. In proposing the tax the Liberal party was attacking its own financial support.

In knowingly opposing the interests of, and alienating, its financial support, the Liberal government committed an act of political bravery such as has not been equalled by the New Democratic Party (which never stands up to unions) or by the Conservative party (which put off unpleasant decisions for six years in power). It is all the more amazing and admirable because a minority government did this.

The other item on which the government backed down was the sales tax on construction materials. They did not cancel this tax, but are instituting it by stages over a three-year period. The opponents of this tax say that it is horrible. It will have the effect of increasing the price of all houses, and therefore will slow up construction, destroy jobs, etc., etc., ad infinitum. The opponents of this tax are right. It will have all the bad effects they say it will have. But what the Liberals have done is not institute a sales tax on construction materials. Rather, they have removed an exemption which the construction industry enjoyed from the general 11-per-cent sales tax on manufactured articles.

Any argument that is used against the sales tax on construction materials can also be used against the sales tax as such. A printer in Toronto points out that he has to pay an 11-per-cent federal tax on his machinery plus a three-per-cent provincial sales tax. When he completes a job for a customer, he has to charge an 11-per-cent federal and 3-per-cent provincial sales tax. (The three-per-cent is charged on the total price including the 11-per-cent. Thus the public is paying taxes on taxes). ....

Because of this "tax jungle" the printer's prices are effectively 15-per-cent higher. Therefore he gets less business, employs fewer people, spends less money, and the economy is retarded. This same argument can be applied to any industry and to the economy as a whole. In times of inflation, high employment, and a runaway economy, a sales tax is a good thing to slow the economy down and bring people to their senses.

In times (such as the present) of chronic recession, high unemployment, and a sluggish economy, a sales tax is an evil and pernicious thing.

In addition to the above defects, a sales tax always falls most heavily on the poor, who are least able to bear it.

The Pearson government has pointed up an inconsistency in an evil. It has eliminated the inconsistency. What it should have done was to eliminate the evil.

There is no reason for a sales tax in our economy. Higher income taxes will raise the same revenue, but distribute the tax burden more fairly, and have a less damaging effect on the natural operation of the market.

But here is the crux of the matter. It is almost a political impossibility to raise taxes. The public is demanding a consistently higher level and greater amount of service from its governments. At the same time irresponsible politicians convince the public that taxes should not be raised, but in fact, lowered. The Pearson government has shown that it is honest and courageous. But it has not been effective. I fear that it will be a long time before this or any government will rationalize our antiquated tax structure and end the drift to complete foreign control of our economy.

This column will be run periodically and is open to all who wish to express their opinions. Contributions should not exceed 500 words.

THREE DOORWAYS TO A REWARDING FUTURE

Here are three attractive plans that cater for the varying circumstances of young men interested in a career as a commissioned officer in the Canadian Army:

1. THE REGULAR OFFICER TRAINING PLAN — This is a tri-service plan under which high school graduates receive advanced education and leadership training at one of the Canadian Services Colleges or at a university to become officers in the Royal Canadian Navy, the Canadian Army or the Royal Canadian Air Force.

2. THE CANADIAN OFFICERS TRAINING CORPS — University undergraduates may obtain a commission by training during their spare time and summer holidays. They are paid for actual training time and, after graduation, may choose either full-time service in the Regular Army or part-time service in the Canadian Army Militia.

3. MEDICAL AND DENTAL SUBSIDIZATION PLANS — These are tri-service plans under which university students in medicine or dentistry can be subsidized during their course and become commissioned medical or dental officers in the Canadian Armed Forces after graduating and obtaining their licence to practise.

You may obtain full information on any of these plans from the local Army Recruiting Station listed in your telephone book.

New College type urged

A completely new kind of college is needed in the Ontario education system, a subcommittee of educationists reported this week.

In a 30-page document submitted Monday to the government advisory committee on education, the committee of presidents of provincially assisted universities and colleges of Ontario recommends the government create a system of colleges which would deal exclusively with applied arts and technology.

This would not only broaden the range of training open to high school graduates but would also aid greatly in taking the pressure of numbers off the universities.

The report states: "If you make the universities do the things that are not their proper function, you ruin their chances of doing properly the things that they alone can do."

In addition, the report recommends that highly-qualified high school teachers be better distributed throughout the province and that those teachers wishing to increase their qualifications should be able to obtain subsidies from their school boards or from the government.

Finally, the committee says that the language of instruction of all subjects in secondary school should be in part French, if we are concerned about producing bilingual citizens. Otherwise, French speaking students will lose facility in their language, and English speaking students will fail to gain a real command of French.

Share to house others

The Share campaign which starts on campus Oct. 14 asks students to look at one of the most simple but valuable aspects of foreign aid — the multiplication of every Canadian dollar when put to use in under-developed countries.

A graphic example of this enormous return on every dollar invested in Share by Canadian students is the construction cost of college residences.

Massey College accommodates about 80 students, and was built at a cost of $2,500,000. This is considered as a standard cost for the sufficiently-appointed North American residence of the day. Eighty students in the Congo, Nyasaland or other parts of Africa could be housed at a local college for $250 in Canadian funds.

The facts of modern standards of living and currency exchange are that simple. And the power of your Share dollar is made more buoyant by the fact that a Share dollar is a self-help dollar. It is an additional gift to underprivileged students from the

A residence at an African university

World University Service, Share's organizer, but is backed-up by donations from the students themselves.

The foreign students also work at the college to streamline costs. WUS knows, then, that an original $2,500,000 could accommodate about 8,000 underprivileged — but determined — African students.

WUS operates on the premise that every student the world over is a WUS member, and that this fellowship should encourage a responsibility among members. On this basis, which might seem superfluous to mention, the support of Share by the average Ontario student seems one of noblesse oblige.

But for purely economic reasons, our support of Share is a bargain too big for us to miss and too decisive for an African student to be denied.

Funeral for Prof. Satterly

Funeral service was held Thursday for Professor John Satterly, 83, professor emeritus of the department of physics, University of Toronto. Prof. Satterly died Tuesday at his home on Bernard Ave.

Born in England, he became a graduate doctor of science at the Royal College of Science, University of London, in 1908.

He joined the University of Toronto in 1912.

During the Second World War, he supervised the university lecture courses for the Royal Canadian Air Force radio technicians.

He was the author of various textbooks on physics and after retirement he wrote a number of papers for technical journals.

Liberals need tough tactics

Alan Borovoy, the executive secretary of the Ontario Labor Committee for Human Rights, said Wednesday one must be unpleasant to win human rights.

He spoke to a New Democrat-sponsored meeting on tactics used by anti-segregationists.

Borovoy cited bus boycotts, sit-in demonstrations, and freedom rides in the U.S. as direct and fast mass action. He asserted that the Negro is no longer wasting years in court actions but is wearing down the segregationists by hitting the pocket-books of business.

Mr. Borovoy asserted that because the demonstrators do not behave in an undignified manner, they attract moderates and give the Negro self-respect. He says that the Negro is not fighting to be liked but to be employed. He said in Canada the main problem comes from businessmen — resort owners, landowners, and apartment superintendents — who do not want to risk losing money from other clients by admitting Negroes. Some people who favor human rights seem to fear publicly standing up for them.

In conclusion, Mr. Borovoy said he felt American democracy is showing real dynamism and that many problems will be solved in our life-time.

Baby Blues ready for Western

By Gordon Bellmore

"Airlift" has become a term as common to football fans as "linebacker" or "field goal". Hamilton Tiger-Cats, have employed the airlift with considerable success, Toronto Argonauts with less.

The most recent exponent of this usually expensive manoeuvre is Varsity Baby Blues, who open their season tomorrow in London against Western Colts. To the delight of Coaches Dave Creswell and John Casey, Baby Blues' airlift will be the cheapest one on record.

The only expense involved is the energy required to move a set of football equipment across the hall from Varsity Blues' dressing room to Baby Blues' quarters.

The Rinkies have this week added seven players who trained with the senior Blues, five backfielders and two linemen. The addition of this personnel is virtually guaranteed to turn Baby Blues into the powerhouse of the three-team, intermediate league.

At least three and perhaps four of the latest arrivals will jump right into Rinkies' starting backfield tomorrow at Western. Fullbacks Ron Peroff and Pete Sutherland will provide a strong inside running punch. Andy Szandter, a fine blocker and receiver, and John Rumble, a rookie, will play flanker and halfback respectively.

The quarterback will be Craig Williamson, a product of Victoria College's Mulock Cup champions.

The two recent linemen acquired from Blues are tackle Jim Fowell and guard Terry Bates. The other newcomer is halfback-quarterback Chris Speyer.

Baby Blues should be the class of the league once they play together for a while. But tomorrow they have the tough task of playing a league game without the benefit of any exhibition contests to iron out the wrinkles and sharpen the timing.

Western Colts defeated Windsor AKO in an exhibition game.

Behind The Bench: Ranny Parker, ace guard and clown prince of the squad, arrived back after a week's absence. This budding architect was away at a sketch camp... Rinkies have a few minor injuries. Halfback Dick Krol, who has been impressive, will sit out but Jim Rhodes will play despite a sore arm.

Interfac roundup

PHE makes good in first try

By Al Schoenborn

In its first interfaculty entry independent of University College, Physical and Health Education captured the Novice and Freshman Track Meet at Varsity Stadium Wednesday.

With 64 points, PHE almost doubled the count on runner-up UC which compiled 36. Last year's winner Victoria placed third with 32 points.

Uve Scharge was a one-man show for Architecture as he scored victories in the 100, 220, and 440-yard events. He personally gave Architecture its 15 points and a fourth-place finish.

Tim Purves of Dentistry was a double winner, taking the discus and shotput events, while Ted Terry earned firsts in the broad jump and hop, step and jump for PHE. UC's Guston Dacks led the field in both the 880 yards and the mile.

Victories were also scored for PHE by Jim Holowachuk (pole vault), Bob Awrey (120 yard Hurdles), Andy Klimas (javelin), and the sprint relay team.

Defending champ Vic got its only victory in the high jump, won by Larry De Rocher. The three-mile run was taken by UC's Bob Manning.

With the lacrosse season scheduled to start next Thursday, Oct. 10, here is a look at this year's prospects. Group I will see Dents, undefeated in Group II competition last year, join St. Mikes A, PHE I, Vic I and Meds A.

The Dafeo Trophy champions, St. Mikes A, appear once more the team to beat but Phys Ed, with Don Arthurs, should give the Double Blue a healthy run for the money. Finalists last year, Vic I has been severely depleted by the loss of such stars as Dave Grist and is a questionmark, as are Meds A and Dents. Three teams will qualify for the playoffs.

Teams from Pharmacy, SPS I, Meds B, and UC will make up Group II, the top two to enter the playoffs. Group III will consist of four teams, while also advance to the playoffs.

Lacrosse seems to hold some mysterious attraction for would-be doctors. There are no less than five teams entered by the Faculty of Medicine in the 20-team setup.

Odds favor Gaels to win Yates Cup

By RICK KOLLINS

Varsity Sports Editor

TEAM NAME: Queen's University Golden Gaels.

Colors: Blue, Red and Gold.

HEAD COACH: Frank Tindall.

ASSISTANT COACHES: Al Lenard, Hal McCarney, Doug Hargreaves.

HOME FIELD: George Richardson Memorial Stadium, Kingston, Ont.

SEATING CAPACITY: 11,000.

1962 REVIEW

Gaels were rated as the best in the intercollegiate league last season with 27 veterans in the fold. But their downfall came with an inability to defeat McGill Redmen. Queen's only two losses during the regular season were to Redmen. And then McGill and Tom Skyepek took care of Gaels again in the Yates Cup playoff to win the title. Although Gaels outplayed Redmen in the title game they were unable to withstand Skyepek's last-minute heroics, which gave McGill a 15-13 win.

JIM YOUNG

CAL CONNOR

Gaels' veterans carried the load in 1962 but it was a rookie, fullback Jim Young, who provided the Tricolor with the biggest backfield threat in the league. Young was sensational in his rookie season and was an overwhelming choice as the fullback on the Coaches' All-Star Team.

Other Gaels chosen as all-stars were centre Terry Porter, guard John Erickson, rookie middle guard Merv Daub, linebacker Don Plumley and defensive back Kent Plumley.

Young, Erickson and Daub are back with Queen's while the others have graduated.

1963 OUTLOOK

Gaels are loaded once again with 26 lettermen returning, 17 of them first-stringers. Among the missing are backs Bill Sirman, Garry West, Robin Ritchie, the Quinn brothers (John and Peter) and the Plumleys. Pete Quinn is now with Ottawa Roughriders. Also gone are ends John Futa and Jack De La Vergne, linebackers Dave Skene and Fred Endley and centre Porter.

The only place Gaels have been hurt by graduation is on defence; in the secondary and the backfield. But they have enough reserves from last season to fill most spots with experienced personnel.

The only new faces in Coach Tindall's start-lineup at the moment are defensive back Marshall Nicholishen and linebacker Tom Beynon. Nicholishen is also Gaels' second quarterback behind veteran Cal Connor and Beynon is a 6' 4", 250-pound third-year student out with the team for the first time.

Gaels' obvious strength is experience. In Connor, Erickson, Pete Thompson (converted from tackle to end), guard Bill Miklas and linemen Don and Laird Rasmussen, Queen's has a crew of players who could qualify for a pension if the league offered one.

Connor, Thompson, Erickson and Miklas have had try-outs with pro teams and would probably be playing in the CFL today if they weren't still in school.

And above all, Young and Connor present the most dangerous singular offensive threats in the league.

Gaels also have some added advantages over last year's powerhouse. Halfback Bill Edwards, runner-up for the scoring championship in 1961, is back after sitting out last season with injuries; Larry Ferguson, a capable end and punter from Western, has entered Business Administration at Queen's; and halfback Glen Robinson from Ottawa University appears to be a star in the Young manner. Fullback Pete Broadhurst from North Toronto Collegiate is also healthy after a season of injuries.

PREDICTION

Golden Gaels have depth, talent and experience at almost every position. Coach Tindall rates his offence as the best he's had in his many years at Queen's. And observers around the league go as far as to say Queen's may field the strongest team ever to play Canadian college football.

With all these advantages Gaels are capable of winning all six of their games. But even the best of teams has one poor day during a season. Gaels will finish in first place with five wins and one setback.

Grid season opens

By SHEL KRAKOFSKY
Associate Sports Editor

The Ontario-Quebec Athletic Association unveils another season of football tomorrow as Western Mustangs journey to McGill and Varsity Blues go to Queen's. Varsity's game against Golden Gaels should give a sound indication of this year's OQAA champions. Both teams have the most returning players with Queen's having a slight edge in this department.

McGill coach Bill Bewley and his Western counterpart, John Metras, will field teams which will include many rookies. Both teams lost heavily through graduation and academic ineligibility and this will be a definite disadvantage in the race for the Yates Cup. McGill won the cup last year.

U of T coach Dalt White, not known for making predictions, gives his team the upper hand against Queen's.

"It's going to be a long hard battle but I think we can beat them," said White.

General consensus around Blues' dressing room last night echoed White's feelings. The players feel they have the coaching and the horses to bring Toronto its first championship since 1958. There have been conflicting reports coming out of Kingston as to the nature and seriousness of all-star fullback Jim Young's injury. Frank Tindall told The Varsity Young had suffered a leg injury and only gave the powerful running-back a 50-50 chance of playing tomorrow. Other reports emanating from Tindall say that the injury to Young is to his ribs. White is quite sure Young will play against Blues and Varsity assistant coach John McManus feels the same way. "If he (Tindall) says that Young has a 50-50 chance, then Young will play," said McManus.

After looking at the movies of last week's game against Western, White isn't going to make any major lineup changes. He thought the team played well but added they could have scored two or three more touchdowns. Varsity players selected their co-captains for the coming season. Linebacker Ray German, formerly with OAC and in his first season with Blues, was chosen along with Bill Watters, who plays both linebacker and fullback. Watters has been with the team for three years.

There has been some question as to the eligibility of two Queen's players, fullback Glen Robinson and defensive halfback Guy Potvin. The two have transferred from University of Ottawa, where they enrolled in first-year science, to second-year Civil Engineering at Queen's.

Under OQAA rules, a player may not change colleges and be eligible for Intercollegiate competition unless he has completed a course at one school and is furthering his education at another. Both did not complete their courses at Ottawa and are therefore not eligible under OQAA by-laws.

But coach Tindall and Queen's athletic representative to the executive committee of the OQAA, Dr. Oren Carson, claim the two are eligible because engineering is not offered at University of Ottawa.

Toronto's representative to the executive committee, Dean J. W. B. Sisam of Forestry, has agreed with Carson, and Robinson and Potvin have been ruled eligible.

QUICK QUICKS: Doug Phibbs will replace flanker Dave Galloway in Blues' starting backfield tomorrow. Galloway has a slight charley-horse... Mike Meredith has left the team in favor of a weekend job at the YMCA... St. Francis Xavier, defeated by Blues in last year's Atlantic Bowl, downed McGill 14-7 in an exhibition game last week.

crop of talent that Blues boast more top-flight players than they can play regularly. The rugby club front office has spent a difficult week trying to decide on the starting line-up.

The only newcomers to break into last year's undefeated squad are John McNeil, Gethin Hughes, and Bob Dodds. McNeil and Hughes were former captains at Queen's and Cardiff Universities respectively. Dodds was a member of Blues' 1961 league champions.

Blues' star-studded line-up is not expected to intimidate Gaels. Despite the loss of McNeil, Queen's should again provide Varsity with its strongest team ever. Captain Dave Torbett has several players with first team experience, and a number of rookies have improved substantially.

The Intermediates accompany Blues to Kingston for a game with Queen's Seconds. The senior game gets under way at 11 a.m., before the Football game.

THE BEARD OF THE PROPHET RETURNS

And it came to pass in the sixty-second year of the twentieth century in the seventh year of the Almighty Dalt, 12 months before our day, that the Chosen People of the Northern Shore were at peace, treating their wounds of forgotten battles. Israel was suffering, the heroic warrior-leader who had given of himself in battle. The Children of Israel were solemn and they were of hope.

But on the mournful Sabbath in the tenth month, another enemy came forth from the East, from whence the mighty of Red and White had traversed before. These were of a new hand, with banners of three colors, yet blue, gold and flaming blood red. They called upon their leader as Cal, begat of Connor, a man too stricken with wounds of battle. But he came with strength, his wrist bandaged with the blessings of the Great Tindall.

And the children of Israel, without their leader, were strong of heart but weak of weapon. The generals, one from the family of tailors and the other of the heralded Halls of Port Credit, were strong of heart. But the new invaders were with the power of the East.

And it came to pass that the battle was waged on the striped field of Varsity, one band facing the other. The chosen warriors of the Northern Shore gave of their souls but 'twas not enough. The Colossus of Rhodes was stricken from the battle in the early moments and was not to rise again.

When the dust returned from whence it has arisen, the scroll at the north of the battlefield gave the word of 32 vanquished from the Chosen People whilst only 13 had seen the last of Tindall's eyes.

And the invaders from the East went again to their Town of Kings, to frolic in their glory and plot new victories over the Red Warriors of their neighbouring land and the purple-coated peasants of the far west.

But in the end it came to pass that the invaders of the three-colored banner were smitten by the red of the Great Skyspeck, to return to their Town of Kings and treat their wounds. And there they remained for nie on until the sun made its voyage around the domestic sphere.

AND THE MESSENGER BROUGHT OF NEW BATTLES

And it came to pass in this month of the sixty-third year in the eighth year of the Almighty Dalt that a messenger came to the land of the Chosen People. And he spoke of the warriors of the East with their leader of Connor and he told of a challenge to meet the three-colored in their own Town of Kings. And the Almighty Dalt and his wise men gave thought to the challenge and turned to the multitudes for the final word. And the Chosen People gave the word that the camels were rested and the ale barrels swelling with the brew of peace. And it was done.

And the Beard of the Prophet tells of the events and it shall happen as the words from the great mind unfold.

And on the morrow it shall come to pass that the Children of Israel enter the Town of Kings in strength and health. Their multitudes will follow behind the warriors and they will know of the field of battle. Their hearts will be full of hope and their stomachs full of the ale of peace.

And it will be a new brand of warriors, not like the vanquished that faced the men of Connor before. Some of the faces will be of old but the spirit and fighting will be of a new era. The leader of Israel will march in the front and he of the tailors and the Halls of Port Credit will be there. They will come from the running Watters, from the province of the Germans, from the families of the Polds, Kellys, and The Master Bates. And there will be the Fisherman, and he whom the children call upon as the Moose.

But alas, the warriors of Connor are of the same strength as old and they cannot be of the vanquished. James The Young, the Son of Erick, the Son of Robin, and the warriors from the tribes of Miklas, Thompson, Shaw and Edwards will follow the Great Connor and not turn back.

And the blows of affliction from the weapons of the Chosen People will be strong. But they will not furnish to the fullness of victory. The warriors of Connor shall smite 25 of the Chosen whilst only 16 of the three-colored with fall. And the Children of Israel will return to the Northern Shore without shame because their pride will be as medicine for their wounds. And the Almighty Dalt will see through the clouds the light of a new life, a new hope, a new era.

KOLLINS KANDID PROGNOSTICATION

If anyone doesn't grasp the above prophecy... Queen's 25 Varsity 16... In the other game, McGill's home advantage gives Redmen a 16-14 win over Western... Season's Record: one right, none wrong.

Ruggerites open season with strongest team ever

By COLLEEN KELLY

After a sleepless week for Coach Dick Gaetor and Captain Paul Wilson, Varsity Rugger Blues should take the strongest fifteen in the University's history to Kingston tomorrow for the league opener against Queen's. Four consecutive years of intercollegiate rugger supremacy has reaped such a surplus

McGill may lose starting QB for opener

As if things aren't bad enough, McGill Redmen may be without their first-string quarterback when they open the senior intercollegiate football season tomorrow against Western Mustangs in Montreal.

Glen St. John, a newcomer from Carleton University, has been suffering from a bout with the flu this week and McGill coach Bill Bewley doubts if he will be ready for tomorrow's game.

If St. John is unable to start, Redmen will go with Gary Cullen, who played for McGill's Intermediate Indians and was back-up man for Tom Skyspeck two seasons back. Bewley said he is confident Cullen can handle the job if he gets good blocking. Redmen have been high on St. John, who is expected to make McGill fans take the loss of All-Star Skyspeck a little easier. Skyspeck graduated last spring after three great years in the intercollegiate loop.

by LYN OWEN

Ronald Mills always had a wave and a smile for people who drove past his little grey hut at the Wellesley St. bridge entrance to the campus.

He died last week at the age of 28.

His wife Betty Ann had known he was ill for the past month. He had entered hospital for an exploratory operation Sept. 19. He had cancer. Betty Ann knew he had six weeks to live. He never left hospital.

His illness was incredibly brief. He left his job as University of Toronto parking attendant Aug. 1 because he felt sick. Exactly two months later he was dead.

His daughter Sheryl, 4, and a 20-month-old son live in Aurora, Ont., with Betty Ann's parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Waite. For the past several years she has been looking after her mother, an invalid requiring permanent nursing care. This task and caring for the two children prevent her from working.

Ronald began working at the university last Nov. 1. He was soon to be promoted from his parking attendant position to that of a regular member of the campus police force.

Under university policy, a man in Ronald's position is granted membership in the U of T staff employee group insurance plan after completing a one-year probationary period beginning in July — the start of the academic year.

Because Ronald joined the staff after July 1, 1962, his probation period couldn't even start until the following July.

So although Ronald worked on campus for nearly a year, the U of T has no legal responsibility — although perhaps a moral one — to aid his family financially.

His payments into a pension plan will be returned to his wife. But they'll amount to less than $100.

His replacement says many people have asked what happened to the cheerful young man they drove or walked past every day.

"They said: 'I looked forward to seeing him every day. He had a wave, a smile and a good morning for everyone.'"

Other attendants and police officers were equally warm in their praise of a man with an outstanding personality and an enthusiastic approach to his job.

During Ronald's stay in hospital his friends from the U of T police took turns visiting him regularly.

Seven officers and the chief of the department served as pallbearers at the funeral in Aurora.

The Students' Administrative Council and The Varsity have set up a fund for Ronald's family in appreciation of his service.

Contributions are being received at the SAC office.

Elect French Canadian as CUS president

EDMONTON (Special) — Jean Bazin of Laval University was elected president of the Canadian Union of Students here Friday, replacing Dave Jenkins of the University of Alberta.

Bazin won the post in a contest with Malcolm Scott, University of British Columbia. CUS is the new name adopted by the old National Federation of Canadian University Students which was reshaped during the congress to give French speaking students a greater voice in its affairs.

The organization now consists of a French and an English caucus, replacing the previous structure of four regional groups.

The new structure is organized in provincial groups with the intent of strengthening representations to provincial governments.

Ronald Montcalm of the University of Montreal and Patrick Kenniff of Loyola College, Montreal, were appointed CUS vice-presidents by the French and English caucuses, respectively.

Named to the board of directors were Ronald Fecteau, University of Sherbrooke, Bert Johnson, Montreal, and Remi Bouchard, Laval, by the French caucus; and Dan Thatchuk, University of Alberta, David Caset, University of Ottawa and Mary Maher, Mount St. Bernard College, Antigonish, by the English caucus.

The Friday night plenary session also condemned racial discrimination in the United States. The executive was instructed to protest "vigorously to the appropriate authorities any violation of the rights of Negro students" in the U.S. They also agreed each campus should give priority to a study of "a new concept of Confederation" within the framework of a joint committee of students and professors.

Other resolutions included condemnation of the Apartheid policy of South Africa, a proposal for an international boycott of South African goods, an embargo on arms shipments to South Africa and criticism of the South Vietnam government intervention in its universities and detention of Buddhist students.

The five-member Toronto delegation, led by Students' Administrative Council president Doug Ward (III Emm), returns to Toronto this morning.

Massey gives control to master and fellows

The possession and control of Massey College were turned over to the master and fellows at the College's formal opening Friday night.

Rt. Hon. Vincent Massey presented Dr. Robertson Davies, the first master of the college, with a silver cup, in token of friendship, and a visitor's book, symbol of hospitality. More than 130 persons, including President Claude Bissell, faculty members, students and wives, attended the half-hour ceremony in the college dining room.

In presenting the two symbols on behalf of the Massey Foundation, Mr. Massey said the purpose of the college was made obvious by its physical existence and the able graduate students who made up the first group of junior fellows.

When Dr. Davies was about to reply he was interrupted from the back of the room by Robert Dinsmore, one of the Junior Fellows.

In a prepared speech in rhymed couplets Dinsmore announced himself as the traditional Terrae Filius. This position, meaning "son of the earth," has been applied to academic critics for several centuries.

Dinsmore appealed on behalf of the junior fellows, saying they were watched so closely by their seniors and the university that they were unable to study.

Give us time and peace, he said, and we will make your college for you. He ended his speech with an appeal to Mr. Massey, as official college visitor, for a judgment on the justice of his plea.

A college visitor is a traditional official to whom serious complaints may be addressed by anyone associated with a college who feels himself aggrieved.

Mr. Massey's reply to the appeal was also in rhymed couplets. He expressed sympathy and promised that peace and good fellowship would reign in the college.

As a further gesture of peace Mr. Massey ordered the college bell, called St. Catharine, to be rung. He then extended an invitation to the assembly to adjourn to the common room for further refreshments.

Barry O'Neill, CUCND president, greets frosh at the Freshman Welcome in Varsity Arena Friday. He did not explain how effective a gas mask would be in fending off nuclear fallout.

CUP COMMENT

For students interested in the goings-on at universities across Canada and elsewhere:

University of British Columbia

Girls at UBC are edgy and officials of the university seriously worried as a result of several cases of indecent assault occurring since the beginning of this year.

Up until now seven incidents have been reported. Police say there may have been more but girls are too embarrassed to report them.

Precautions taken include regular warnings at residence meeting, recall of residence keys and increased lighting. Of course, police are busy on the case as well.

University of Western Ontario

A judicial committee with power to fine or recommend dismissal of students charged with improper conduct has been established by Western's students council.

The committee will be able to charge students with misconduct and hold hearings at which their guilt or innocence will be decided. Fines may be levied up to $50.

The establishment of this committee is a move by the council to extend control of student behavior at university functions and on university property. Included in this aim is a desire to control rowdiness at dances and football games.

Ryerson Institute of Technology

A novel approach helped one bright fellow at Ryerson to sell 15 used books in 15 minutes. He just stood by his car and tossed the books into the air.

The Ryersonian, Ryerson's student paper, felt his success was due to his sales pitch.

McMaster University

At McMaster this year, the hazing of freshman by upperclassman was put on trial basis. As the McMaster student paper, The Silhouette, dramatically put it:

"Tuesday night was a crisis in the history of McMaster orientations."

Concern over the matter arose after the kidnapping of two freshman who were compelled to walk several miles home at midnight.

Student Council President John McLennan said initiation programs could only be continued if there were no further "incidents." Apparently there were none and initiations will continue at McMaster.

But freshman were not terribly enthusiastic about the tradition. Commented one: "It stinks."

NEWS IN BRIEF

Alan Jarvis, past curator of the National Gallery in Ottawa, editor of Canadian Art magazine, and one of Canada's best known art experts, will discuss the Emily Carr Retrospective exhibition which now is on display in the Hart House Art Gallery. The talk will take place in the gallery next week. The exact date has yet to be announced, pending final arrangements with Mr. Jarvis.

Queen's University officials said Friday a $2,900,000 biology teaching and research centre will be built with completion deadline for next year.

Discusses atheist's Bible

The Atheists — Marx, Freud and Nietzsche interpreted the Bible in different ways, they but form a common pattern, a prominent French philosopher said Friday.

Professor Paul Ricoeur of the Sorbonne discussed hermeneutics — the interpretation of Scriptures — in the fourth Laidlaw lecture.

Marx could interpret the scriptures as class struggle; Nietzsche as the revenge of the weak against the strong; and Freud views the Bible as mental aberration in man. Prof. Ricoeur said their three approaches make up a critique of culture such that a new negative hermeneutics becomes possible. Despite their limited approaches a general critique of religion appears.

Professor Ricoeur said they shared three common traits which go beyond their individual limitations. They feel a "negative" (hostile) tension against the religious "object" and religious experience.

This, combined with a new way of deciphering appearances and their actual research for a reason for being, makes many of their writings not arguments but denunciations, he said. But, whatever their differences they all make an effort toward the demystification of scriptures. This approach while a negative one, is caused by a genuine will to understand the text, he added.

The Old Testament is filled with meanings and prophcies which are explained and fulfilled in the New which, in turn, is a text to be interpreted.

Prof. Ricoeur says that we should continue to interpret the Bible in terms of our own life and reality.

Prof. Ricoeur concluded the lecture series last Friday with an "introduction, rather than a conclusion, to the problem of hermeneutics".

Prof. Ricoeur defined the term "symbol" as "a meaning of meaning" and explained that a symbol says more than it appears to say because it contains implied meanings.

In order to understand symbols, a philosopher must discuss their philosophic basis, their common structure and their variety and breadth.

Next the importance of subordinating myth to symbol was discussed on the basis that myths are actually symbolic structures.

"Myth explains how things began," he said, "but the function of myth as an explanation does not exhaust its meaning."

He pointed out that the philosopher's task is to disentangle the symbolic structure from the myth.

Prof. Ricoeur said he feels the problem of hermeneutics is two-fold. First the philosopher must show how the symbolic language is relevant, the problem of vindication. Then there is the possibility of having several correct interpretations, the problem of arbitration.

Professors called stubborn

WASHINGTON, D.C. (Special) - College professors are accused of conservatism and stubbornness in a report issued here Saturday.

A national survey on the use of new technology in college classrooms reports that however promising are new techniques, "with few exceptions . . . college teaching seems to go on as always."

The survey — New Media in Higher Education — outlines ways in which television, films, tape recordings, "teaching machines" and telephone hookups are being used on American campuses. But the book concludes:

"There is even some resentment of faculty members at the financial investment in such experiments.

"After the experiments have been completed . . . the matter too frequently is dropped or is reinterpreted so as to leave undisturbed the slow waltz of lecturing, testing, and grading which is the conduct of education."

New Media in Higher Education was published by the Association for Higher Education and the Division of Audiovisual Instructional Service — both affiliates of the National Education Association.

Liberals seek new members

The University of Toronto Liberal Club will seek a greatly expanded membership this year, club president Michael Levine (III UC) told the first general meeting.

"In the past," he said, "the membership has largely been confined to Arts and Science and to Law."

The objective of the membership campaign this year will be "get out to the faculties." Preliminary plans for the drive, announced at the meeting, included the appointment of representatives at each college and faculty, and a round robin tour with a booth set up for two days at various campus locations.

Levine also announced the club's intention to "stay away from doctrinaire party politics" in an attempt to attract as members those interested in politics generally.

Colin Campbell (II Vic), who had been provisionally appointed treasurer by the executive, was permanently elected to the position by those in attendance.

a time to give

A member of the university community died last week. Ronald Mills, one of the parking attendants, died of cancer after a month-long illness.

Mr. Mills did not hold a high-paying job, nor did he qualify for the university insurance programs. As a result his wife and two small children find themselves in a serious financial position.

Under circumstances such as these the other members of the university community — staff and students — can best show their appreciation of Mr. Mills' contribution to the campus by coming to the aid of Mrs. Mills.

This newspaper in co-operation with the Students' Administrative Council has opened a fund for Mrs. Mills and her children, to which we ask everyone on campus to contribute.

We ask students not to confuse the collection with the SHARE campaign which begins next week. From a fund raiser's point of view the timing is poor, but that is the way most tragedies occur.

There will be no massive campaign throughout the campus. Those wishing to give something are asked to do so at the SAC office.

We do not ask for large contributions from anyone. But we ask with the knowledge that a small amount of money from a lot of people will grow to a sum which is greatly needed by the family.

answers needed

The possession and control of Massey College was turned over Friday night to the Master and Fellows by the Massey family.

Although a college of this type is much needed at the University of Toronto, several questions need to be raised concerning its relation to the university.

Although we are more than grateful for the donations made to this university by the Massey family, we would like to know what strings were attached to the offer to build Massey College.

We would like to know if the College fits into President Claude Bissell's plans for the future development of the university, or if it conflicts with those plans.

While most of the Senior Fellows, including President Bissell, are members of the university's academic community, several are not. We wonder why the college comes under the jurisdiction of these persons, rather than the Board of Governors.

We wonder why almost all the Senior Fellows are of white, Anglo-Saxon Protestant origin and why almost all of them come from the Massey family circle and from the University of Toronto.

These questions need to be raised because the development of this university — particularly that relating to graduate work — is of great importance.

If Massey College is joining the university on a relationship contrary to expansion plans, it could set a precedent for other actions which may damage the university.

A LITTLE-KNOWN FACT

It is a little known fact that the University of Toronto is allowed to practise one of the most blatant forms of racial discrimination that is known to man — specifically that people can be accepted or rejected because of the way they look.

Granted this practise is sanctioned by the law of this province which in section 4, subsection (b) of the Ontario Human Rights Code says:

"The following does not apply to an exclusively religious, (or) philanthropic (or) educational . . . organization that is not operated for private profit . . ."

Thus University of Toronto is exempted from the following requirements of the Human Rights Code, namely, "that (no person) shall require an applicant to furnish any information concerning race creed or color etc . . ." In short, when University of Toronto's faculties or colleges require of prospective students, photographs of themselves, they are running against the very spirit of the law.

Need I say that one year ago the Students' Administrative Council condemned discrimination. May it be suggested that they should also try and do something about this.

A LITTLE BIT OF IRONY

Leaving aside for the moment the wonderful changes that have occurred in The Varsity's design this year, the Toronto Star's design change raises some interesting questions.

For one, was it by coincidence that the Star made their switch to the "open-up look" just two weeks before "the new look Tely" appears? Most Torontonians won't remember this but about two years ago the Star changed its type face to that recently discarded.

But a week before this change was made the Tely got wind of it and pulled off the switch before the Star did. Needless to say the Star was somewhat embarrassed.

Although the recent move was not as secret, it is interesting to speculate on the motives for choosing the date the Star did.

ARTISTIC ADVENTURES

Trinity College should be congratulated for the purchase of the modern sculpture work that adorns the outside west wall of the Gerald Larkin academic building.

The congratulations are offered not for the choice of an artistic piece of sculpture (this reporter won't presume to judge its merits) but for their courage to do something that hasn't been done before at Varsity.

To our knowledge few other colleges or faculties have either thought to or dared purchase an outdoor sculpture to adorn the otherwise drab lawns on the campus.

There are exceptions, notably

Hart House quadrangle, and Victoria College's Margaret Addison Hall, but these are not enough for a campus such as Toronto.

OF INTEREST

It will be of interest to those who enjoy campus theatre that there will be four differently-directed productions acted by university students at Hart House this year. In the past Robert Gill, this year on a leave of absence, has been in charge of Hart House. The real interest will be not as much in the productions themselves as in the response by the students. In the past few years much criticism has been levied at Mr. Gill for his handling of student theatre.

DISCRIMINATION

An interesting aspect of the weekend exchanges being run this year, was touched on by Richard Pope, of Trinity College, who is administering the Carabin exchange.

In an article which appeared Monday he was quoted as saying that French speaking persons were the only ones wanted on the exchange.

The question to our minds is, that isn't this a form of unwarranted discrimination? If one can't speak French the difficulties that will occur in Quebec are apparent.

But should this mean that persons interested in learning about the problems of French Canada should be disqualified from participating in the weekend?

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

WHO IS FERGUSON?

Sir:

We should like to raise some objections to your pseudo-didactic article from the Weekend Review, entitled A View of the University, by Ferguson. Immediately, we are forced to ask the rhetorical question: "Who is Ferguson?"

We must freely admit that Mr. Ferguson raises some valid points regarding the superficial behaviour of some of the members of his own faculty, namely Engineering. It has long been recognized by the leaders of Skule's "herd" that there is much in the outward appearance of the faculty which can be improved.

We feel that Mr. Ferguson has done harm to the promotion of the rapport among university students; in addition, he has done little to promote professionalism among engineers. Specifically, his allegation that the Engineering Society hopes to benefit by promoting "fictional esprit de corps" is far from accurate. In fact, we believe that there exists a real esprit de corps, distinguishing the Engineers from most of the other faculties and colleges on this campus.

His debasement of our excellent debating society is almost totally unfounded on fact. The fact that a large body of Engineers turns out to support our debates is but one indication of the excellence of our speakers.

The inaccuracy of Mr. Ferguson's allegations against his own faculty indicates that while he may be a registered member of our faculty, he has probably not taken the opportunity further to acquaint himself with his own "herd." In his own probing psychological analysis, Ferguson has admirably demonstrated a common psychological phenomenon: ignorance. In his article he has shown us that it is possible to be a member of a group and know very little about it.

It is rather unfortunate that Ferguson subscribes to the view so often suggested by students of various pseudo-intellectual, pseudo-traditional, and pseudo-spirited groups in this university, who have never met an Engineer. Therefore, we doubt the existence of the alleged Engineer Ferguson, and once again we enquire:

WHO IS FERGUSON?

Yours respectively,
D. M. Q. Monro, President
Michael Kisly,
Vice-President
David N. Ferrence,
Engineering Observer
(Ferguson's name has been misplaced through an editorial oversight, so you will have to take our word that he is an Engineer. Further, although we do not care much one way or another about Engineering Society activities, we find any attempts to justify these actions even more ludicrous than the Engineering Society itself. Ed.)

PRAISES FAIRNESS

Sir:

For several years The Varsity has had a reputation for unfairness and inaccuracy in reporting the activities of religious societies on campus — that is, where it bothered to report at all.

In the past year, however, your paper has shown increased maturity in giving adequate and interesting coverage to this area of campus life, which, after all, commands the interest of at least as many students as campus politics or athletics.

The incident which prompts me to write is the reporting of VCF Frosh Intro in Wednesday's Varsity. I want to commend your reporter on his objectivity and accuracy in describing what was said at this meeting.

He did not indulge the temptation to slander through distortion and double entendre, a temptation to which other reporters have often succumbed in dealing with ours and other Christian University groups.

Dents School studying effects of Strontium 90

By SUSAN STUMPF

Teeth collected from all parts of Canada by the Voice of Women are being sent to the Faculty of Dentistry as part of a research program on the Strontium 90 content in children's teeth.

The purpose of this research is to determine the discrimination factor — the amount of Strontium 90 that passes through the "food chain" to man.

Dr. Murray Hunt, of the University of Toronto dental faculty, says the results of this project after four years of research are still doubtful. But they indicate that about one-fifth of the Strontium 90 consumed by man becomes part of his teeth or bones.

The teeth, received in carefully labeled envelopes, are stored in tubes with others of the same age and type. About 37 chemical processes are needed to remove the Strontium from the pulverized teeth. This is then subjected to a radiation count for a period of about two weeks.

The results of these tests are recorded on various charts. On looking at these one sees there is a strong correlation between bomb testing and the amount of Strontium 90 in teeth. While nuclear tests were suspended between 1958 and 1961 a marked decrease in the Strontium content in teeth was observed. On the resumption of atmospheric testing, this quantity rapidly rose past its previous high.

While Canada has one of the highest fallout counts in the world, Dr. Hunt said in an interview that there is no need as yet, to take steps to have this substance removed from milk. But he said it is generally agreed that more than 70 Strontium 90 units per gram of calcium in the bone would be dangerous and could result in bone tumors or leukemia in some persons.

Women invading Pharmacy

The lab coat is no longer sacred male property.

Today women are invading men's domains in all fields of endeavor—even in the University of Toronto Pharmacy faculty.

This year 137 of 394 students in Pharmacy are women, 35 per cent of the total enrolment. This number has crept up from the 12-13 per cent of post-war years to the present total.

F. N. Hughes, dean of Pharmacy, says rapid hospital expansion and the discovery of new drugs demand more trained pharmacists.

Each year 300-400 new formulas are calculated, he said, of which 30-40 contain new substances.

What makes Pharmacy attractive to women?

The "dual nature" of pharmacy plays an important role in their decision. Good jobs are immediately available and part-time work in the field is readily available. Opportunities are increasing in the field of retail work, hospital pharmacies and controlled laboratory work in industry.

"In the future," the dean predicts, "the field of marketing where new preparations are introduced directly to the doctors, will be invaded by women."

The course extends four years. Eighteen months of which 12 must be consecutive are spent in apprenticeship. The graduate then becomes a member of the Ontario College of Pharmacy.

The new pharmacy building, corner of Russell and Huron, attractively decorated in blues and browns, offers more room and advanced technical facilities.

U of T students lead space course sponsored by NASA

"I was never very good at mechanical things," quipped one fourth-year engineering science student.

The speaker — Barry Sherman — and classmate Lloyd Reid (IV ASPC), returned to University of Toronto recently, the proud possessors of the only A-plus marks among 52 students at a six-week Columbia University space science course.

From eight different countries, the students converged on New York for the course, sponsored by the United States national aeronautics and space administration department.

The two U of T students were chosen along with two other Canadians and 42 U. S. candidates, from 200 applicants.

Only 11 students are taking the aeronautical — astronautical engineering option at U of T in fourth year, while fewer are taking it in third year, the first year that students can take the course. No other university in Canada offers the space science option.

After spending five weeks under sole lecturer Dr. Robert Jastrow, director of the Columbia institute of space studies, the two 21-year old students, along with their 50 mates, spent one week flying to five different space observation stations operated by NASA. These included: Tucson, Ariz., Huntsville, Ala., Cape Canaveral, Fla., Washington, D. C., and Greenbelt, Md.

Two tests and periodic problems provided the basis for the top honors given to the two U of T students, studying planetary atmospheres and astrophysics. The tour capped off the course, providing practical application of rocketry and satellite launching and testing.

Both Sherman and Reid echoed sentiments of "always liking maths and sciences," which eventually led the two students to their present courses.

Reid said: "I was always interested in models. I used to build model airplanes and boats. I just finished a 14-foot runabout, and I'm working on a sports car now."

Upon graduation in the spring, they were uncertain about the future. Neither expects to work for NASA, at least not for a while.

Sherman has his sights set on graduate work at either U of T or Massachusetts Institute of Technology, while Reid plans to remain at Toronto for a Master of Applied Science degree.

To hoot or to hoot not

By GERRY LAPKIN

The ABC-TV network may produce its Hootenanny show at the University of Toronto this fall.

At first thought, this announcement sounds like a prime opportunity to publicize and present the university to a large North American audience. To do so would mean that the university would have to align itself with the producers of this show and offer them the facilities by which it could be video-taped.

But does this show merely represent an effort to present folk music in a campus setting? The answer is no. It also represents that inbred institution of contemporary American life — the blacklist.

It has become known that the Hootenanny show has refused to allow such performers as Pete Seeger and the Weavers to appear on its stage. The reason is to be found in the fact that Seeger was charged with contempt of Congress when he refused to respond to Senator Joe McCarthy's accusations that his singing was un-American.

Seeger's conviction last year was recently quashed and thus he is guilty of nothing more than being a citizen of the United States.

The Weavers are guilty of only one thing: associating with Seeger. The producers of Hootenanny did not accept the Court's findings. They have set up their own tribunal and have pronounced both Seeger and the Weavers guilty.

It seems strange in contrast to the treatment accorded them in their native country that both Pete Seeger and the Weavers have appeared here on many occasions.

It is bitterly amusing to add that while they still refuse to allow Seeger on Hootenanny, the producers seem to have nothing against the songs which Seeger wrote and made famous. These songs include Where Have All The Flowers Gone, The Hammer Song, Oleanna, Kisses Sweeter Than Wine, Gonna Travel On, and Greenland Whale Fisheries.

Even more sardonic is the fact that Seeger is the person who coined the word "hootenanny," for use in its present context. The true character of the show became known when the producers refused to allow the Tarriers to appear. It seems that the Tarriers contained members of both the white and Negro races, and this fact would make the show unacceptable to the bigots of the southern United States. But when it became apparent that the civil rights movements would take effective measures against Hootenanny if the Tarriers were banned because of their multi-racial nature, the producers succumbed and the Tarriers appeared.

It is as a result of Hootenanny's blacklist that measures have been taken against the program. One program, video-taped at Rutgers University, was picketed by 400 students who were protesting the blacklist.

Joan Baez, who is the top-selling individual folk singer in the United States, made Pete Seeger's participation a pre-requisite for her appearance. She has still not appeared, and is a glaring omission.

Theodore Bikel appeared only after he received Seeger's assurances that it would be the best thing to do under the circumstances.

Since then, the Greenbriar Boys, Barbara Dane, Tom Paxton, and Jack Elliott have all turned down invitations to appear on Hootenanny. The future holds prospects of many more refusals from other folk singers.

The student body of the University of Toronto must decide if it will support the Hootenanny show when it comes to Toronto. If it is decided to associate with the program in its production here, it will also mean that we have become associated with what the program stands for. In this case, our indifference will mean that the University of Toronto concurs with the decision of the producers of Hootenanny in blacklisting performers as a result of their political beliefs; or, to be more exact, as a result of their alleged political beliefs. If we do oppose the blacklist, and everything it stands for, action — not apathy — should be our answer.

What is the image which the student body wants to reveal to North America? Do we want to show ourselves as the carbon copy of an advertising agency's image of the typical college student? Or do we instead want to present an accurate picture of ourselves, without sacrificing any of the ideals that this university stands for? Is it not better to show ourselves as we really are — a politically aware, eagerly learning, liberal group of young people?

Should we be proud of the fact that we will allow any group, regardless if communist, socialist, or fascist, to say what it pleases and when it pleases — or should we be proud of a student body that sells its ideals for the price of a television exposure?

Can we, in fact, support a show which discriminates against a man because of what he allegedly believes?

In short, can we support Hootenanny? The answer is no! My position can best be summed up in the words of Irwin Silber, the editor of Sing Out, who said: "A degree of responsibility must also be borne by all who associate themselves with the Hootenanny program, for the evil of blacklisting lives, too, by the quiet compliance of decent and honest people . . . Pete Seeger and the Weavers will survive the blacklist. The question is, will we?"

University and Education Night

The University of Toronto will undertake a pedestrian traffic count on the Main Campus during the fall, and it will require the services of approximately 50 students for this purpose on October 1, 1963, October 4th and October 7th. Three counts will be taken a day between 8:10 and 9:10 a.m.; between 12:10 and 2:10 p.m., and between 4:10 and 6:10 p.m. The enumerators will be posted at designated points on the Campus. They will count the student movements in different directions during these periods. The University will pay $1.25 per hour for such help, and any persons interested are requested to contact Professor M. Hugo-Brunt at the Division of Town & Regional Planning (phone 928-3627) as soon as possible.

Some of the most fascinating and misunderstood men in the world are among the 10,000 seamen who dock at Toronto each year.

Captain M. Itoh of the Japanese freighter Kinkasan Maru has been at sea for 23 years.

His mud-brown eyes have peered over, ahead of and into 1,725,000 miles of sea. He is married and has one — 17 years old and in her last year of high school in Japan.

same roads as Magellan and de Gama. He rarely thinks such thoughts now. But the pay is good — and it is hard to change jobs in Japan.

During his long absences from home, he interests himself by collecting stamps and, while in port, eating and drinking at the "best" restaurants. (He liked lobster he had at an expensive Toronto restaurant.)

He now is on his next voyage—through the Panama Canal towards home. "I think I will stay home for a few years and enjoy my wife's cooking," he says, "and then my family and I will go camping in the mountains."

"It's nice in the mountains. Now, after 23 years at sea, my only romance is there, with my family."

Most seamen head for the mountains during their vacations. They go skiing, fishing or camping. All their free-time activities carry them as far away from the ship as possible.

Some try to get away from the ship permanently and purge themselves of their lonely life. The chief officer of the Sunbear took two television sets

"She plans to go to college next year to study world literature," Captain Itoh said proudly in an interview aboard his ship.

He sees his wife and daughter only four times a year.

Captain Itoh has mixed emotions about his life as do many seamen interviewed in and around the docks.

When he began, his romantic spirit reminded him that he was travelling the

To most sailors, Montreal is merely another port — another place to go ashore, to get drunk, and perhaps, for a while, to relieve the unending monotony which is the lot of almost every deep-sea sailor.

Once away from their ships most get no further than the innumerable taverns and cheap night clubs which flourish along the waterfront, from Pointe Generally, they are quite well dressed as if anticipating the big night when somehow always fails to materialize. Occasionally, they will buy something from the swarms of fast-buck con men that inhabit these dives, and opt for a conveniently parked car, specializing in anything from a St. Christopher's medal to a solid gold watch. A few hours, and a few quarts of beer later, they will get up and head back to their ship.

Ask any one of them how he likes living, and you will probably receive a caustic reply: "Be a sailor, lad, and the world through a porthole."

Yet this does not mean that all seamen are dissatisfied, or would change their way of life if they could. Indeed, many seamen, particularly the licensed officers take a deep pride in their duties.

Many have known no other life. They were boys, and would be as happy to place off a ship as a fish out of water. Yet some have run away from their responsibilities, unwanted families, or the courses in Norway. But television is not yet a way of life in Norway and the money barely trickled in. Then he tried selling.

"I sold washing machines, radios, brushes, everything," he complained, "but I found it too hard to keep my mouth going all the week."

With dissatisfaction weighing heavily upon him, he found himself heading for the dock area.

He was soon at sea again, and his introspective nature no longer found it necessary "to keep his mouth going all the week."

Last winter he saw his family. Next summer he will see them again.

With a warm smile of anticipation, he said: "I find I can't wait for it. I live for that moment when I shall see them again. When I'm at home with my family then I am truly myself."

Coming through the locks to Toronto is hard work for the men on ocean-going vessels. They get very little sleep, and even that is interrupted. Consequently, many of them look to Toronto as a place to sleep, and nothing more. This is stan-fields of Wales, and have found a sort of contentment in the easy relaxed life at sea.

Not a few of the older seamen are confirmed alcoholics who think no further ahead than their next drink or their next watch.

Some will stay aboard one ship for 20 years, others drift aimlessly from one ship to another.

Yet all respect the unwritten law of "live and let live" — there are few fights at sea, little discrimination, and very few close friendships.

The longshoremen, without whom Montreal harbor could not operate for even a day, present a marked contrast to the seamen, since they seem always to be laughing, cursing, or singing at the top of their voices, and in a brand of French that would make a Parisian wince.

Only at the 7 a.m. shape-up will you find them standing silently, their jack-hooks hanging from their shoulders, and perhaps stamping their feet a little against the cold.

Once aboard the ships however, the dard for many ports. Most of the seamen, as the chief officer of the Sunbear explains, prefer the life at sea.

"When you're on the high seas, it is much better than the life at port, at least for older men like myself. At sea, everything runs smoothly, and to a schedule.

"After my watch I always go on deck for a few minutes before going below. It is always very peaceful. The sea is darker at the horizon and the sky becomes lighter and there is a small strip in between where the two seem to blend and it goes on like that mile after mile." Captain Kleppe of the 12,000-ton Valetta explained the "why" of the life at sea this way: "As a boy I had a longing, a yearning for the sea. Once I went to sea, I, like all the other captains, engineers, stewards and deck-boys, had the sea in my blood. There was no way to get rid of it. Your yearning never ceases. You're never through with the sea until you die."

The Bochum, a 10,000-ton freighter carrying Volkswagens from Bremen, is captained by Rolf Luning. He explained it this way:

"My family have always been seamen, so I came to it naturally. Also I dreamed of the adventure, both of the sea and the faraway places. I find all the places interesting, even now. I meet a lot of nice people. I think it is a good life, this life at sea. The pay is good, but it is not only the money. With me as with others I know, it is not a job, it is a profession, a career.

Then Captain Luning talked of the faraway places that he had seen. He talked of Rotterdam and its huge recreation centre for seamen.

Toronto badly lags behind other ports in this respect, although last year seamen of 27 different nationalities visited here.

He talked of the Reeperbahn in Hamburg, famous for its prostitutes and bars that specialize in catering to seamen. He talked of the most beautiful ports, Rio de Janeiro, Vancouver and Capetown. But the words of one Norwegian seaman leave the strongest impression:

"I enjoy every place I stop at, but all my favorite ports are still in Norway."

can take your measurements in two minutes flat and provide you with a "tailor-made" suit inside of a week, if necessary.

Then there are the working-gear peddlers. They seemed to be aboard every ship or bunkering boat serviced, and exhibited a precise knowledge of the devaluation of almost every monetary system in the world.

There are the ever-present customs officers, swarming like flies over the sugar boats, trying to see that no one manages to buy illicit rum or cigarettes, at the going price of $2 a bottle or carton.

Yet what one never sees along the waterfront, apart from the Cunard and Canadian Steamship Lines docks, are women.

Unlike Trois-Rivieres, and some of the other inland ports, Montreal harbor remains an almost exclusively male preserve.

Wherever else the notorious prostitution of Montreal may exist, it does not seem to be along the harbor.

Record turnout for frosh show, bonze grabbed

More than 3,200 University of Toronto students, twice as many as last year, flocked to Varsity Arena Friday night for the annual Freshman Welcome.

One centre of attention was the Communist club booth, where President Tim Walsh (III U.C.) held his own against the fiery blasts of U of T students.

Further along the line the Blue and White booth featured pictures of events to come later in the school year. The U of T chorus made themselves known by playing a record made last year at one of their concerts. Inside the arena there was dancing to the music of Frank Evans and his orchestra. At intermission time, entertainment was provided by the Blue and White Society. After short addresses by Academic Vice President Dr. Moffat St. Andrew Woodside and Blue and White Chairman Larry Ward (IV Vic), five Varsity co-eds arrayed in flashing green outfits took over with a short dance to "The Stripper." The Lady Godiva Memorial Band then mounted the stage, complete with banners and cannon. Former band leader Don Munro (IV ASPC) renounced his title with great ceremony to Frank Dixon (II ASPC). Earlier one engineer had been caught with 14 bottles of beer in his tuba. The beer was confiscated. The Town Criers, well-known Canadian folk-singers, completed the evening's entertainment with a medley of ballads. Dancing continued until 12:30 a.m.

Students count students in survey

Student enumerators conclude a pedestrian traffic count on the main campus of the University of Toronto today.

The purpose of the count is to find the volume of students passing certain points on the campus at specified times. The university is interested in where students are coming from, where they are going, what entrances they are using, whether they walk on the paths or the roads and many other things. The check is necessary to make improvements on the university grounds. Professor M. Hugo-Brunst, in charge of the survey, said old circulation patterns must be found before new ones can be developed.

Fifty students were hired to take the counts at various points on campus before morning classes, at noon and in the late afternoon.

Frat raided, beer seized, two arrested

Phi Delta Phi, the law fraternity, became the second University of Toronto fraternity to be raided in two months, when Metro morality officers seized 995 bottles of beer and 35 bottles of liquor there Friday night. The beer was being sold through soft drink machines from which a bottle of beer was automatically released when 25 cents was deposited. Two residents of the fraternity house, Charles Ritchie, 24, and George Dunn, 25, were charged with keeping liquor for sale and illegal selling of liquor.

Students miss chance for fame and immortality

Those students who did not make any of the Varsity teams or the cheerleading squad and who still seek to earn fame and immortality during their college days missed a great chance over the weekend.

The sacrifice to be made, granted, was somewhat severe and perhaps rather painful, but surely even the thought of death would be compensated by the assurance of having one's name inscribed in a special annex to Soldiers' Tower for generations of adoring freshies to gaze upon.

This unmatched opportunity occurred during the Toronto-Queen's football game in Kingston Saturday.

All the aspiring hero had to do was wangle admittance to the Queen's student section, wear a U of T jacket and stand to cheer loudly for Toronto at every opportunity. The Queen's students would have done the rest.

For those content to sit in the Toronto section the game, and indeed the entire weekend, was a fine primer course for the main event next month in Montreal.

The pep rally, dance, and concert by the Chad Mitchell Trio Friday night was less than No. 1 — how to pick up a luscious girl in hostile territory.

Incidental to this was a refresher course in smuggling liquor past searchers (in this case the ever-present Alma Mater Society).

Anyone who missed the Friday lesson could pick it up Saturday at the game, the tea dance and the football dance, but the sound effects during the singing indicated that some precocious individuals got it right the first time.

Saturday was a fine clear day and the AMS was active early. During the game lesson No. 2 — survival in the stands — was offered on petition for those who could get into the Queen's seats.

Saturday evening was the final test — fighting off the lady's steady boy friend, convincing the waiter in the hotel that your birth certificate reads '34 not '43, and talking your way into the common room of Leonard Hall at 2:15 a.m.

To those who completed the required courses, sleep that you may awake stronger to issue into battle Nov. 1.

Arms and the Man to be topic of lecture series

The Combined Universities Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament and the Student Christian Movement will co-sponsor a series of six lectures and supper discussions this fall entitled "Arms and the Man", concerning various approaches to the achievement of peace in the world.

The speaker at the first lecture, to be given Oct. 18 at 4:30 p.m. in West Hall, University College, will be Major-General E. L. M. Burns, Canada's representative to the 18-nation disarmament talks in Geneva.

General Burns will explore the role of a middle power in the attempts to achieve disarmament. After his talk he will meet for supper with 20 students to discuss the topic further. Students may be invited to the supper by contacting the CUCND or the SCM.

The speakers at the succeeding lectures and supper discussions will represent a wide variety of opinions: from Dr. Fred Schwartz, director of the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade, and America's leading anti-Communist speaker, to Professor Peter Deats, a Christian Pacifist from Boston, who seeks non-violent, creative responses to oppression and hate.

This last subject, hate, will be taken up separately by Dr. John Rich, a Toronto psychiatrist, in the final lecture of the series Nov. 14.

Slave prices in Toronto reach new high

Prices on Toronto's "slave" market at York University shot above all expectations when trading opened in the cafeteria Friday.

The $240 raised will go to the United Appeal.

The "slaves" were 20 girls from "C" residence who were "knocked down" at prices ranging from 50 cents to $12.

Their duties, for the lucky male bidders all day Monday will include washing, ironing, cleaning shoes, typing essays for their male buyers and, of course, dates in the evening.

Auctioneer Frank Hogg drew the top price of the day — $30 — when the girls turned the tables and demanded a few slaves of their own.

He and three other male students will act as houseboy: Monday in the girls' residence.

Registrar D. S. Rickerd didn't escape the auctioneer's hammer. He was sold for $21 and ordered to hold a tea party

Cafeteria reopens

MONTREAL (Special)—The University of Montreal announced Friday it will reopen its cafeteria.

The cafeteria was closed last Monday following a boycott by students protesting a new meal price of 85 cents — a 10-cent increase.

A spokesman for the university said starting next Monday other meals, in addition to the 85-cent meal, will be available to the students at lower prices.

Face enrolment crisis

A record number of first-year students in Ontario universities has brought on an enrolment crisis two years earlier than expected.

York, Western, McMaster Ottawa and Waterloo reported they were overcrowded or at capacity.

Dr. R. W. B. Jackson, the department of education's director of educational research, said enrolment figures indicate "as great or greater a university education crisis than we expected. Most people felt it would come two years from now."

GREAT DAY FOR THE IFFERS AND SECOND GUESSERS

Saturday's masterpiece of a football game at George Richardson Stadium in Kingston was a great one for the "iffers" and "second guessers."

You know these characters. They're the football addicts who, after any game their team has lost, have a gigantic slew of comments, all of them beginning with the words "if only." "If only this had happened, or if only that had happened we would have won."

The iffers and second guessers will be talking about Varsity's 21-14 loss for the rest of their lives. The game will go down in history as their monument to the world of "ifs."

The turning point in the game came late in the third quarter with the score deadlocked at 7-7 after two-and-a-half tough periods of defensive football. Queens' punter Harold Rose got off a poor kick into the wind and Blues took over the ball at the Gaels' 17-yard line.

Blues' quarterback Jim Israel, who shared duties with Bryce Taylor, called on rookie fullback Tim Purves three times in succession and Purves got a first down at the six-yard line on the third try.

Then Purves carried again, on the same play up the middle. He got two yards to the four. Another dive by Purves got one yard to the three. The final play — Purves again to within two feet of the goal line.

Gaels then started the march upfield that eventually resulted in a touchdown when Mike Kelly fumbled a punt in the Varsity end zone and Queens' guard Bill Miklas fell on the ball for the score. This t.d. broke the game open and paved the way for Blues' defeat.

A second-guesser, sitting in his grandstand pew with only a rotten peanut to disturb his equilibrium, would damn Israel for calling on Purves to carry the ball six times in a row. But Israel is the quarterback, the man who has to make the decision and stand by it whether it succeeds or fails.

"The play had been going well at mid-field," Israel commented after the game, "and I thought we could score on it."

It's tough being a quarterback in a situation like this one. If Purves had gained one more foot for the touchdown and Blues would have gone on to win, who would have received credit?

Not Israel, that's for sure. Purves, who carried the ball six times in a row and scored the big t.d., would have gained the printer's ink. But the play misses and Israel has the second guessers down his neck.

GAME OFFICIALS PROVIDE THE MATERIAL

Israel suggested after the game that perhaps he called the wrong play, that he should have faked Purves up the middle on the final plunge and ran the end himself, Jimmy, the proud athlete that he is, shouldn't be so hard on himself. Only an iffer or second guesser knows what would have happened had he called another play.

Gaels' following t.d. provided the iffers with more ammunition. "If Kelly had only held on to the ball."

But Kelly didn't hold on to the ball and that's football for you, or any sport for that matter. The breaks make the game. The game officials made at least two glaring faux pas, both in Queens' favor. Game photographs show that Blues wingback Kenny Davison was interfered with by defensive back Harold Rose while a pass from quarterback Taylor was still in the air. Davison had an open track to the end zone on this second-quarter play with the score 0-0.

The umpire in the defensive backfield grabbed at his belt, apparently intending to throw a penalty flag. But the flag never appeared and the play went as an incompleting pass.

"If only . . ."

This material for the iffers and second guessers is all in Varsity's favor, if you'll notice. That's one of the prime rules in the International Order Of Iffers' constitution. You must pick one team and be an iffer for that team alone.

Gaels' iffers had material of their own to work with after Saturday's game — Queen's 95 yards in penalties, fumbles by Harold Rose and Cal Connor that led to Varsity touchdowns, that fact that all-star fullback Jim Young didn't play because of a hip injury.

When you compare the iffer material from one side with that of the other side, in most cases they cancel out.

Saturday's game was an excellent example. Although Blues could have won with a few more breaks the final score was a fair indication of the play. That's the important thing.

But tell me, what fun would it be as a sports fan IF we didn't all have a bit of that "ifffer" instinct within our composure.

Backs play sluggish as Rugger Blues tie

Kingston, Ont. It seems that Larry Johnson is the only Toronto player able to penetrate the scoring column whenever Varsity Rugger Blues play Queen's. In Varsity's opening OQAA game against Golden Gaels Saturday in Kingston, Johnson scored Blues' only try in the game which ended in a 3-3 tie. Johnson has scored all Blues' points in the last three regularly scheduled games with Queen's. Gaels were a well-organized team and Blues were unable to get straightened away until late in the second half. Dave Steele, Queen's captain, was their outstanding player and scored Gaels' points on a 30-yard penalty kick.

Sparked by Gethin Hughes, Varsity's forward play was aggressive and hard while the backs had some trouble controlling the ball. In the last ten minutes of play, Blues scored three tries that were disallowed by penalties. The tie on Saturday plus the fact that McGill is fielding one of its best teams in recent years, should make the league very close this year. Varsity's Intermediates fared better than the Seniors. They defeated Queen's Intermediates 19-3 as Scoreser Hayman scored three tries. Dave Beatty and Dave Tarbett scored Blues' other tries and Bob McGee kicked two converts to round out the Varsity scoring.

Lack of pre-season games shows as Rinkies lose 22 14

By GORD BELLMORE LONDON, Ont. — A trio of Western Colts spearheaded a surprisingly accomplished team to an impressive 22-14 victory over Varsity Baby Blues here Saturday. Quarterback Barry McGee, halfback Jim Reilly and end Jack Green each topped brilliant performances for Western with a touchdown in this come-from-behind victory. It was Baby Blues' misfortune to run into Colts, who were in mid-season form. In comparison, Baby Blues had no pre-season games. Colts had played and won two earlier games and have been together from the opening of training camp. This factory really showed after a shaky start by Western. Toronto jumped on the hosts for two first-quarter touchdowns. Ron Peroff, who ran well all day, capped a 47-yard sustained drive by scoring on a nine-yard burst for the first t.d. Brian McKee added Rinkies only other score a few minutes later after Baby Blues blocked a Western quick-kick at the Western 18-yard line. Ben Hutzler converted both majors. From the start of the second quarter it was all Western as quarterback McGee and company took over. McGee directed a sharp, varied offence featuring Reilly's great running and Green's pass receiving. Colts managed eight points on Reilly's t.d. and a safety touch in the second quarter and broke through for two more touchdowns in the third period.

Tom Schmidt booted two converts for Colts. Baby Blues were hemmed in their own end for the second and third quarters as Western's defence completely choked off any offensive efforts. Baby Blues didn't have enough preparation time for the game to put in more than a skeleton offense and once Western caught onto the fact that Baby Blues lacked passing and outside running they just shut off the middle and stopped Toronto cold. A Baby Blues defence held Western off three separate times inside the 20-yard line before yielding to the inevitable when McGee and then Green each scored in the third quarter on short passes. Rinkies recovered somewhat in the fourth quarter as coach Dave Cresswell shuffled his backfield. The play shifted back and forth without scoring as the teams tired and fumbles and interceptions resulted. Behind the Bench: The game was an unusually hard-hitting affair for so early in the season and may prove to be a costly one for Baby Blues. Linebacker Jim Rhodes, who was elected co-captain with Ranny Parker, re-injured the knee that put him out of action last season and he may be finished again. End Wayne (Goose) Wessell injured his back and Bill Lavery and Al Kucharski both suffered slight concussions. Fullbacks Ron Peroff and Pete Sutherland, who did the bulk of the ball carrying for Rinkies, are sporting black eyes.

'Stangs dump McGill 16-13 behind Bob Israel

MONTREAL—Defensive mistakes by McGill Redmen gave Western Mustangs a 16-13 victory Saturday in the intercollegiate football league. McGill was forced to go with second-string quarterback Gary Cullen when Glen St. John came down with the flu late last week. Cullen turned in a steady performance despite his inexperience. He led a ground attack that was hampered by an inefficient offensive line. Rookie end Pat McConnell accounted for most of Western's scoring, notching a touchdown and Jim Weber booted a convert and a single to round out the Western score. For McGill, all-star halfback Willie Lambert ran for one touchdown and booted a convert. Larry Cullen, running from the end spot, caught a pass for McGill's other touchdown. Western opened the scoring in 5:10 the first quarter. Israel threw a 30-yard pass to McConnell who was in the clear and had no trouble running another 55 yards for the touchdown. In the second quarter, Weber's field goal attempt was wide but went for a single. McConnell's single gave Western a 9-0 lead at half-time. Al MacKenzie, McGill's all-star defensive end, recovered a fumble on Mustang's 34-yard line to set up the first McGill touchdown early in the third quarter. Gary Cullen heaved a 32-yarder to end Larry Cullen for the score. The team's exchanged touchdowns in the fourth quarter. Israel ran up the middle from the McGill 10-yard line and Lambert scooted six yards around right end for the McGill touchdown. In the statistics department, Western picked up 140 yards rushing to McGill's 13. McGill's quarterback Gary Cullen completed eight of 21 pass attempts for 153 yards and Israel was successful twice in 13 attempts for 97 yards.

Whitney and Richard Hamel scored a combined total of 634 over the 36-hole tournament. Western was second with a score of 645. Individual honours went to University of Windsor's Harvey Barisanti (74-77-151) with Garbe second, one stroke behind (74-78-152). Freshman Mogil came in third (78-76-154) with former Intercollegiate champion Mike Whitney finishing fourth (77-78-155). Richard Hamel shot (84-89-173).

MURPHY EXPLODES FOR 5 GOALS

Soccerites romp to win over Aggies

By KATY O'SULLIVAN Spurred by Keith Murphy's five goals, Varsity Soccer Blues romped to an 8-1 victory over Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph Saturday. Varsity won the game in the opening minutes as Peter Haynes opened the scoring by heading the ball into the goal. Murphy scored his first and what turned out to be the winning goal three minutes later. Five minutes before the half, Bobby Lewis fired Toronto's third goal. Murphy acted like a machine gun in the second half as he scored four rapid goals in succession to notch the game for Toronto. Rookie Charlie Bracht booted Varsity's eighth goal with five minutes left in the game. Lloyd Wieringa scored Aggie's only goal halfway through the second period. In dominating the play, Blues kept control of the ball for the entire 90 minutes. Blues' precision passing attack ran circles around OAC's defense. Halfbacks Urs Maag and Peter Haynes starred with their fine playmaking in setting the ball up for Varsity's forwards. Despite the efforts of Aggie's centre half, John Jensen, OAC forwards could not break through the wall of Toronto's defense. COMMENTS: Keith Murphy leads the league in scoring with seven goals. Blues' next game is at 3 p.m. Wednesday against McMaster on the back campus. Dom Dente, who was out of action with the flu Saturday, should be back for Wednesday's game.

Blues established as Yates Cup contenders as they LOSE TO GAELS 21-14

Queen's guard Bill Miklas (52) falls on the ball in the end zone for Gaels' second touchdown after Blues' Mike Kelly (right) fumbled a Queen's punt. Kelly, who despite the miscue played an outstanding game on defence for Blues, lunges in vain to recover. Gael end Bruce Stewart (left) moves in on the play.

Connors' passes break up defensive struggle

By SHEL KRAKOWSKY
Associate Sports Editor

KINGSTON, Ont. Before 12,000 partisan Queen's fans here Saturday, Varsity Blues served notice they are a power to reckon with in the race for the Yates Cup.

Blues didn't win the game, they didn't even tie. But in losing to the hometown Golden Gaels 21-14, they showed enough of an offence and a strong defence to indicate they could beat Queen's on Varsity's home field.

That game won't take place until the last day of the OQAA schedule, but it already looms as the big game of U of T's remaining five. Under Intercollegiate rules, the team which finishes in first place at the end of the regular schedule is declared league champion and winner of the Yates Cup.

If, however, the team which ends up in second place has beaten the first-place team at least once during the season, the second-place team may challenge for the title.

If Blues play as well as they did here and get a few more breaks on the way, they should end up no further down the ladder than second. In Saturday's game, Queen's made use of their breaks and the long pass to defeat Toronto in a game which saw the Blue and White leading 7-0 at half-time.

The first 30 minutes developed into a defensive struggle with Gaels' front line of Laird Rasmussen, Jim Greenwood, Merb Daub, Ian Brady and Larry Ferguson holding Varsity ball carriers to short gains.

Blues' tertiary of Ken Davison, Mike Kelly, Harry Watson and Bryce Taylor did an equally effective job of tying up potential ball receivers so that quarterback Cal Connor only completed four out of 14 passes in the first half.

It wasn't until only six-and-a-half minutes before half time that Varsity had the ball in Queen's territory for the first time. On a third down punt situation Queen's Harold Rose faked the kick and ran with the ball. He was tackled and fumbled the ball into the arms of Blues' Dave McCullough. A piling on penalty put the ball on Queen's 25-yard line.

Three plays and two penalties later, Ken Davison made a sensational catch of a Bryce Taylor pass to put Toronto into the lead.

Early in the third quarter, Blues were threatening on Queen's 35-yard line when fullback Tim Purves fumbled a hand-off from Jim Israel. Tricolour's Laird Rasmussen recovered and on the next play Queen's tied the score. Connor threw a perfect leading pass to halfback Bill Edwards who scampered for the touchdown. The play covered 75 yards.

Later in the quarter, U of T took the ball on Queen's 17-yard line after a short punt and a no yards penalty against Gaels. Israel called on Purves six times in a row but the rookie fullback was stopped on the one-yard line. Queen's took over with Connor mixing pass plays and Pete Broadhurst grinding out yardage. Broadhurst was a more than adequate replacement for all-star fullback Jim Young as he ran for 86 yards in 12 carries. Gaels' attack was stalled on Blues' 39-yard line and they were forced to punt.

Mike Kelly, who played an outstanding game on Blues' defence, fumbled Rose's punt in the end zone and Queen's veteran guard Bill Miklas fell on the ball for the touchdown to give Queen's the lead. Five minutes later Connor fumbled at his own six-yard line, Blues rookie tackle Ray Reynolds recovering. On the next play Taylor swept the left end for a t.d. Taylor's convert tied the game 14-14 with eight minutes remaining. After a short kickoff by Ray German, Connor hit Bayne Norrie with a sideline pass on the first play from scrimmage and Norrie outraced Harry Watson for the winning t.d. The play covered 61 yards.

Blues almost came back in the dying minutes but a penalty killed their chances. Taylor threw a long pass to Davison at Queens' 10-yard line but the play was nullified by a penalty for Blues having an illegal receiver down field.

QUICK KICKS: Coach Dalt White was pleased with the play of rookie fullback Tim Purves, who turned in his second outstanding game in a row. Purves was the Varsity work horse, carrying the ball 17 times for 54 yards . . .

Bill Watters played the whole game at linebacker and also carried from fullback for 38 yards on five carries . . . Gaels' fullback Jim Young confirmed the injury that kept him out of the game is pulled hip muscles. Young will play against Western Saturday . . . Ken Davison caught two passes for 21 yards and Mike Hollett was two for 20 . . . Jim Israel completed one of six, Bryce Taylor five of 10 . . .

For Gaels, Bill Edwards picked up 103 yards on three pass receptions and Pete Thomson 38 yards on three catches . . . Edwards also gained 28 yards on the ground . . . Bob Latham intercepted two passes for Gaels.

Jim Israel suffered a slight eye injury when a Gael finger found the mark. Bill Watters has a slight charley horse, Mike Hollett a pulled ham string and John Fraser a bruised shoulder.

Scoring and Stats

First Quarter

No Scoring

Second Quarter

Varsity—Quarterback Bryce Taylor completed a pass to Kenny Davison in Queen's end zone from the nine-yard line for a touchdown. Blues gained possession on Gaels' 26-yard line when Queen's punter Harold Rose fumbled in trying to run for a first down off a punt formation. A piling-on penalty and two offences against Gaels aided Blues in the t.d. march. Taylor converted.

Third Quarter

Queen's—Quarterback Cal Connor and halfback Bill Edwards combined on a 75-yard pass-and-run play for a touchdown. Gaels had gained possession two plays earlier on a Varsity fumble. Edwards converted.

Fourth Quarter

Queen's—Harold Rose punted 38 yards into Varsity's end zone and Mike Kelly fumbled the ball. Gael guard Bill Miklas fell on the ball for a t.d. Edwards converted.

Varsity 7 — Queen's 14

Varsity—Taylor swept the left end and untouchable for a touchdown from the six-yard line. Connor had fumbled on the previous play to give Blues possession. Taylor then converted.

Varsity 14 — Queen's 14

Queen's—After the following kick-off, a short 16-yarder by Ray German, Connor and Bayne Norrie combined for a 61-yard pass-and-run touchdown. Edwards kicked his third convert.

CUS moves to curb Mounties

Security investigations on campus can restrict academic freedom, the Canadian Union of Students decided at their national congress in Edmonton last week.

The national executive was mandated by the congress to request a policy statement from the federal government on campus security investigations.

CUS also invited university professors to tell students whether or not they would divulge any information to security investigators.

In foreign affairs, the congress gave top priority to an educational program designed to convince the federal government to give one per cent of the gross national product in foreign aid.

The controversial proposed charter of the students of Canada was defeated by the congress.

The charter was brought up at last year's congress and sent to member universities for revision and comment. But this year's congress felt the charter would only limit student rights by stating already accepted principles.

The congress also decided to retain an observer status in the International Union of Students, but not to apply for membership. (The IUS is largely made up of student unions from Communist countries. CUS is a member of the International Student Conference, made up of student unions from non-Communist countries.)

U of T Students' Administrative Council President Doug Ward (III Emm) was a candidate for the presidency of CUS, not Malcolm Scott as reported in Monday's Varsity. A breakdown in communications with the Canadian University Press forced The Varsity to reconstruct the election from earlier reports.

'Cuba is here to stay' — Cox

vsp kufott

"The United States can bomb Cuba off the face of the earth," said Cedric Cox, British Columbia New Democratic Party member, "but the ideals that Fidel Castro has brought into being will not die out."

Mr. Cox spoke Tuesday in Sidney Smith Hall on "Cuba, with Eyes Wide Open."

John Riddell, chairman of the U of T's Student Committee on Cuban Affairs, was in charge of the meeting. He said his committee's aim is to make known what his group regards as the truth about Cuba, as opposed to what he called the negative aspects highly publicized by North American newspapers.

Mr. Cox leaned heavily at certain points on comparisons with the United States to uphold Cuba's democratic practices.

He paralleled Castro's long rule unbroken by elections with that of George Washington's during the American revolution. History students in the audience stood and disagreed until they were overruled for lack of time.

Later the speaker condemned the sudden American policy reversal, from lauding Castro as a hero after his overthrow of Batista's regime, to reviling him as the original bushy-bearded villain of the day.

Mr. Cox called the Cuban revolution an agrarian revolt by Cubans tired of both the exploitation of their own people and of the 65-year foreign domination by the U.S. of their land and industry.

He said that to people owning virtually nothing and looking forward only to the brief harvest period when they could earn an infinitesimal sum to keep their families going, Castro's revolution came as an answer to a prayer they would never have dreamed of saying.

Mr. Cox continued with an outline of promises kept by Castro.

State farms provided steady employment in addition to the production of food for cities which previously had to import even their bread from Miami, Fla.

Expansion of schools, medical centres and housing developments contributed to the Cuban advance, he said.

The family waits in vain...

By LYN OWEN

"A bad dream, as if it isn't real," Betty Ann Mills said Tuesday about the death last week of her husband Ron, 28-year-old University of Toronto parking attendant.

Nine days ago Ron Mills died of cancer in Newmarket hospital. He was ineligible for the insurance plan which would have given his family some financial security.

Things are going on almost as usual in the family's home in Aurora. It seems as if nothing had happened, except for a strange feeling of expectation in the air — as if the family waits for him to walk in the door and fill up the empty space.

Eight days have passed, but to the Mills family it seems a lot longer.

Betty Ann Mills is knitting a sweater for a friend to keep from thinking too long or too hard about what must be the first thing in her mind.

The children, Perry, 4, and Sheryl, 20 months, are still not entirely clear about why they haven't seen their father for such a long time.

Betty Ann said in an interview they have been very good. Perry has always been a sort of protector to Sheryl, picking up her toys — and her, whenever either of them needs it.

Sheryl is going into the hospital for a tonsil operation next Tuesday.

Betty Ann explained Ron's death to Perry, at least as well as anyone can explain death to a four-year-old boy who does not know what death means. She told him that "his father had gone with God up to Heaven for a long time, and that he would be watching him."

Betty Ann, the two children and three dogs live with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Waite, in a small six-room bungalow in Aurora.

It has been about seven years since Mrs. Waite had a series of strokes which paralyzed one side of her body. Ron and Betty Ann gave up a home of their own to come and live with her parents so that Betty Ann could take care of her mother. With the children too, she doesn't have any extra time on her hands.

The fund set up this week by the Students' Administrative Council and The Varsity so far has collected $171.44. Donations will be accepted at the SAC office until Friday.

NDP's Brewin to appear at HH debate

Andrew Brewin, New Democratic Party Member of Parliament for Toronto Greenwood, will be guest speaker at this year's first Hart House debate Thursday.

The resolution is: "Resolved that the New Democratic Party has no future in Canada."

Mr. Brewin was National Treasurer of the CCF, was a member of the NDP national executive 1961-63, and now is a member of the NDP national council, and chairman of the NDP federal caucus. He is also a member of the House of Commons special committee on defence, and a member of the election and privileges committee.

In addition to these political activities, Mr. Brewin is one of Canada's most prominent barristers in civil rights and constitutional law. He is also a prominent layman in the Anglican Church and was a delegate to the World Council of Churches conference in India in 1961.

Thursday night debates at Hart House usually feature the best debaters on campus, and guest speakers have included every prime minister of Canada — except John Diefenbaker.

The debate will take place in Debates Room, and starts at 8 p.m.

March on Massey

Rosemary Speirs, March On Massey leader, announced Tuesday night that the march on Massey College will be held despite threats from the College's junior fellows.

The march will take place on Tuesday at noon, she said.

Miss Speirs asked that all those interested in marching come to The Varsity office during the week to receive campaign instructions.

◆ "Not worth trampling people"

"Trampling on people will be more trouble than it's worth," said Trevor Lloyd of the University of Toronto History department Monday to a New Democratic Party meeting. He gave this answer to support his thesis that government must be run by "wise men" who do their utmost to avoid conflicts with minorities, e.g. Medicare in Saskatchewan.

He maintained there is a place for idealists in our system to provide a source of principles, but that it was only with a breakdown in society (as in the southern United States) that an idealist (like Martin Luther King) could become effective. Ideals, he said, must be developed into relevant policies. Later, he dwelt on the problems of the Liberal party in Canada. He suggested the Liberals were ideologically adrift because they could no longer simply look to the United States as an example of freedom and democracy, whereas the Conservatives still have their traditional British ideal of order and stability.

The development of a two-party system in 1959 and 1960 had been impossible because John Diefenbaker was too radical to win over the Liberal right wing. The present system was unsatisfactory because it had allowed the right wing to dampen Mackenzie King's desires for reform.

◆ Debaters urge bilingualism

The resolution that Canada should be unilingual was defeated 28 to 3 at the opening session of the debating parliament of Victoria College Tuesday night.

Gary Kelly (III Vic), speaking for the opposition, pointed out that Canada has both a French and an English Canadian "frame of reference."

"No one culture," said Kelly, "has the right to legislate another out of existence."

"Neither one nor the other can declare its superiority." Any attempt to do so would be an assault on democratic privileges, he said.

Mary Ann Code (IV Vic) added that with two cultures people are "better prepared to interpret life," and receive a "stereoscopic view".

Speaker for the government, Jim Bannister (III Vic) envisaged bilingualism as "two languages fighting with each other."

Such a situation would mean close ties for Canada with France and such obvious advantages as beating Great Britain into the European Common Market.

Guest speaker Professor Ted Rathe of Vic's French department admitted his "livelihood depends on efforts towards bilingualism."

He pointed out that mainly because of geographical divisions Canada, whether unilingual or not, would never have the unity desired by the government.

"The desirable thing to have in society," said Prof. Rathe, "is the admission that variety is a good thing."

Referring to the problem of teaching French in schools, Prof. Rathe said "bilingualism hasn't even been tried in Canada." Canada's object should be to avoid provincialism.

"There is no better way than through bilingualism," Rathe concluded.

Dr. A. B. B. Moore, president of Vic, read the speech from the throne To Vic's 105th debating parliament.

payment overdue

Part of the Liberal platform during the 1962 and 1963 federal election campaigns was a promise to provide 10,000 university scholarships a year, each worth $1,000.

On April 30 of this year, after the Liberals were elected, Northern Affairs Minister Arthur Laing said the plan would be put into operation as soon as it was feasible.

Two months ago TheVarsity queried the government for information on the proposed plan. No answer has yet been received.

Even if the plan is approved during this session of Parliament, it will be too late to help students this year.

Considering the fact that the Liberals have been advocating the scholarship program for almost 18 months, it is strange they have not been able to implement it before now.

A sceptic might be persuaded to believe the Liberals built the scholarship plank into their platform in a hypocritical attempt to garner part of the student vote.

in afghanistan

In newspaper circles there is a concept known as Afghanistanism. Briefly, this phenomenon involves a concentration on events far removed from the location of the paper, and on events which are of little concern to the reader. It usually involves a neglect of events of a local nature.

The Canadian Union of Students, formerly the National Federation of Canadian University Students, was guilty of practising Afghanistanism during its congress in Edmonton last week.

Although the congress spent a great deal of its five-day meeting discussing the vital question of French and English Canadian relations, much of its time was spent on remote events.

Resolutions were passed condemning racial discrimination in the United States, Apartheid in South Africa and the handling of students in South Vietnam.

While these are all worthwhile topics of discussion and worthy of resolutions, the CUS delegates ignored many domestic issues.

In particular the congress ignored the above mentioned scholarship issue.

As stated earlier in this paper, CUS will have to take positive action on important issues if it is ever to become more than a nebulous conglomeration of students.

The Canadian student community, whether it realizes it or not, is today faced with several issues. A failure at least to discuss these issues will only mean that CUS will continue to be the mediocre organization it has been in the past.

The student organization has a great deal of potential, but only if the members realize it and act accordingly. If Canadian students want and need the promised scholarships, they had better start exerting pressure to ensure they get them. If Canadian students want to be treated as more than irresponsible adolescents they will have to take advantage of the opportunities presented to them.

Varsity reporter on scene as racial trouble

(The author, a first-year University of Toronto medical student and an American citizen, toured the United States this past summer and reports to Varsity readers in this exclusive article.)

By D. J. DUCKWORTH

A brick came sailing through the air heading directly for me. I tried to get away from it, but it hit my heel and the impact sent me sprawling into nearby shrubbery.

As I fell I heard a Negro youth scream: "Take that, white trash."

The air was full of flying objects, shouts of hatred and the sound of gunfire. The street was littered with rocks, bricks, broken bottles and odd bits of clothing — the garbage of violence.

The time — 10:30 p.m. on the night of Sept 4, 1963. The place — Birmingham, Alabama. The problem — prejudice.

Today Americans have inherited justice, law and legal equality from the original ideals of the Declaration of Independence.

But we have overlooked another side of our inheritance. We have also the legacy of hatred, bred by careless men before us. We have the dower of abuse, degradation and the inhumanity of men blinded by ignorance — the mother of prejudice.

Having recently returned from a tour of the eastern United States during which I spent a week in Alabama, I have just begun to see the severity of the prejudice which infects the country. In all the South there is resistance to integration in almost every field — schools, parks, stores, theatres, hotels, and restaurants.

Although the courts have tried for nine years to bring about integration of the southern schools there has, as yet, been only token integration. Against this background of disadvantage in jobs, housing, voting, and in the school system, the Negro has now taken a sharp new turn in his method of campaigning for civil rights.

In the past, Negroes have tended to rely largely on the courts to win these rights. Though the Negro won in the federal courts the change has come so slowly that he is now beginning to turn away from them.

What is stirring in the country today is the new Negro strategy of direct action as was recently demonstrated in the march on Washington. The prognosis is trouble.

It is difficult to begin to comprehend the electric air of hatred which pervades the South. In much of the U.S. there are two distinct races, white and Negro. They do not mix. Each calls down the other and each hates the other. In the South, where the problem is most acute, one finds violence and where they band together

U of T engineers eclipsed

(Robert Morris, Don Monro and Michael Kisly, three University of Toronto Engineers, describe their observations of the total solar eclipse of July 20, 1963 — the last to cross Canada until 1970.)

By ROBERT MORRIS

We drove from Montreal quite early that day despite the earnest grumblings of my friends who had had but 4 hours sleep.

The gap from Montreal to Trois-Rivieres was traversed in a few hours via Highway 2 and a blood red Hillman Minx. Grand-Mere was due north on Highway 19.

Weather was the main factor. Earlier that day, a young man from the Dorval meteorological office advised us to travel as far north as possible in the band of totality.

Total eclipses of the sun are not rare and usually occur twice every three years. However the conical shadow of the moon is only 50-100 miles wide where it intercepts the earth in a sweeping band caused by the relative earth-moon motion. Outside of the main cone, the umbra, the eclipse is not total — and a partial eclipse is very unspectacular both scientifically and visually.

Bands of totality have a queer habit of avoiding populated areas. Thus scientists find themselves braving hot jungles or crossing oceans to view eclipses. We had only Quebec traffic, la langue Francaise and the FLQ to contend with.

The weather cleared at Grand-Mere but became splotched with cumulous clouds as we progressed northward. One hour before first

To the white Southerner there would seem to be some kind of invisible chemistry about the Negro that devaluates all he touches. To get the pulse of the nation I asked people, mostly students, how they felt about the issue. The results were as varied as they were interesting. A storeowner in Knoxville, Tenn., defended his segregation attitude saying: "If I let a Negro into my store I wouldn't have a white customer left."

In Montgomery, the capital of Alabama, a white student said: "The way I see it, the Negroes are out for more than equality — they want supremacy. Nothing seems to satisfy them."

Another student up in Maryland simply stated: "I think there's going to be a race war."

In Philadelphia I was told: "There'll be a revolution if this trend continues."

There is widespread criticism of the Negro demonstrations. There is a feeling that they are pushing too hard, demanding too much too soon. The Negro answer to this is that they have already waited too long.

In Chicago the feeling expressed was bitter. Here I was told: "With all these Negro marches there's going to be trouble and lots of it."

The attitude of the people in Cleveland is best described as frightened. Here, as everywhere, there is fear of physical violence — especially among women and children. Many warn that the Negroes may be hurting their own cause with excessive militancy. "The Negro has not been dealt with fairly," said a college student at Florida State, "but these demonstrations only build up resentment."

Perhaps the most important point to come out of the discussions I had with Negroes and whites in some 23 states was that many, on both sides, while in agreement with the stand that the federal government has made are very afraid that this will not solve very much.

At Columbia University in New York a Negro student said: "A lot of people believe in civil rights but don't want it crammed down their throats."

Throughout New England the feeling tends to be with the Negroes but the people are afraid. "People here are badly scared about the way the racial problem is developing," said a student at Harvard in Boston. Most are scared, but too many couldn't care less. Those who are upset feel very strongly that the situation will get worse. Said a housewife in Mississippi: "The problem is not a physical one but an emotional one; and you can't legislate human feelings."

fects commenced. First noticed was a startling and pronounced saturation of all colors.

It was as if we were observing a Technicolor movie. The sky was still bright but the car was a fantastically deep red and the shrubbery a vivid green.

We had spread a white sheet on the grass in hopes of snatching a glimpse of the elusive shadow bands which appear two or three minutes before and after totality, when the sun, acting as a slit light source, projects atmospheric disturbances on to the ground. When only a thin arc of sun remained the birds in the hills behind us started chirping wildly.

Then the sheet turned a lavender color and ripples began to traverse it like water. We raised our eyes and observed the small arc of vanishing sun.

Instantly the arc vanished and the sky was transformed into a sheet of pure very deep blue. A black ball pierced by an unbelievably white arrowhead corona was poised against the deep blue. To the lower right of the corona beamed Venus, bright and steadily, while Mercury shone less vividly, yet unblinkingly, at "10 o'clock" and nearer to the white ring.

And the birds had ceased to sing — completely. All of these effects occurred instantly at totality. We hastily snapped a few pictures.

Totality lasted only 65 seconds but seemed much shorter. The chromosphere brightened at "4 o'clock" and the dazzling diamond ring flashed out, heralding the reappearance of the sun. The conical shadow raced down the valley toward Maine in an aura of orange light and beneath our feet the wet grass sparkled with dew.

The dining hall in a Nepalese university

Loincloths vs. finger towels

An Indian student can buy a pair of eyeglasses for $2.50. Or a student health centre in Asia can be sent $2,000-worth of drugs for $100.

These are two examples of how a donation by a Canadian student to the SHARE campaign can be put to immediate and vital use overseas.

SHARE this year is making a "dollar a scholar" its objective. U of T "sharing" will contribute to an expected $338,000 in international donations to the fund established by the World University Service to help underprivileged college students.

Nepal has recently been helped by SHARE funds. The picture shows a typical student hostel financed by SHARE donations. The "dining room" is good by Nepalese standards, but it could be multiplied many times over across Nepal by the money put into one dining room at Massey College. Nepal boasts 300 college graduates in a population of 10,000,000. In the past 10 years, the number of colleges there has jumped to 29 from one. There is one university as well. But there are still only 6,000 students in Nepal's colleges.

SHARE financial help has to face the fact that the per capita income in Nepal is less than $100 a year. Already SHARE is building a student centre in Katamandu which, when furnished, will provide library, recreation and accommodation facilities for students.

How much does such a university core cost? About $2,300 SHARE dollars. U of T students spend more than four times this amount every week on cigarettes.

A week of no cigarettes could build four student centres. SHARE is not asking so much. Just a dollar a scholar.

...and in this corner

By SHEILA LITHWICK

With the beginning of classes, the usual bustle and confusion has, no doubt, been reinforced by the yearly freshie grumble, "Do I have to take these phys. ed. classes?"

This is generally followed by a last-minute scramble to the Benson Building to sign up for some serious work in modern dance, tennis, basketball or innumerable other time-consuming and so-called "taxing" first-year required physical education courses.

For many years physical educationists have been warring against the intellectuals on the grounds that one must have a "sound mind in a sound body."

"That's true enough," say the opponents of physical fitness. "But why force people to participate in activities which they dislike or for which they have no time."

Why not?

If General Arts students must take one science whether they plan to major in English or Fine Art, why shouldn't they also be required to take physical education as another subject on their curriculum with credits given.

The ancient Greeks spent at least half their school year on gymnastics and athletics. Their education system was the most advanced of their age — in fact, more so than many today.

The University of Toronto has had compulsory classes for almost 41 years now, and no freshman has suffered except those who have had to pay 50 dollars for non-attendance.

McGill and the University of British Columbia re-initiated such a program in 1951. At McGill the students themselves were responsible for the change.

It is interesting to note that in the Women's Sports program for '62-'63 almost 1500 girls took part in the voluntary program while countless others attended almost 350 compulsory classes. Whether a laissez-faire attitude should be adopted in all universities, as many would suggest, or whether compulsory physical education with credits toward a degree is feasible I leave to be decided by coffee house philosophers and modern educators who are trying to shape our future — wisely!

Intramural group elects officers for 1963-64

The first meeting of the Intramural Sports Committee took place at Hart House Monday. The committee consists of representatives appointed by each of the Athletic Associations of the competing colleges, faculties, and schools in the University.

This committee supervises, organizes, and conducts the intramural program and carries out other duties which may be delegated to it by the Athletic Directorate.

At Monday's meeting, Bob McGee (II Meds) was elected representative to the Athletic Directorate, Brian Orton (II PHE) chairman of the Intramural Sports Committee and Andy Reid (II Law) vice-chairman of the committee.

Freshman Burwash leads netters into college championship

Pete Burwash, the fourth-ranked junior tennis player in Ontario and a freshman in PHE, will lead a contingent of four U of T aces in the Intercollegiate Tennis Championships at University of Montreal today, tomorrow and Friday.

Burwash, who defeated Hugh Parker (IV Trin) 6-1, 6-2, and 7-5, to take the University title last week, will be accompanied by Parker, Doug Coulitis and Werner Mees.

Varsity was forced to share the title with University of Montreal, last year. This year however, Montreal will be without Francois Godbout who was acknowledged to be the outstanding player in last year's tourney.

Other entries are McGill, Laval, and McMaster.

Israel may miss game against McGill Redmen

By SHEL KRAKOWSKY
Associate Sports Editor

QUICK KICKS: Varsity Blues quarterback Jim Israel may miss Saturday's game here against McGill because of an eye hemorrhage. In the game against Queen's, a Gael mistook Israel's eye for a pool ball and tried to ram it into the pocket with his finger. Israel hasn't practised with Blues this week. . . .

If Israel is forced to miss Blues' home opener, Bryce Taylor will get his first starting assignment as a U of T quarterback. . . . Fullback-linebacker Bill Watters has been practising punting this week and will replace Israel in that capacity if necessary. . . .

Coach Dalt White may dress Tom Verth as a defensive end with Ross Dainty moving to the offence replacing injured Mike Hollett. Hollett is a doubtful starter after pulling a hamstring in Saturday's game.

Verth played a solid game at defensive end for Baby Blues at Western Saturday. Before this season, Verth hadn't played football since he was in Grade 9 at Bloor Collegiate — and that was a decade ago. He has spent the last ten years as a champion swimmer and was an All-American at University of Indiana. In his first year at Varsity last year, he set six Canadian swimming records. . . .

Defensive tackle John Fraser received a bruised shoulder in Saturday's game and is doubtful starter. . . . Bill Watters, who sustained a slight charley horse, is fit again. . . .

Defensive halfback Gerry Sternberg, who saw limited action against Gaels, may play some offence against McGill besides patrolling the defensive backfield. . . . Sophomore Riivo Iives, who suffered a shoulder separation three weeks ago, has made a speedy recovery. His shoulder brace has been removed and he will resume workouts next week. . . .

Wingback Dave Galloway has completely recovered from his charley horse and will likely draw a starting assignment against Redmen. Galloway, one of Blues' top performers in pre-season activity, only got into the Queen's game for a few plays. Doug Phibbs was the wingback. . . . White said movies of the Queen's game show Blues' offensive line was opening up plenty of holes but on many occasions the backfielders weren't hitting the openings.

INTERFAC ROUNDUP

Ties highlight opening of soccer season

By AL SCHOENBORN

The Interfaculty Soccer League was unveiled only Monday but already there are indications of an interesting struggle for the championship. In the season opener, Meds A and Trinity fought to a 2-2 deadlock. Goalscorers for Trinity were Paul Wilson and Ivan McFarlane, while Kirk Achiume and Winston McLean hit the twine for Meds.

The second game of the season, played yesterday at noon hour, also ended in a tie to leave four teams in first place. In this game, St. Mike's A and Vic I played to a scoreless draw.

TRACK

Entries for the Interfaculty Track Meet to be held at Varsity Stadium tomorrow at 1:30 p.m. must be submitted to the Intramural Office by this afternoon. Any male student of the University is eligible for the meet.

Performances at this meet will help determine Varsity's Intercollegiate track and field team. The Intercollegiate meet will be held this year at Varsity Stadium Saturday, Oct. 19. Nine colleges will be entered in the meet.

Last year at McMaster, Varsity ran up the highest score in OCAA history in sweeping the intercollegiate championship. This year's team has been hurt, however, by the graduation of Bill Crothers.

RUGGER

Defending Interfac Rugger Champs, Vic I, meet Meds A today at 1 p.m. on the back campus to open the rugger season. The west field on the back campus will feature Wycliffe against Emmanuel.

FOOTBALL

The race for the Mulock Cup, the oldest trophy in Canadian football, begins tomorrow when Victoria Scarlet and Gold, champions for the past five years, meet St. Mike's. SMC were also finalists last year. Game time is 4 p.m.

LACROSSE

Dents will make its First Division debut tomorrow at 7 p.m. against Meds A as lacrosse action resumes in Hart House.

VOLLEYBALL

Senior Skule and UC I open the volleyball season tomorrow at 1 p.m. with three other games to follow.

undecided about the team's regular line-up. This managerial problem is created by the fact Blues have an overabundance of talented players.

After Intermediates swamped Queen's Seconds 19-3 in Kingston while Blues could do no better than tie Gaels 3-3, there is a strong possibility that several Intermediates will force regulars from the senior line-up.

From the Intermediates' scrum, Bob McGee and Mike Joy are the best bets to show up in Blues' pack against the McGill fifteen Saturday.

Intermediate backs John O'Brien, Rich Hayman, and Keith Bowton all turned in first-rate performances against Queen's, and will give regulars Bill Charleton, John McNeil, and Rod Sanders something to worry about. The threat of line-up shake-ups should rout the complacency which allowed Blues to be held to a draw in Kingston. And Blues are in the good position that major personnel changes can't hurt them.

In the Scrum: Blues may be without the services of former captain Bill Nelems, John McNeil, and Ian Sinclair for Saturday's match. All are recovering from injuries suffered in Saturday's game. . . .

Rugger turnout has been so high this fall, that the club has been able to field a third team. First contest for the Thirds, is tomorrow against York University. It will be the first outing for both teams. Game time is 5:15 on the back campus.

FISTAMINATIONS FOR A QUIET WEDNESDAY

There seems to be some concern over a story in this week's Maclean's, written by Vancouver shot putter Dave Steen, "as told to Margaret Daly." Steen, Canada's top shot putter and a candidate for a medal in next year's Olympics, claims track and field officials in this country are hindering our athletes by their lack of genuine interest in the athletes' welfare. Word around Toronto track circles is that no Eastern Canada track and field athlete would stand behind Steen's charges against the Canadian Amateur Athletic Union. . . .

The Margaret Daly who collaborated on the story is the same Marg Daly who was Managing Editor of The Varsity last year. Congratulations go out to Marg, who became Mrs. David Steen in Chicago last week. The Steens are now living at the University of Oregon, where Mr. Steen is studying. . . .

In other flashes from the west coast, Father David Bauer's, Olympic Hockey team at UBC includes right winger Ray Cadieux, who scored 13 goals for Laval last season. Defenceman Ross Morrison of Toronto, who formerly played with Marlboro Juniors and University of Michigan, is also with the Olympic squad. . . .

Speaking of hockey, Blues will be favored to regain the Queen's Cup this season with most hands back from last season's second-place finishers. Blues also have defenceman Ian Sinclair, former Varsity star with McMaster last season, and Hank Montelth, younger brother of Blues' Steve Montelth. Hank is rated as good a prospect as his older brother. . . . Hockey coach Joe Kane loosens up the limbs regularly at Varsity Stadium. . . .

Jim Rhodes of Baby Blues is likely through for the season after re-injuring his knee in Saturday's game against Western Colts. Rhodes sat out last season after incurring the same injury in Blues' opener against Queen's. . . . Tony (Mighty Mouse) Allen, who saw some action with Blues last year, is sporting a cast after throwing his knee out during a drill with Vic's football team. . . . Baby Blues, who don't have a scheduled game until they face Ryerson next Thursday, are trying to line up an exhibition game for this weekend. . . .

The Blue and White Band, supposed to be vastly improved this year, was outdone by the Queens' musicians in Kingston Saturday. Queens' band showed a tremendous improvement over its efforts of the past few years. . . .

QUITE A RECORD FOR OLD MCGILL REDMEN

The McGill Daily claims that Redmen's loss to Western last Saturday marked the 28th year in a row that McGill has lost its opening regularly scheduled football game. . . . Redmen, with Gary Cullen at quarterback for the injured Glen St. John, gained a net rushing total of 13 yards. McGill's offensive front line appears to be Redmen's greatest among several weaknesses. . . .

Queen's quarterback Cal Connor is throwing the football better than ever. Last year Cal played after suffering a broken wrist while training with Montreal Alouettes and he wore a wrist brace throughout the season. With the wrist brace to normal now, Cal is firing bullets. . . . Connor said after Saturday's game he called the plays that went for long touchdowns to Bayne Norrie and Bill Edwards because Blues' defence was playing in a little tight. . . . Coach Frank Tindall explained he wanted to give Torontonians Pete Broadhurst a full game in the backfield with all-star Jim Young sidelined. . . .

Bob Dodds, Rugger Blues' wing forward, hasn't lost any of his talent although he didn't play last season. Dodds, now taking post-graduate work, has been one of Ruggerites top players so far this season. . . . There were a few extremely one-sided scores in Canadian college football over the past weekend. In the west, University of Alberta bombed Saskatchewan 78-0 and on the east coast St. Francis Xavier just got past Acadia 72-1. St. F.X. will likely once again be the Atlantic Conference champs meeting Blues in the Atlantic Bowl at Halifax Nov. 23. . . .

Students are reminded that season tickets for Blues' hockey and football games will be sold this Friday in the lobby of the Sigmund Samuel Library from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. — Winnipeg Blue Bombers are giving McGill grad Ian Montelth a chance to play but not to carry the ball. In Monday night's game against Hamilton Tiger Cats, Montelth played the entire game at fullback but didn't carry the ball once.

Engineering freshman to edit Nensis

By JOHN COOK

Tony Orav (I ASPC) will be the editor of Torontonensis '64, the Students' Administrative Council decided Wednesday night. Orav was selected over one other candidate for the job. The appointment provoked some controversy, sparked by Engineering representative John Cosegriffe (IV SPS) who said no first-year Engineering student could put out the book and pass his year.

Jack Tuttleby (III SMC) questioned Orav's lack of experience on the Nensis and said that no Nensis would be better than a bad one. At this point the meeting was moved in camera and press and public were excluded from the room. When the open session resumed, a motion appointing Orav passed unanimously. The other candidate for the position was Harry Freedman (III UC), who has previously worked for the Nensis. Council's reasons for their choice could not be learned.

Early in the meeting, a telegram from the University of Montreal Students' Union was read to council. The telegram expressed solidarity with U of T in the "Bookstore boycott." Earlier in the year, council sent a similar telegram when U of M students boycotted their cafeteria. Council also approved funds to send one delegate from University of Toronto to the Conference on Canadian American Relations at Windsor. This is the first year students have been asked to attend.

along with such personalities as the United States' state secretary and the Canadian minister for external affairs. The meeting was opened with a speech from U of T vice-president Dr. Moffat St. Andrew Woodside, who also administered the oath of office to council President Doug Ward (III Emm) and Vice-president Mary Pat MacMahon (III SMC). Dr. Woodside described the university as a "community of scholars" of which both students and faculty are members. Any tendency to split into groups must be resisted, he said. A 20-minute question period, established by a resolution at the last SAC meeting, was held for the first time Wednesday night. Bruce Lewis (II UC) tried to establish, with a series of questions, whether it was legal for council to require bilingual students for the Carabin weekend. Lewis was eventually ruled out of order by the speaker when he began to debate from the floor.

SAC supports bookstore discount feud

The present financial structure of the University of Toronto Bookstore does not permit any discount on textbooks, the Students' Administrative Council agreed Wednesday night. A reply to the council from U of T Press Director Marsh Jeanneret (text—page 4) and two reports were submitted to council.

The first report, submitted by Publications Commissioner Dave Beatty (III Trin) dealt with various possibilities for giving discounts: using texts as a loss leader item in a bookstore which also sold higher profit items; establishing self-service shelves; and re-allocation of financing so that non-texts would carry the load of a discount on texts. All were shown to be impractical or undesirable.

But Mr. Jeanneret was reported to be in favour of the SAC resolution on the controversy that students buy books where they can obtain a discount. The second report was given by Finance Commissioner Larry Ward concerning the financial records of the bookstore. Ward, along with council President Doug Ward (III Emm), was allowed to examine the bookstore's books. He reported that under the present structure the bookstore could not give a discount. Ward said the bookstore is running a three-per-cent loss on texts, just barely being made up by revenue on non-text items. Ward and Ward were given special permission from the Board of Governors to examine the books. But they were not permitted to divulge any of the figures from their examination. After the bookstore was exonerated, the SAC shifted attention to textbook publishers. President Ward pointed out that many publishers are using text profits to finance less profitable books. Ward suggested that pressure should be exerted on publishers by the new Canadian Union of Students (formerly the National Federation of Canadian University Students).

Skulemen raid Whitney Hall

By LARRY GREENSPAN

Whitney Hall was raided last night by a group of beer drinking engineers who lit a large bonfire in the quadrangle and shouted "We want sex, we want panties", while part of the Lady Godiva Memorial Band played discordantly in the background.

Shortly before 11 p.m. about 25 Skulemen charged into the quadrangle. Many were soaked by girls throwing water from the windows. One engineer attempted to enter a third story window by climbing a tree, but was driven away. Throughout the fray a lone harmonica playing engineer serenaded the women from outside the quadrangle. After 30 minutes of futile attempts to entice girls from the building, the raiders beat a slow retreat to the wail of Taps. On their way back to Devonshire House most of the group made an unsuccessful attempt to scale the Massey College iron gates.

Cake-fighters foil engineers

By VOLKMAR RICHTER

The Engineers were foiled Thursday in their annual attempt to disrupt the tradition Trinity Cake Fight. Believing fight time was 4:30 p.m., the Skulemen barricaded and locked the east and north gates of the college. But the fight went off as scheduled at the correct hour — 5:15 — and the sophomores won. Briefly, the idea of the battle is for the freshmen to barge through the entrance to the quadrangle which the sophomores defend. The freshmen have one minute to carry a piece of cake to the centre of the quadrangle. The Engineers blockaded the entrance from 3 p.m. on. But it wasn't long enough. When they left they were heard to say: "Well, we spoiled your tradition for another year!" They were wrong. And to increase the Engineers' shame, their beloved statue of Lady Godiva (stolen from the Engineering Stores Monday) was hanging from the Trinity flagpole during the entire affair. The Trinity males seemed to enjoy the traditional battle. The girls of St. Hilda's College took as much pleasure in the affair as the men. "We think it's great," said Sally Newman (III Trin). "It shows that men are still men." During the 14-hour blockade Trinity students threw a barrage of balloons filled with water down upon the engineers thoroughly drenching some of them. One group of Trinity students used a fire-hose. After the campaign, one fairly large group of Trinity men returned Lady Godiva to the Engineers as a token of their "fair-play." But first they mutilated the statue by tearing off the hair, clothes and arms.

Decide NDP here to stay

The New Democratic Party has a future in Canada, it was decided at the first Hart House debate last night. The house voted down the resolution that the NDP has no future in Canada by a 52-24 margin. Honorary visitor Andrew Brewin NDP member of parliament for Greenwood, said if the NDP did not exist, it would be necessary to create it. He added that premature obituaries of the party have been published in the press for years, but the party has continued to grow.

Mr. Brewin was highly critical of the role of the press in Canadian politics. "If you are nearly always placed on the back pages, if your story is nearly always half-told and garbled, there are great difficulties in securing election," he said. Vince Kelly (III Law) claimed the Liberals were not a reform party. History is on the side of the NDP; socialization is advancing throughout the world; the old parties are "the last refuge of conservatism"; and the country needs a sensible social welfare program, Kelly said.

Trinity sophs prepare to hold off frosh in cake fight.

Ron Mills fund closes today

A smile and a wave are missing.
Ronald Mills, the parking attendant at the Wellesley St. bridge entrance, is gone, and so is the good-will he gave every morning.

Ronald was only 28 when cancer robbed his family of his love and the campus of his cheer.

This is not an uncommonly tragic story, but the tragedy does not end here.

Since Ronald had not worked a full year, his family does not benefit from the University of Toronto employee group insurance plan which requires a year's probation before insurance is effected. The $100 he put into the pension plan was returned to his wife, but this is a negligible amount for a woman with a four-year old daughter, a two-month old son and an invalid mother requiring constant care.

To help Betty Mills, the Students' Administrative Council and The Varsity has set up a fund. The SAC contributed $100, and the total Thursday night was $585.63.

Contributions will be accepted at the SAC office until 5 p.m. today.

SHARE blitz opens Tuesday, $10,000 needed

SHARE begins a four-day campaign on campus Tuesday. The University of Toronto branch of the international students' organization hopes to raise $10,000, or twice last year's objective. The money raised will be sent to overseas students who are in financial need. None of the funds raised is kept in Canada. The money is dispensed by the World University Service without concern for race, religion, color or political view.

Students can make donations to SHARE through their school or college chairman. Special events to promote the drive next week include a noon-hour back rubbing clinic by Nursing and Occupational Therapy students at most campus coffee shops Tuesday and Wednesday.

On Thursday, men from fraternities will conduct a mile of dimes along campus sidewalks. A similar campaign last year raised $1,200 in eight hours.

An auction of girls at the Faculty of Engineering Thursday at 1 p.m. will join similar "dollar-a-pound" sales at the Trinity Buttery and the Victoria Terrace Room in closing SHARE events.

The easiest way to help SHARE is to see the campaign chairman in your school or college. The chairmen and their schools are:

And a few more short ones

New Emmanuel head

The new principal of Emmanuel College, the Rev. Dr. Earl S. Lautenschlager, was installed Wednesday night at St. Andrews Church.

In his inaugural address to a congregation including President Claude Bissell, Principal Northrop Frye of Victoria College, and principal J.S. Glen of Knox College, Dr. Lautenschlager stated that he would like to see more fundamental theology taught in the college.

He said also that he intends to be a "caretaker principal" just as Pope John XXIII was a caretaker pope.

York library opens

The Leslie Frost Library, named after the former premier of Ontario, was opened Wednesday at York University by Ontario Premier John Robarts.

The building was named after Mr. Frost in recognition of his keen interest in books and the fact that he was one of the initiators of the new university, the York Board of Governors announced.

The new library contains facilities for 100,000 volumes and modern accommodation for rare books, film periodicals and reading rooms.

During the ceremonies the library building, a residence, and a major extension to York Hall were all declared officially open.

Six U of T awards

Six University of Toronto freshmen have won Varsity Fund National Admission Scholarships, valued at $200 to $1500 each (depending on need) and good for each of four years, providing the winner maintains satisfactory standing. They are: Dianne E. Donald (1 UC), John G. Mitchell (1 Trin), Sholem Prasow (1 SPS), Barbara Stockwell (1 Trin), Margaret A. MacKay (1 PC), Gail A. Munro (1 Vic).

Attn. all photos

There will be a meeting of all Varsity photographers and anyone who wishes to do photographic work for The Varsity today at 5 p.m. in The Varsity office.

VCU meet stresses service

Service was the keynote in the opening remarks of Sandy Burnett, president of the Victoria College Union Council, at the first council meeting of the term.

Burnett told his council members Tuesday that the VCUC "can be a very useful body or it can be a colossal flop." He emphasized that the VCUC was here to represent the wishes of the students and provide the best possible services for them. One problem of concern was the so-called "anti-intellectual" public image of Victoria College, Burnett said. The council hopes to remedy this by holding regular seminars on topics of common interest so that there may be more cooperation between resident and non-resident students, and also between faculty and student members.

Vote to have cheerleaders

New College Students Council hit on what they hope is a sure-fire plan to increase college spirit — cheerleaders and football.

Chosen to cheerlead were Pam Tallon, Pam Mitchell, Vera Campbell and Marg Laing.

Expenditures were set aside this fall for football uniforms.

equipment, and material for the cheerleaders' skirts.

Cliff Nelson (II New) said that enthusiasm is lacking in all phases of college life.

To promote acting, writing, producing and directing, council voted to set up a New College Literary and Dramatic Society.

Liberal planning criticized

Giles Endicott Thursday criticized the Liberal government's economic planning policies.

Mr. Endicott, son of University College Professor N. J. Endicott and former NDP candidate in the Toronto riding of St. Davids, told an audience of eight that what he called "positive planning" should be followed by the federal government, instead of "indicative planning."

He explained that "indicative" planning involves consultations with representatives of different groups about what projects would be good for the country.

Positive planning involves more than prediction, he said. It plans the economy around clear political priorities. Positive planning advocates more action on the part of the government to fulfill its goals.

News in brief

Lash Miller opens

The new Lash Miller Chemical Laboratories will be officially opened at 3 p.m. today by Professor W. A. Noyes Jr., of the University of Texas.

After an opening address in Convocation Hall, the assembly will move in procession to the new building where the opening ceremonies will take place and a plaque will be unveiled.

The laboratories will provide accommodation for 640 undergraduate students in elementary labs, and up to 270 in advanced labs. In addition, lecture halls will hold another 950.

CUSO meets

Students interested in serving the underprivileged overseas in the tradition of the U.S. Peace Corps can have their first look into the Canadian University Service Overseas at an information meeting Oct. 15 in Hart House. CUSO will also run a series of five Saturday morning pre-selection orientations, beginning Oct. 26. Ex-volunteers who have served abroad will speak and direct panel discussions at the meetings.

Fan club fame

Graduate students at Massey College have formed "The Rosemary Speirs Fan Club" this week for the History graduate student who has prompted more discussion at the college's dinner-tables than Dr. Robertson Davies' suggested conversational topics.

A special section of the notice board has been reserved for rebuttals to the leader of the planned March On Massey following Thanksgiving next Tuesday at noon.

The men's replies are through limericks — there were nine posted on the first day only. A typical one reads:

Why don't we want Rosemary Speirs?

It's not that we're strange or austere;

It's just that we think That the use of the sink

Is for soaking our beers, not brassieres.

a waste of time

University freshmen are frequently urged, and rightly, to be selective in their choice of extra-curricular activities. These activities are a vital part of almost any well-spent university career.

But there is always the danger that the student, new on campus and anxious to participate fully in its life, but perhaps confused and too uncritical, will wind up frittering away his time in activities of little value.

Three or four years is such a short time, really.

And on a campus such as Toronto's, where there is so much to do that is good and valuable, any wasted time is a great pity.

That is the most important of several reasons why we suggest to students, who may be approached by members of fraternities, not to join them.

Organizations, of which the main reason for existence is an inferior form of togetherness, have no place in a community dedicated to intellectual and spiritual development.

And they have no place in the life of a member of such an academic community as the U of T.

Even this fellowship, which seems to be the main reason for fraternities' existence, is of a fairly shoddy sort.

The ready-made friends and "brothers" a man gets when he enters a fraternity are surely of less value than friends made by the development of common interests and human sympathy in the normal processes of social intercourse.

To make friends in the normal way may be slower and harder, even in so favorable a setting as a university, but these very difficulties help guarantee that the results will be of real value.

Moreover, one of the great advantages of the U of T is that it gives a student the opportunity to associate with people from widely varying backgrounds.

Fraternities, however, tend to attract people from similar economic and cultural backgrounds.

Fraternities offer, or claim to, a variety of benefits besides fellowship. But these are all offered as well or better by other campus bodies.

One does not have to go to the fraternities to find, on campus, social get-togethers, practice in parliamentary action, accommodation, charitable work or the promulgation of Judeo-Christian ethical precepts.

Partly, no doubt, because of the wise action of the university administration and students' council in allowing no official link between fraternities and the university, fraternities do not, in fact, play an essential role in any aspect of campus life at the U of T.

There is still at least some racial and religious discrimination in some fraternities and we feel this should repel any true scholar, even though many fraternity members are unhappy about this situation and trying hard to end it.

The indignities of fraternity "hazing" and the emphasis on fraternities as a way of building up future business "contacts" should also, we think, be repugnant to a member of an academic community.

But most of all, we think fraternities are a waste of precious time.

(Editor's note: We realize the fraternity issue has become a perennial and contentious one. We believe a great deal of discussion is needed and, therefore, encourage the submission of written opinion on the topic.)

Uncle SHARE needs you

There is something disengaging about most of the "give" campaigns in the more fortunate parts of the world.

In the public as well as in universities, most people are rarely convinced that "things are as bad as all that" or that their little contribution would mean the difference between success and failure of the campaign. Most people still view the underprivileged world as just that — another world. The potential donor's conviction breaks down at this point.

Yet anyone who has had an active part in any charity or "give" campaign will have to agree that involvement invariably leads to conviction. One develops the feeling that drama critics have termed "humanitarianism." This is not the time-worn cliché that props up in connection with every campaign's publicity.

It is rather the too-strong conviction — almost a catharsis — that makes a playgoer want to shout at Romeo in the tomb scene that Juliet is not dead. It is the conviction leading to action. It is the feeling that tempts a director of a worthwhile campaign to shout: "You have to help us. You're being blind if you don't. I know that things are as bad as all that."

But campaigns are too many for mass-involvement. So the individual is either asking (rare) or being asked (common) to give to a worthy cause. But this arrangement which puts the majority on the non-involved side rules out the motive factor of giving: conviction. Conviction comes from and leads to involvement.

The SHARE campaign, which starts Tuesday, works on the principle of involvement. Its organizers, the World University Service, have made as the basis of their operations the belief that every university student is a member of a brotherhood of purpose: a union that seeks to find the truth by way of the university. This gives every member — privileged or not — both rights and responsibilities.

So the humanitarianism is inseminated. Just how much it will come to fruition depends on the strength of our conviction.

SHARE's help to university students over the years is convincing. Name a country with a low standard of living, poor college facilities, poorly-equipped students — and SHARE will be found to be providing working funds for students in that country. SHARE-financed projects are under way in 27 countries, from restoring a university in Algiers at a cost of more than $60,000 to supplying books and TB shots to students in Vietnam.

As well, emergency and individual aid funds and a Latin American program are pouring $20,000 this year into needy areas.

The details could go on and on. And perhaps they would do the big job: convince the fortunate to share a dollar. But the major fact remains in any case. There are millions of students who haven't got a wealthy father, a friendly aunt or a government with bursaries to help them through college. There are millions who are willingly building their own classrooms and cooking their own meals. But as much as they are willing, they need help. One dollar we give them can become worth a thousand when students use it for materials, not salaries or luxuries. These students need someone to SHARE their task, the easy way, by giving them an expression of conviction in a dollar.

A dollar a scholar at U of T can build an entirely adequate university in Africa or Asia. Are we convinced that we can make the vital difference? Or is the SHARE world another world. We can show our conviction next week.

Bookstore replies to its critics

The following is the text of a letter from M. Jeanneret, Director of University of Toronto Press, sent to Dave Beatty, Students' Administrative Council publications commissioner, in reply to a request for information on U of T Bookstore operations and the feasibility of obtaining a discount for students.

Dear Mr. Beatty:

Your letter of October 1 is welcomed by this office, because it offers us our first opportunity to discuss fully the question of discounts on student texts. In answering your question as to whether or not the Bookstore is able to offer a discount on student texts, we shall outline the policy by which the Bookstore is operated to serve the University community.

We shall observe at the outset that the textbook rush at college opening inevitably generates an impression of a busy and therefore profitable enterprise. This activity encourages the erroneous inference that the University may be operating a Bookstore not merely to serve students, but to make a profit at their expense. However, a close scrutiny of the operation, and especially a careful comparison with other bookselling operations, reveals the economy and indeed the uniqueness of the textbook service provided by the University to the student body.

1. The booksellers of Canada, i.e. the established bookstores whose principal business is the retailing of books, receive on virtually all the books they choose to sell, a discount of 40% or more from publishers' catalogue prices. Nevertheless they maintain that this discount is inadequate, and their claim is strongly corroborated by the fact that in Canada bookselling is a depressed industry: bookstores in Canada are indeed actually less numerous than publishing houses. Established commercial booksellers normally make no effort to sell textbooks, which carry a discount of only 20%. On the other hand, the preponderance of the items sold at the University Book Department are textbooks purchased at this substandard 20% discount. From this narrow margin all the normal bookselling overheads consisting of staff salaries, building depreciation, maintenance of services, and inventory depreciation must be paid. This limited margin also generates the capital required to sustain a varied stock of textbooks and serious non-fiction valued at several hundreds of thousands of dollars throughout the year, and over half a million dollars during the latter part of each summer.

CONTINENTAL DRIFT

By J. TUZO WILSON

Continental drift has always appealed to the public. This is because it has been apparent, ever since the Atlantic Ocean was first mapped four hundred years ago, that the opposite coasts are similar in shape and nearly parallel. It has seemed as though the two sides could be very well fitted together.

Many have speculated that this union once existed, and that the reason for the excellence of the fit is that the Atlantic Ocean was formed by rifting what had been solid land and by pulling the two sides apart; — in effect by moving the Americas away from Europe and Africa.

Scientists, while admitting the parallelism, have been more cautious in accepting this simple explanation for it. After all, they have said, the earth is solid and rigid. It would require enormous forces to move solid continents about through solid ocean basins.

Not only has it been hard to find any cause for such great forces, but it has seemed that the consequences of such movements would be even more stupendous than the Cordillera, the Andes and the other mountains which now exist and which are sometimes held to have been built by this drifting.

Although the idea of continental motion was repeatedly raised, few scientists took it seriously until after the beginning of this century. The most that any of them would admit was that, in the nebulous beginnings of the earth, which no one then understood very well, the earth was hot and fluid and that some events might then have shaped the continents into parallel forms before they froze into their present configuration.

The earth is, of course, alone in cold space and had been shown to be losing more heat than it gets from the sun so that it was considered obvious that it must be cooling and contracting. Earthquakes, volcanoes and the uplift of mountains were believed to be natural consequences of this contraction. Folds and fractures in the rocks of disturbed regions all showed evidences of compression. There was neither any need nor any cause for such disconcerting ideas as motions in the solid earth.

Belief that the answers to natural problems are simple and can be readily found is a fallacy popular with scientists because it gives them hope that in spite of the limitations of human ability they can nevertheless understand nature.

This tendency to take the simple view led to the belief that, with the exception of the wind, all the earth and its surroundings were still. Thus it surprised Benjamin Franklin and his contemporaries when he discovered the Gulf Stream and major currents in the surface of the ocean. In spite of those discoveries, until ten years ago the depths of the oceans were considered to be completely tranquil.

When John Swallow and Maurice Ewing started careful study of the depths, plenty of evidence of deep currents was revealed. Again the launching of artificial satellites has disclosed that nearby space is not as peaceful as was supposed but is buffeted by shock waves from the sun.

The deep liquid core of the earth has been shown to have currents in it that create the earth's magnetic field. Now doubt is being raised even about the permanence of the solid earth. Is it also mobile? It is the discovery of radioactivity which has made this re-examination of the rigidity of the earth necessary. Some natural elements, notably uranium, thorium and potassium, are present in ordinary rocks in such quantities that they generate more heat than is lost by the earth. This makes the idea of a cooling and contracting earth likely to be wrong.

Radioactivity so heats the earth that below a depth of a few tens of miles the whole interior is white hot. Is it not eerie to think that by far the bulk of our earth is incandescent, and that we only live on it because the thin outer skin is cool?

This view has completely upset the nineteenth century theories. If the earth is not cooling and contracting what had been thought to be the cause of mountain building is no longer valid. If the earth is white hot, is it as rigid as we supposed? Could it be creeping just a little bit?

The first man to seriously pose these questions was a German meteorologist, Alfred Wegener, who perished on the Greenland ice cap in 1930.

He pointed out that everyone agreed that the land and especially mountains rose slowly from time to time and asked why, if one believed in slow vertical motion, one couldn't admit of some slow horizontal movements also.

To the well-known fit of the two sides of the Atlantic he added some meteorological arguments for changed locations of the continents. He argued that, regardless of any world-wide changes of climate, the poles should always remain cooler than the equatorial regions, but he showed that at a time when vast tropical forests had flourished in the Arctic, there had been contemporary ice caps in Brazil, Africa, Australia and India.

He suggested that this distribution of climates was impossible unless he continents had migrated.

His arguments were never answered, but they were widely ignored. Instead of proving his arguments wrong, his opponents emphasized that he had proposed no adequate mechanism and stressed the rigidity of the earth and the impossibility of distorting it. They based their arguments upon the study of short-term disturbances like tides or earthquakes.

For these the earth is indeed rigid, but short-term rigidity does not prove the impossibility of slow creep. It is like arguing that pitch can't flow slowly because it fractures when struck by a hammer.

For fifty years after Wegener's first statement of his theory in 1912 this impasse existed and few paid much attention to Wegener. Very recently a rapid change in opinion on the part of both geologists and physicists has been brought about by two new discoveries.

One of Wegener's few disciples was the English geologist, Arthur Holmes. He long maintained a solitary and unheeded belief that the heat generated by radioactivity in the earth is sufficient to overturn the great, solid mantle of the earth like currents rising in a heated pan of water. Of course the currents in the earth are excessively slow, moving about an inch a year in the white hot interior and cracking and carrying with them the brittle surface. He suggested this as the mechanism of drift and mountain building and proposed that one such convection current may be rising beneath the Atlantic and that it has carried the continents apart.

Holmes considered that the places where the descending limbs of these huge, rotating currents sink are marked by the deep ocean trenches which border the most volcanic and seismic coasts of the world off Japan, Chile and Indonesia, and by the great mountain ranges.

His ideas so interested the Nobel Laureate, P.M.S. Blackett, that the latter determined to try to find a means of measuring the past motion of continents. This cannot be done directly across oceans because the movements are so slow, but Blackett knew that the French had found that baked pottery and cooled lavas are weakly magnetic and preserve evidence of the direction of the earth's field at the moment of their formation.

From measurements on many old lavas Blackett showed that the apparent directions of this field had changed systematically and that these changes could best be explained by supposing that the continents had moved relative to the poles and relative to each other.

During the International Geophysical Year explorations of the sea floor revealed much more about the great mid-ocean ridge that extends down the centre of the Atlantic and other oceans. It was established that this ridge, larger than mountains on land, had different properties to those of other mountains.

Whereas the continental mountains and island arcs seemed to have been squeezed apart. This fitted Wegener's ed together. The mid-ocean ridge appeared to be in process of being lifted up and torn apart. This fitted Wegener's and Holmes' ideas that the oceans had been rifted.

Many people at the University of Toronto and elsewhere all over the world are now measuring rock magnetism and studying the ocean floors. What they find increasingly supports the view that the mantle of the earth is convecting or turning over due to hot currents which rise beneath the middle of the Atlantic and Indian Oceans and carry the continents apart.

The currents seem to converge and descend again around the margins of the Pacific which is being correspondingly reduced in size.

Here is an exciting field of science. The ideas that have been current for centuries in geography, geology and geophysics are being uprooted and dramatically changed. The belief of the past in fixed and stationary continents is giving way to a view of mobile geography. But this only begins the puzzle.

Whereas, with a fixed geography, there is only one unchanging answer, once mobility is admitted an infinity of past geographies is possible.

Thus the scientists who are struggling with continental drift are not only trying to prove that it is true, but they are trying to establish what have been the paths of the continents, how they have moved and grown, how they have come together and been rifted apart, like ice-blocks on a freezing lake.

It will take some time to reconstruct past geography in the correct mobile pattern and to rewrite all geology and geophysics to fit. If indeed we have been trying to confine our ideas by a rigid straight-jacket, when the earth has in fact been mobile, then we have not understood the earth.

If this is the case, it is not surprising that we have been unable to make good predictions about where to prospect for ores or oil, or when to expect earthquakes and volcanic eruptions.

The history of every branch of science is marked by occasional dramatic changes in direction of thought followed by vigorous advances. Just now a revolution is in progress in the science of the solid earth. It is exciting to experience. If successful it promises spectacular advances in what has long been a quiet and neglected subject.

The Varsity Weekend Review is pleased to have Professor J. Tuzo Wilson as a contributor. The article is not a reprint but an original article written for the Weekend Review.

The sound of surprise

By DAVID JAECKEL

Like, you've got this radio, see, and you turn it on to hear some jazz. I mean, it says right in the radio listings: Jazz Unlimited, CJBC, Saturday at 4 p.m. What you'll probably hear around this particular time is "... and as they go into the clubhouse turn it's Flatfoot coming up hard on the outside

No children, that's not a far-out modern type singer, that really is a horse race. Which sort of sums up the CBC attitude toward jazz—they can't believe that a horse race isn't legitimately part of a jazz program.

Those who are really enthusiastic about jazz will ignore this as best they can, and, through the clatter of hoofbeats, hear some good music, especially in the first hour of the program.

Although Phil Mackellar does talk a lot, and although his misinformation regarding artists and recordings has become legendary, the selection and variety of this first portion has remained very good. But after the initial hour comes "jazz today", which is, if you're not addicted to Gerry Mulligan, Stan Getz, Bob Brookmeyer, Maynard Ferguson and Oscar Peterson, a pretty myopic view of modern jazz. Very little is heard from Miles, Monk, Mingus or Coltrane, and nothing at all from other important but less well known jazzmen. All of which means that if you are well acquainted with modern jazz, you're going to wonder where everybody went.

If you like big bands (which Mackellar is apparently trying to bring back single-handed) and modern jazz which doesn't swing too hard, then this is your program.

The CBC has two other Saturday jazz spots on their other station, CBL. At 3 p.m. it's good old traditional jazz done in a good old tasteless fashion. Same old tunes, same old solos almost every week. The occasional bright spots aren't worth waiting for.

At 10.30 the same evening comes a program of more varied format which may have possibilities. Last week Sonny Greenwich and Ed Bickert played some guitar solos and duets which were separated by someone declaiming Shakespearean sonnets. The sonnets were not up to the high standards we have come to expect from Shakespeare, but the jazz was good, especially the arrangements and the Greenwich solos. Whether this sort of thing can be kept up is difficult to predict. At least it isn't interrupted for a play-by-play account of the local water polo matches.

The Del Mott program on CJBC at one p.m. daily includes occasional jazz and no commercials. The Mackellar morning program includes a similar amount of jazz, a lot of vocal and big band music, and more commercials than Jack Parr was ever saddled with. Neither of these programs makes any attempt to call itself a jazz presentation, which is just as well.

Phil Mackellar also has a late show on CKFH. There are fewer commercials but the music never gets too far out. This isn't really all Mackellar's fault. Although he seems to like a certain type of music, a lot of other people seem to like it too. If you don't you're out of luck.

So what you do is try WEBR (Buffalo, 970), where Carroll Hardy does an excellent two hours from 11.15 p.m. Saturdays, and on Sundays for ninety minutes from 6.30 in the evening. Both segments have low pressure commercials, a wide range of modern jazz, and a disc jockey who doesn't like to hear himself talk.

The fortunate few with an FM set can listen to jazz on CHFI Sundays at eleven, and nightly on CHUM at somewhere about the same hour. This vagueness as to starting time is, due to the what-me-worry attitude of our "Fine Arts" station to program schedules. The CHUM announcer is Gary Ferrier, who has a certain facility at the piano which he displays between records, and who improvises (with occasional interesting results) on the thematic line of his commercials. Between the piano solos and the commercials comes some music which is worth waiting for. And, like Hardy, Ferrier isn't afraid to play a track which might last more than four minutes.

That exhausts the available jazz on radio, and if you think there should be more in a listening area this size, you're right. But you have to remember that this is Toronto.

Local attractions: Don Thompson, Norm Amadio, Archie Alleyne and company finished up last week at Georges', but may appear after hours at one of the local coffeehouses. These performances are usually unannounced, so you have to be lucky to find them ... at the Cellar, Fred Duligal and his sextet continue their reworking of ideas which Tony Scott, Bob Brookmeyer, Stan Getz and Gerry Mulligan decided not to use. Although the group has apparently been together for almost a year, the arrangements are derivative and superficial and the members keep forgetting them. However, all the horn men are fluent soloists, and worth hearing for that alone, while Charley Rollo enlivens things considerably with some adventurous piano excursions. In addition the club has more atmosphere than an opium den and some of the denizens should interest the student of sociology. If you come early Clem Hambourg might play the piano and the waitresses are groovy ... what more could you ask ... whatever it is you won't find it at the Colonial, where somebody hasn't improved since last week.

at Hart House

Sunday, October 13th, members of Hart House and their guests will be treated to a fascinating collection of folk-songs presented by Jan Rubes. Mr. Rubes, well-known singer to Canadian television, radio and film-viewers, has selected a wide range of songs by composers who found "no other way to express their love and joy, hate and sorrow."

Mr. Rubes (his name is pronounced Yan Roobash) has had a distinguished career ranging from operatic roles in Europe, United States, Mexico and Canada; to appearances in motion pictures (he will be featured in the Walt Disney film "The Incredible Journey" to be released this fall). At present he is appearing at the O'Keefe Centre with the Canadian Opera Company.

The 9 o'clock Sunday concert is the opening concert of the 63-64 musical program at Hart House. Tickets are available free of charge of male undergraduates and their guests and may be picked up at the Hall Porter's Desk.

Rare book exhibit

Rare editions of Keats and Baudelaire will be on exhibit in the Hart House Art Gallery for two weeks from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. (Ladies invited after 2:00) starting next Wednesday.

More than 100 rare or private press volumes in ten library cases will show a panorama of literature and book production from 1795 to 1821 (Keats) and from 1821 to 1867 (Baudelaire). Robert S. Kenny, the noted book collector who is loaning Hart House the books and arranging the exhibit, says that it will reach the most exacting scholarly requirements. It is the finest collection of Baudelaire and one of the finest of Keats in the country.

Shows world gone to the dogs

By VOLKMAR RICHTER

Is Mondo Cane art or pure sensationalism?

Movie fans and critics will argue this point for a long time after seeing the new Italian feature by Gualtiero Jacopetti, the producer of Women of the World (a later picture but an earlier Toronto arrival).

The reason for the controversy is simple. Mr. Jacopetti shows us his view of this sick, ridiculous world and makes some very valid points. To do so he has to show scenes that are ugly and shocking. Many condemn this as sensationalism.

For instance, one sees a New Guinea mother suckling a baby pig; Italians celebrating the crucifixion by severing their legs with glass, and running the crucifixion by severing through the streets with blood gushing down; and a Nepal soldier decapitating an ox with one mighty swish of the sword and one tremendous splatter of blood.

The movie is composed of sundry such episodes, but each is related to the next and thus it moves swiftly and effortlessly. Altogether, they show a picture of this world that few are able to see in a lifetime. In its entirety the movie shows us the ridiculous, the horrible, the incongruous ways of man.

In one scene we see Hollywood women weeping profusely over the lavish graves of their pets in the affluent Pasadena dog cemetery. In the very next we see Formosa gourmets choose the special little puppy that would make the best meal. For an added appetite-teaser we see chefs hacking up, cleaning and preparing the little canines for the oven.

Mr. Jacopetti certainly does not shy away from controversial material. As he says "It is not the work of the chronicler to sweeten the truth but to report it objectively."

A member of the cast of Mondo Cane

And his he does with great skill. He is a former newsreel and powerful documentary travelogue.

producer who has created for us an interesting, fascinating The camera work is extremely mobile creating just that added touch of realism and excitement. The narration (also written by him) is cynical and sarcastic, the editing is well done. All in all, the movie is one of the most rewarding days at the theatre I have spent in a long time.

Two episodes are worthy of special mention. The first should interest the CUNCD. We see Bikini ten years after the bomb and we find that a strange mutation has taken place in all the wildlife. Sea gulls lay dead eggs. Turtles, that would ordinarily return to the sea have lost all sense of direction and head inland to die of heat and fatigue. Grotesque bulbous eyed fish live in the trees.

In the Malayan Archipelago we see girls fattened up to 264 pounds for the desires of the local dictator. He has hundreds of such wives and 8 or 10 children by each. The purpose of this personal population explosion is to show off his virility. Then we see the chief himself—a scowny 94-pound weakling.

The title is colloquial Italian for "Dog's Life". As a commentary on man it is particularly effective. Many will be shocked; I know a man that sells stag movies and he was shocked. But I still recommend the picture.

VIPs fail to impress

By ARTHUR ZELDIN

Very simply, this picture could have been diverting, but wasn't. It has what has been proven to be a very workable plot: strangers in a public place are forced by external circumstances (here, the fog which delays a plane) to reveal their personal problems and to relate to each other. Anyone remember "The High and the Mighty"? It has a cast of formidable screen personalities — Elsa Martinelli, Linda Christian, Margaret Rutherford and Orson Welles are included, along with Elizabeth Taylor and Richard Burton.

It has enough "production values" — clothes by Givenchy, cars by Rolls Royce — to satisfy the most ardent fan of Ross Hunter-Doris Day type movies.

But it certainly lacks character development. We get the labels right away: Tycoon, Unhappy Rich Wife, Money-Hungry Producer, Brainless Sexpot — and they stick. The dialogue is the glue. We know that R. B. is a tycoon by the way he lands his helicopter and announces that he would like to buy a "fleet" of them. We just know that his wife Liz has been Taken for Granted by her expression of spiritual mortification upon receiving yet another weary bunch of diamonds from her husband.

The secondary roles are similarly ridden with clichés, and their performers subsided to the occasion. Except for Miss Rutherford.

Her role is really no better than any of the rest — at best it is a burlesque of the legendary British dowager — but she invests it with her considerable talent and personal sense of fun. However the character is so disconnected from the general context that she serves to emphasize the inert and contrived nature of the plot. The last-moment film contract which relates Welles-producer to Rutherford-duchess is purely a script-writers' device.

Two final observations: If this film is any evidence, Richard Burton off the serious stage is lost. Secondly, fellow followers of the Dream-Goddess Cult, be warned that Liz looks paunchy and downright plain in some scenes.

SMOKE SWING & SEX

2

In recent years Toronto has spawned many coffee houses, jazz clubs, sidewalk cafes, and other avant garde night spots. Most of these cater to the college crowd, and are close to the campus.

The top club in town is the BOHEMIAN EMBASSY. The Embassy is on the third floor of an abandoned warehouse, on a back alley called St. Nicholas St. It is half a block west of Yonge and Wellesley — just look for the red lion swinging above the door.

There is a night for just about everybody at the Embassy. Monday is open house. There is no charge and no scheduled entertainment. Tuesday is folk-singing night. But the Ambassador is thinking of making it an evening of art films. Longhair-types invade the club Wednesday to hear the Royal Conservatory orchestra.

Thursday is literary night. Virtually every local poet has read his works at the Embassy some Thursday evening. A few times a year there is a pohoot or poetnanny, at which a dozen poets will each read a few selections.

Some 15 plays have been premiered at the Embassy, most of which were written by members of the club. Peter Oomen, one of the Bohemian managers, invites campus playwrights to submit any work they would like performed at the Embassy. Although Literary Night always loses money, it will be maintained as a training ground for creative writers.

Friday is the night for Mary Jane and Winston Young, one of Toronto's veteran folk-teams. On Saturday there are folk songs till midnight and Brian Westwood's jazz trio till three. The biggest attraction of the week is the Hootenanny. Several hundred folk-niks invade the warehouse every Sunday night to hear a round of troubadors.

Don Cullen, the Bohemian Ambassador, attributes the club's popularity to its well-greased publicity machine. A few years ago the club made front-page news across the country when the Bohemian Embassy was listed in the Yellow Pages under Consulates.

One of the club's most popular creations is the Village Revue, an annual potpourri of satire and spoofery. Don agrees that much of the material is rather pathetic.

"If you're going to be experimental you have to reconcile yourself to the fact that you're going to do some pretty crappy stuff."

The membership fee at the Embassy is 25 cents and the admission charge is $1 Tuesday to Sunday.

The PURPLE ONION is the big attraction in the Yorkville area. The club features some of the top names in local and imported folk music. This weekend Carolyn Hester sings in a lovely soprano voice as she strums a guitar. Coming attractions include Malka and Joso, the Travellers, and Brock Peters.

What does the Purple Onion think of the current boom in folk music? "Frankly," says Sam Gutmacher, one of the four owners, "it stinks!" The fast-buck people have moved in and they promote a commercial brand of music. But the Purple Onion will stick to genuine folksy stuff.

This year the Onion is sponsoring a series of folk concerts at Massey Hall. First up are Miriam Makeba and Val Pringle, Nov. 8. Tickets range from $2.50 to $4. Ian and Sylvia have been booked for a concert in February.

Membership at the Onion is 50 cents. The cover charge is $1 Wednesday, Thursday and Sunday; $1.50 on Friday and Saturday. The Purple Onion has a special $5 membership which is good on weekdays all year.

The VILLAGE CORNER at Avenue Rd. and Peel was the first folk song club in Toronto. It started in February, 1960, as a dingy coffee house with bona fide atmosphere. Now the Corner is impeccable, with colorful plastic chairs arranged in neat rows. Shelly Abrams, the manageress of the clean-cut Village Corner, feels that the days of the bohemian folk singer and the back-alley-club are over.

The Corner features primarily Toronto talent, but they are bringing in Len Chandler from New York for a special engagement Nov. 18-24. David Wiffen is appearing this weekend.

The Village Corner is open every day, from 9 till 1 on weekdays till 3 on Friday and Saturday. Membership is $1. Admission is $1.25 Monday till Thursday and $1.50 on weekends.

71 YORKVILLE is the place to go for a game of chess or a do-it-yourself hootenanny. Joso Spralja was a regular attraction here, but he has been busy lately in the team of Malka and Joso.

The GATE OF CLEVE serves coffee and culture in the Dupont-Davenport area. The Gate swings on Fridays and Saturdays from 9 till 3. The TWILIGHT ZONE has pasted posters all over campus, but whenever I enter the Zone the place is in the dark.

Avenue Rd., north of Bloor, used to be a promenade of sidewalk cafes. The Cafe Anglais died out this summer with a whimper, and the Picadilly Club shut down with a bang. The Half Beat is alone now and doing a lively trade. The Yorkville area is still amply spotted with outdoor spots: the Penny Farthing, the Cumberland, Old York

Lane, and the Coffee Mill in Loathsome Mews.

Honest Ed is in the cafe business too. SAINTS AND SINNERS is the new coffee house, concealed among the pastel palaces on Markham. One of the rooms has elegant Victorian decor, another is strictly nouveau with wicker chairs suspended from the ceiling.

THE CELLAR is one of the two spots in Toronto where minors can listen to jazz. The Cellar is on Avenue Rd. at Davenport, and naturally, one flight down.

Fred Duligal's quintet is the regular group, but local and visiting musicians often sit in for a set. The jazz jumps from midnight till 4:30 on Friday and Saturday. From 10 to 12 a folksinger alternates with Clem Hambourg, the venerable legend in Toronto entertainment. Nobody but Clem could get away with playing chamber music in a night club.

Speaking of Clem, let us have a moment's silence for the House of Hambourg. For a decade it was the most creative club in town. But rising costs and falling rafters forced Clem to close his doors last winter.

Another fellow at the Cellar is John Kassapaian, an energetic Armenian accordionist. And John seems just as able when he blows a horn with the jazz band. Sunday night Ron Peck's quartet sweeps the Cellar.

Steve Ciotlos, keeper of the Cellar, deplores the city's contradictory attitude towards coffee houses. The tourist bureau praises the clubs for giving Toronto a continental atmosphere. Then the housing inspector condemns the same clubs as fire traps.

Admission to The Cellar is $1.50 except Wednesday night which is Open House.

THE FIRST FLOOR CLUB is the other sober jazz club in town. It stands at 33 Asquith Ave., one block northeast of Bloor and Yonge.

Boss Julian Burns just gave the First Floor a facelifting to complement his new policy of Big Name Jazz. Art Blakey and his Jazz Messengers start the drum rolling this week Oct. 14-19. Admission is $2.50 Monday, Friday and Saturday.

An ATL card will get you in for $2 Tuesday to Thursday.

If Art Blakey is well received, Julian plans to bring in a New York group every month or so. Horace Silver is on deck for November.

Local jazz is the regular fare at the First Floor Club on weekends. Don Thompson, Ron Collier, Don Franks and Phil Nimmons are typical groups on Fridays and Saturdays from 12 to 4. Rob McConnell's sextet plays Sunday from 9 till 1. The regular fare is $1.25 for members and $1.50 for guests.

There is a wealth of entertainment in Toronto, if you are of voting age or can pass for 21.

The newest and most atmospheric spot in town is CASTLE GEORGE, the renovated attic of George's Spaghetti House a Dundas and Sherbourne. The Castle presents a convincing medieval image with Russian icons, stained glass windows, heraldic arms, and antique furnishings. A superb selection of Italian wines and dishes is served by correctly-attired squires.

The present troubador is Elan Stewart, a bonnie lass from Dundee. She sings a repertoire of sweet and saucy Highland ballads with clannish elan. She is accompanied by Amos Garrett on the guitar. Next week Malka and Joso return to The Castle, to be followed by Josh White.

The main floor at GEORGE'S is still dedicated to jazz. Ron Rully is currently tooting from 10 p.m. on, and Moe Koffman starts fluting Monday.

The FRIAR'S TAVERN at Yonge and Dundas is another recent addition to the local jazz scene. The decor is monastic and the music is often fantastic.

Wild Bill Davis is featured this week. He will be followed by Chico Hamilton, Oscar Peterson, and other big-name jazzmen.

The TOWN TAVERN on Queen East usually carries a groovy entertainer. Veteran blues-singer Joe Williams is appearing for two weeks.

The SAVARIN TAVERN recently launched a new policy of big name entertainment. Meese Della Reese is belting out songs this week, and Gene Krupa will appear soon. The cover charge varies depending on demand and supply.

The COLONIAL TAVERN on Yonge offers lots of noise for the boys. Big Tiny Little is bellowing this weekend. Kay Martin and her bodyguards take over Monday. Peppered along Yonge are a series of night clubs offering brass and boobs. The BRASS RAIL features beautiful babes who aren't quite. Blonde and buxom Brandy brays on the main floor, if you dig him/her/it. Upstairs Frank Motley and his crew perform, with little Jackie Shane doing the vocal. Is he or isn't she? Only its mother knows for sure. . .

At the ZANZIBAR Princess Fariday swivels her hips to such tunes as Havanagila. Terry Roberts and the Deans provide rock-a-belly music.

The BROWN DERBY has a coorful group called Hines and the Browns.

Tories lose New Frontier leader

By DAVID SILCOX

The resignation of Hon. Robert W. Macaulay owing to ill health robs the Robarts cabinet of its most impressive figure.

A member of the legislature for 12 years, Macaulay emerged in the past two or three years as one of the "new men" of the Canadian Conservative Party. He possesses in rare abundance those qualities which the Kennedy revolution in the United States and the Wilson boom in Britain have shown to be prerequisites for success for Western political leaders.

At 42 he was totally involved in and committed to his party and politics in general. His zeal for political infighting made him feared by his opponents but highly admired by partisans.

Macaulay ran a close third in the Conservative leadership convention of 1961, where he might have been described as the "Suburbanites" candidate. His speech on that occasion was by far the most forceful and the only speech to include a specific programme for the province.

When his defeat came on the fifth ballot, Macaulay crossed the floor to offer his support to John Robarts in the last ballot against Kelso Roberts. Failing to defeat the old general himself, he was intent on seeing someone doing so. As the minister most closely associated with the government's plans for accelerating the growth of the provincial economy he held the posts of Minister of Economics and Development and Minister of Energy Resources.

The Robarts' reconstruction of the government's image and the party's organization could hardly have been accomplished without Macaulay's assistance. Not the least of his services to his party must have been the confidence his presence in the Cabinet gave to those who pay the party's very large bills.

It seemed unlikely that Robert Macaulay would remain a cabinet minister in Ontario for very long. What was expected was not retirement because of ill health but elevation to the high command of the Federal party.

With the political demise of George Hees, Macaulay's patron in the 1961 leadership contest, no one could have better represented the industrial and commercial interests of the golden horseshoe area in a reconstructed Conservative party.

His political "sex appeal" far outweighed that of senior industrialists and financiers like Wallace McCutcheon.

The Conservative party must make an appeal to the suburban vote if it is to regain office. More so, since the coming redistribution of parliamentary seats will make its rural strength less significant. Here was where Macaulay was a proved success.

It might well be the case that Robert Macaulay will be able to return to politics after a year or two's rest. His continuance in the Legislature gives some grounds for such a view. The newly elected Conservative Government in Ontario has time to recover from the loss but we shall never know now what part Macaulay might have played in reviving the decayed Federal party.

Brainwashing in B. C. schools?

By MIKE HORN

A hideous plot has been uncovered! Forget about Guy Fawkes: a B.C. lawyer has charged that socialists are brainwashing B.C.'s school children and conspiring to take over the entire school system. The report of this bare-fisted expose did not add whether the NDP means to pay a good price for the system; no doubt court action will follow.

Not surprisingly the statement was made by a Socred. However it is surprising that Mr. Hine, this vigilant member of the bar, is the brother-in-law of Education Minister Leslie Peterson. Mr. Peterson strikes me as a responsible man; did Mr. Hine check his charges with his more illustrious relative?

To this British Columbian, well-acquainted with the Department, teachers and education students, and reasonably well acquainted with the NDP, Mr. Hine's claims seem nothing short of ludicrous. Teachers and education students alike are a politically colorless, even clueless, lot. Professional ethics do not allow them to take political sides in the classroom; and the politically interested citizen is generally found in law or other professions.

Mr. Hine has not yet substantiated his charges. This does not mean that there are no card-carrying NDP members among teachers. Some teachers, no doubt, are Socreds. So what? Mr. Hine has said that he has "plenty of specific instances but (he) doesn't want to be brought down to a pinpoint - it would defeat (his) objective." May we soon expect something like: "I have here the names of 57 teachers... etc?"

What is Mr. Hine's objective? If the public supposes that he will prove his charges in any meaningful way, it will be disappointed. To call Mr. Bennett a liar, however morally reprehensible, does not establish those teachers to be socialists who are alleged to have spread this outrageous slander.

To take straw votes in class may be contrary to the Provincial Elections Act, but it hardly demonstrates that the Teachers' Federation or the School Boards have been infiltrated by cold-eyed NDP fanatics.

The whole thing cannot be an election stunt. Mr. Bennett has his mandate and can afford to do without the "Social Credit Free Enterprise versus NDP State Socialism" red herring for a few years. The chances are Mr. Hine hopes to make some private political capital. The chances are also that he is painfully sincere; other Socreds have in the past quite sincerely said the strangest things.

Refuting Mr. Hine, however, resembles tilting with windmills. We assume that we know what he means, and if he lived anywhere else in Canada our assumption would probably be correct. But in B.C. political tags have during the last ten years steadily lost their conventional meanings.

A few years ago the NDP's sensible plan to provincialize the B.C. Electric Company was denounced by the Socreds as rank socialism. Then Mr. Bennett took over the BCE and called it free enterprise. Government control of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway and the B.C. Ferries is likewise in the best tradition of free enterprise. The premier has promised comprehensive Medicare.

Since this is all free enterprise, what foul schemes do these pink pedagogues have in mind?

Perhaps we should give Mr. Hine a chance to define socialism. After all, it may mean the restoration of B.C. Electric to private ownership.

J. S. Cowan on our defence policy

See No Evil: A study of the chaos in Canadian defence policy By John Scott Cowan, Foreword by John Gellner. (Annex Publishing Company, 1050 Eglinton Ave. West, 50 cents).

(Barry O'Neill is the Toronto president of the Combined Universities Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament. John Cowan is a third-year mathematics student at University College.)

By BARRY O'NEILL

See No Evil, an 18,000-word tract, examines in fair detail the structure and purposes of the Canadian defence establishment.

John Cowan's book is on a high level of scholarship. Perhaps his lack of formal training in political science has been a blessing, for his book is direct and concise with a minimum of vagueness.

Part of Cowan's thesis is that Canada has tried to duplicate in miniature the defence set-up of a major power. Because of this strategy our resources have been badly misdirected. This waste has been increased by general inefficiency, in accordance with Parkinson's Law.

This thesis is not unusual. The important contribution of the book is the detailed confirming evidence.

Much of our army would be useful only in a general war, he states. There is no use maintaining an army for such a war, since our contribution would be insignificant compared to that of the U.S., and ineffectual against those weapons of large-scale destruction which would soon follow. Our hope of avoiding such a war, he writes, lies at present in the American deterrent.

"The army is scattered all over the country as if to repulse a paratroop attack on the lakehead. We have already disposed of a land defence of Canada so whatever the army does it will not do here. Yet we have not the heavy air transport to move these brigades to Europe (in time)."

Many of our air weapons, he continues, are intended to defend the entire nation. Because of our massive land area and small population, we have no hope of success. Furthermore, we have been forced for economic reasons to place our defensive air of our army for use as a UN police force or in guerrilla actions, phasing out armour and some artillery, emphasizing equipment for paratroop and guerrilla warfare.

Concerning our navy, he writes: "The navy should be basically for transport and supply. Our present emphasis on anti-submarine weapons is quite beyond us."

It seems to this reviewer that this last proposal is too strong. Officers of the American navy have contradicted his speculations, saying the Royal Canadian Navy's submarine detection aircraft fulfill a useful role and should be retained.

I would also like to say something about Cowan's style. It is important especially when writing difficult technical tracts to keep in mind two of Bertrand Russell's suggestions:

1. "If you want to write a statement with a great many qualifications, put some of the qualifications in separate sentences."

2. "Never use a long word if a short word will do."

A debating technique is used, probably unintentionally, several times in the work.

When the writer wishes to disestablish a thesis, he states: "It is questionable that such-and-such." The reader is forced to assent to this. He has never heard of such-and-such. It is completely questionable to him. However, in later argument, "it is questionable" is cited to mean: "There is discomfiting evidence."

However, the logic is generally sound and Cowan establishes his position. This book is very useful for those interested in a concise summary and criticism of Canadian defence. It is unfortunate that Cowan did not publish a year ago. He could have provided a useful basic document to the nuclear debate.

J. S. COWAN

forces at a few bases ("low density dispersion") making them highly vulnerable to attack with missiles, stand-off weapons, etc.

Our navy, he states, has taken on the task of submarine detection over an impossible expanse of ocean.

Simply, stated, the Canadian defence department is biting off far more than it can chew. For the RCAF, Cowan proposes the elimination of anti-bomber forces and the rejection of nuclear weapons.

He suggests halving the size

THEATRE: The Second City

By ERIC RUMP

It's sad, but after "Beyond the Fringe" it seems all downhill. Good things were expected from that show, but when first seen, it past all expectations. Suddenly the revue had been given new and unexpected dimensions. Any subject, it seemed, could be used by them for comic purposes, be it politics or the clergy, music or literature, or the little, lonely men who have made failures of their lives.

As well, the "Fringers" had forged a style which allowed them to shine as individuals yet work together as a group, and nothing since, on either side of the Atlantic has come anywhere near them.

Not that the Secod City, playing this week at the Royal Alex., aims to imitate Beyond the Fringe, but comparisons are inevitable. Unfortunately they do not meet up to the standards of their British counterparts.

The Second City started off in a Chicago cabaret, experimenting with improvised theatre, and the best products from that have been put together to form the present review. I suspect that the actors would be happier in the cabaret setting, for they seemed ill at ease behind the imposing proscenium of the Royal Alex.

Under such conditions, it is impossible to achieve the easy convivial rapport with the audience — was dull and club can produce. The group's only fully improvised sketch — a poetry recital which took off from a line suggested by the audience — was rull and heavy and they were most successful in things that had been more fully rehearsed — the difficult child at camp, the C.I.A., the scientist clashing with the Pentagon.

Nor did the show as a whole achieve coherence. The first half consisted of a series of short and snappy sketches, whereas the second was largely taken up by a playlet on the lines of Genet's "The Balcony." This was competently handled, but being a different sort of thing from what had gone before, required a change of mood and so the show lost pace.

Indeed competence is the word that keeps coming back to mind. The actors perform with skill and there are a number of amusing moments. What the revue lacks are those flashes of rare delight which one can tuck away in the memory for years to come.

MUSIC

By DAVID S. BUNDLER

In May of 1962 in the rebuilt Coventry Cathedral, the contemporary composer of serious music suddenly grasped and wrenched the popular imagination.

Since Beethoven, a tradition has grown which takes it for granted that composers and their first listeners must be alienated one from the other. Scornful shouts, fist-fights and hasty exits by the composer have become the conventional trappings of important premiers.

The composer is accused of turning his back on lovers of fine music. "Serious music is a dead art," Henry Pleasants proclaims, concluding that "jazz is modern music, and nothing else is."

But the composers themselves have been concerned too. In 1936, Stravinsky wrote, "I have a very distinct feeling that in the course of the last fifteen years my written work has estranged me from the great mass of my listeners. . . art postulates communion, and the artist has an imperative need to make others share the joy which he experiences himself."

Since that time, of course, Stravinsky's career has taken an even more radical turn with similar public response: the scores after 1940 are rarely performed, but at least the public seems now to have progressed into his so-called neo-classical or second period. (Pulcinella, Oedipus, Symphony of Psalms, etc.)

Since Coventry has there then been a renaissance of sorts? Many will say, "of course not, for the best composers have always been popular. Why look at Samuel Barber whose Adagio for Strings is loved by all who have heard it. And when Britten gives us the War Requiem, the infallible public recognizes its greatness intuitively."

This convenient and untroubled explanation of the "natural law" type is one we would all love to embrace.

Unfortunately, while it may be true that audiences have taken some very great works to their hearts, it is surely also true that they have championed at least as many pot-boilers. And there is considerable justice in the contention that music by its very nature as a new language must despair of prompting mass response.

In my own view, there is no need to grimly prophesy the decline of western music. Nor, on the other hand can we herald a renaissance, the return of the prodigal son of Saint Cecilia into the arms of its people as it were.

Benjamin Britten has been widely admired since his teens for the freshness and vitality of his invention. And yet he too had "alienated" his audience, by the very fact that he avoided most of the traditional forms (symphonies, sonatas and concertos) and by the even more shocking fact for musicians of the avant-garde schools, that he built his scores primarily on the strength of his melody.

More than any other single factor, the disappearance of "good tunes" had dismayed listeners at large. And Britten agreed. Moreover, since audiences were flocking to the opera house as never before, he had happily stumbled upon a ready-made audience. Thus while his rather exotic works for solo voices and chamber groups invariably slipped by unnoticed, he did begin to have some popular success, at least in his own country, through his operas. However, since the great opera houses of other countries, like La Scala, the Met, the Staatsoper and the Metropolitan are notoriously loath to produce new works, fine scores like Albert Herring and the Turn of the Screw did not travel far.

Yet, at the reopening of Sadler's Wells in 1945, Peter Grimes was warmly received, and like the War Requiem, the aura surrounding its premiere was a strong contributing factor. Even more important, Britten has not written many works which may easily be incorporated into symphony programs. His early works are often considered too clever by half, only the gloomy Sinfonia da Requiem being deemed worthy of the equally gloomy concert audiences. Most of the other works involving orchestra require super-sensitive vocalists. (Nocturne and Les Illuminations), deft one-armed pianists (Diversions), or inhumanly courageous horn players (Serenade.)

For all of these works, Britten had artists like Pears, Wittgenstein, and Brain in mind. It may be that we shall have to wait until all Britten's ideal performers have passed away before others will dare to invite comparison.

At the opening concert of the TSO this season, the music of Britten (Sinfonia da Requiem) will be a welcome visitor. His American contemporary, Samuel Barber, is also represented, by his new Piano Concerto, which was performed for the first time during the opening week of Lincoln Centre last fall. It will be recorded by the same pianist, John Browning, after he performs it with the Cleveland Orchestra early in the new year.

Both the Britten and the Barber works are lyrical, romantic if you like in style, and both tend to exploit virtuosity in the nineteenth-century sense. Nonetheless, there is much here, and significantly, they are that rare twentieth-century composition: the one that is performed for a second time.

Three hoots next week

By LYNDA HALVERSON

Hootenanny — or the aborted "hoot" — is a term which has become a thorn in the side of the folk music field. It bleats from billboards and riddles the advertising on entertainment pages. There are no less than three hoots advertised for the coming week in Toronto.

In order of scheduled dates, these begin with the Grand Ole Opry and Hootenanny "Blockbuster" tomorrow at Massey Hall featuring among others, Flatt and Scruggs and the Carter Family with Mother Maybelle (the latter lady being one of Joan Baez' confessed idols).

Three days later on October 15th, we are offered something called the Hootenanny Revue of 1963 at the Park Theatre. The lineup there will include the Hamilton Singers, the Sykes Brothers and many others. (Many Others is a new act which is listed for all the hoots).

Then on October 18th, Maple Leaf Gardens will be the scene of the "World's Biggest Hootenanny". To this we are asked to bring our guitars and banjos. Headed up by the Tarriers the list includes Judy Henske (of that incredible movie "Hootenanny Hoot"), the Halifax Three, Elan Stuart and the Towne Criers (both of whom appeared at Mariposa) as well as some of the better local talent (the Pioneers, the Chanteclairs, Dave Wiffen, Greg Winkfield etc.). And again, Many Others. With the folk acts . . . or the weekend's who's where The Fifth Peg has a new manager (Wally Cowan), a new name (The Establishment) and a lower membership price . . . featured group there this weekend is the Hamilton Singers making their first Toronto appearance . . . over at the Village Corner is Dave Wiffen, a local lad with a driving style . . . Carolyn Hester is appearing at the Purple Onion . . . Ted and Marion held over at the Gate Of Cleve . . . Al Cromwell scheduled to open at Steele's Tavern Monday.

Tonight at Hart House CUCND is presenting a concert. Admission is free and some very good talent lined up. This is one group that promises to have something to sing about.

REVIEW 10

A cool, white light flickers in the dissecting room as the sound of scalpels slicing human flesh blends with murmurs of interested discovery.

The medical students are at work. Bodies partially stuffed into plastic sacks lie awkwardly on long metal-topped tables.

Bits of bone and tissue litter the scene.

Through the ear of each cadaver is threaded a wire loop attached to a numbered tag. That is the only identity the specimen has left to him.

About 170 first-year medical students are taking the Anatomy course this year. Students from other faculties do some work with corpses but, as one medical man put it, they get "the hunks we're through with."

A group of eight Medsmen gets one body and it lasts them all year. They usually work together on it, four on each side.

Almost the first thing the students do when they lift the black groundsheet from the withered corpse is name it.

Then later: "Have you seen Lou's kidney?"

The light-hearted approach is necessary.

"We have to be no more concerned with what we're doing than if we were taking apart a television set," a Medsman told me.

"If we got thinking about the specimens as real people, we'd go nuts."

EAT LUNCHES THERE

So the students talk about "anatomical treasure hunts" and blithely eat lunches inches away from a dissected human head.

Until two years ago about two-thirds of the bodies used by the medical school came from the police morgue. They were "unclaimed bodies" of persons dying without money, burial instructions or next-of-kin. "Bums who die in alleys" I recall being told in those days.

But now all bodies used are willed to the university by persons who wish to aid medical science or who are leery of high burial costs.

About five bodies are received each week and there is a two-year backlog waiting in giant vats of formaldehyde and carbolic acid in the basement of the Anatomy building.

The Anatomy department issues a sheet of information "on the bequeathing of one's body." The first thing you have to do is write into your will this sort of clause:

"Upon my death I direct that my body be delivered to the department of Anatomy of the University of Toronto to be used for the advancement of medical science."

The department points out that since wills often are not read until after burial, it is wise to mention your intention to a next-of-kin before you die.

"All expenses in connection with the transport of the deceased to the medical school will be borne by the university," the department says.

BURY THE BITS

When students have put the embalmed body to every possible use the pieces, each identified by a numbered tag like the master tag threaded through the ear lobe are gathered and buried in a Christian ceremony, if the deceased indicated he wanted that.

If a person bequeathing his body wishes eventual cremation, his estate must pay for it.

Students quickly become numbed by the awesome presence of a dead body at their 13 hours of anatomy work every week.

Anyway, cutting into a specimen is a lot different from the situations the students will meet in their later practices.

Instead of slicing living flesh and laying bare living bone, the students carve up what one man suggested looks like "large joints of cooked meat."

That's just what it looks like. U of T technicians embalm the bodies much as commercial undertakers do, but they don't treat the surface skin area to make it life-like.

So the arm one student was cutting apart for me was shrunken, dry and dark-brown.

"It's funny you know, it's not at all like I thought it would be," another man chattered as he neatly sawed a human head in half.

Every day students walk briskly into the concrete-floored dissecting rooms, take off their watches and dig in.

The lingering smell of preserving fluid and the slight, inextinguishable odor of decomposition doesn't bother them.

If it does, they say, they'll make poor doctors.

Rodin sought for life and light

"L'homme qui marche"

By DIANA BENNETT

Auguste Rodin (1840-1917)
Rodin did not only search for life; he sought for light — light that emanates through a space charged with the energy of movement. He cast aside classical serenity to thrust each member into a moment of anticipation or of anguish. Rodin's enthusiasm for the works of Michelangelo is evident in his ability to create from a piece of wax, plaster or terracotta a flowing organism.

Most of the pieces on exhibition at the Art Gallery of Toronto are cast in bronze. While this medium is ideal for the representation of the smooth contour of muscle and bone, it can also be gutted and rutted to form either a blistering, seething surface or a cold, corroded brittleness. 'L'homme Qui Marche' combines an anatomical beauty in the lower limbs with an armless, scarred torso — perhaps a reminiscence of antiquity.

His studies of heads are beautifully executed with poignant plasticity of feature so that the emotional impact of a work such as "the Cry" is overwhelming.

For Rodin, the human hand was expressive of physical, mental and spiritual condition. Note particularly the collection of hands for a "Burgher of Calais" which reveals the artist's skill and sensitivity in minute detail. Just as his sweeping line carves out broad areas of mass in the drawings, his figure groups in bronze, for example, 'Eternal Spring' and 'Fugit Amor' are made to well up out of the earth of which they are a product.

The exhibition will be on until Oct. 20th.

Ojibway artist refreshing

By PAUL RUSSELL

The Art of Norvel Morrisseau — the current one-man show at the new Pollack Gallery — is a refreshingly different addition to the current Toronto art scene. It takes us away from the heavy abstract oils of contemporary painting into something naive, light and primitive.

Mr. Morrisseau, a young Ojibway Indian from the Lake Nipigon area was discovered by Mr. Pollack about a year ago on one of his teaching excursions into rural Ontario. Morrisseau's work takes as its inspiration the myths and legends of his tribe. He paints the wind, the otter, the gull, and the Indian god in a manner based largely on an oral tradition passed down through the tribe for generations.

Tempora is the medium generally used and it lends itself perfectly to the brilliant colors and flat areas of Morrisseau's art. A vibrant earth yellow is the usual predominant color with brilliant reds, blues and greens, building up the hieroglyphic of the image depicted.

Because the subjects of Morriseau's work have evolved from a very rigid tradition, their shapes and forms are highly formalized. But Morrisseau maintains a certain freshness through his medium and through the over-all fluidity of his strong lines.

His art is one of pattern, design and color. As he developed in an isolated area, there is no attempt at sophistication, at re-interpreting an Indian culture through oil abstraction, involving the textures and subtleties which this medium can produce.

The Morrisseau exhibition reflects a degree of sincerity and honesty in the works on view that all too few exhibitions in this city can approach.

The show of African Sculpture at the Isaacs Gallery this week is marred by an attempt to put too many pieces on view. In doing this they have allowed some pieces which I would consider of only novelty interest into a show of basically high calibre.

The larger works are finely carved with strong bold incisions and again, hieroglyphic silhouettes which lend an attractive feeling of mystery to already good art.

One piece I especially liked was a rather zesty Ancestor cut in broad sweeping forms. The piece appears as a primitive idol in a fully frontal pose — eyes straight ahead, body erect — typical of all primitive sculpture. Yet the figure is slightly bent as if it could jump forward at any moment while conversely, it seems frozen in position for eternity.

At the Morris Gallery Shadbolt, a Vancouver artist of high standing is showing some very exciting new things. He's still using the festive colors that are his trademark but his expressionism is now reflecting a strong interest in the action painting of, I think, American's Jackson Pollack. Thin streaks of paint are spattered on the canvas — not as freely applied as Pollack, but nevertheless spattered.

The general result is a combination of action painting and calligraphy. Shadbolt is promising here; perhaps he could do better along these lines.

Bookstore cont.

Nor is this markedly sub-standard margin wholly offset by rapid turnover; rather, a very substantial proportion of the books carried in stock sell slowly, but when needed, these slow-selling books are required just as urgently as any others. Even the textbooks sold in the largest quantities (in fact these textbooks especially) must be ordered many months in advance of term opening. In the case of an institution the size of the University of Toronto, the news of our requirements considerably affects publishers' manufacturing schedules.

2. It has been pointed out that some other stores — none of them, however, established commercial booksellers, it is to be noted — have offered a discount on certain textbooks. When such discounts are offered, consumers should by all means exploit them. But at the same time these discounts should be recognized for what they are — loss leaders, intended to attract customers to purchase other, more profitable, merchandise. (The principal stock in trade of a retailer is never employed as a loss leader).

3. It is important to note that no other retailer in Toronto, whether he carries loss leader merchandise or not, pretends to stock even one-twentieth of the 19,000-odd text and reference books now carried by the University of Toronto Book Department. It has nevertheless been suggested that a discount to students, however small, might offset the inconvenience to them of having to secure books by special order placed in advance. However, if it were not for the stock orders placed with the publishers in late spring and early summer each year by the University Book Department, only a minute fraction of the textbooks required at this institution would be available anywhere in Toronto before Christmas, and by no means all requirements would be filled by that date. Most of the textbooks purchased by the University are imported, normally through local publishers, occasionally from publishers abroad, and most of these books must come from the United States or from the United Kingdom. Many of these imports do not arrive in quantity for weeks, sometimes not for two or three months from the date of ordering. It will be apparent that copies of these texts available to other Toronto stores are in most cases drawn from the "back-up" stock imported by local publishers on the strength of the University Book Department's basic stock order.

4. The University Book Department is the only bookstore in Toronto which compiles methodically Faculty-prepared estimates for the many thousands of text and reference books prescribed each year. This costly annual operation begins in March, and requires detailed supervision and follow-up by a number of experienced employees. Despite conscientious estimating by the Faculty and careful processing by the Book Department, enrolments deviate notoriously from the expected, especially in First Year, to the consternation of instructors, students, and Book Department alike. Emergency shipments must be arranged by long distance telephone, by telegraph and cable, and often must be imported by extraordinarily expensive carriers. Such expenses are shared by no other bookseller. If there is one area in the University Book Department where economy is not the primary consideration, it is in the seeking of ever more valid estimates from the Faculty each year, and in the emergency handling of shortages caused by fluctuating enrolments. Incidentally, there are at least as many over-estimates as under-estimates each year — a further unsung cost of conducting a complete textbook service.

5. The re-deployment of a major part of the Book Department space for the sale of miscellaneous merchandise, such as gramophone records, hot dogs, and women's lingerie, could possibly generate a profit margin, but only at the cost of subordinating books to other merchandise and providing totally unnecessary competition to other merchants without a corresponding benefit to students. Until now, the University has adhered to the comparatively rare policy among North American universities of operating its Bookstore as a bookstore, and it has thereby gained an enviable reputation in the academic world.

6. At the present time, overhead costs in the University Book Department are generally apportioned according to value of sales, whereas every time study has demonstrated that the processing of textbooks through all stages involves a heavier expense per unit sold than does the handling of non-text items. A realistic distribution would increase rather than decrease the share of overhead now apportioned to textbook sales.

7. The actual under-recovery of expenses connected with textbooks must be subsidized by the sale of non-text items, which none the less are restricted in the main to serious non-fiction and essential stationery.

8. The administration of a complete charge account system at no interest to users is a valuable service (also unsung) to a significant portion of the undergraduate body, and an addition to overhead costs.

9. It has been intimated that an operating profit is derived from Bookstore sales and used to finance other Press programmes, such as the printing department and, presumably, the publishing of subsidized works. It would be difficult to make a more inaccurate statement. The net income from the University Book Department in the past five years has failed to meet, by some tens of thousands of dollars, the increase in investment in inventory required to service University requirements in the same period.

The difference has been made up from the operation of other departments of the Press.

10. Although this question has not been raised, we would mention that the University Book Department's files bulge with reports of special surveys made by its officials of bookstores on other North American campuses, especially for the purpose of evaluating complete self-service operations where these are installed in the past. It is the burden of these reports that because of a variety of factors, including the unusual complexity of the curricula at Toronto, the high incidence of returns at universities where self-service has been tried, and the slower servicing of students in rush periods, this method would be a retrograde step at this institution at the present time. It is however, under constant review as a possible future means of reducing overhead costs.

11. Major economies for students regularly effected by the Bookstore have received too little notice. Until a few years ago, for example, student microscopes were purchased by students in miscellaneous models from many sources at high prices. By concentrating its buying power on a single microscope of high quality, and handling this microscope at a loss, the University Book Department was able to drive microscope prices down and has saved medical students in this university many thousands of dollars.

Similarly, special student prices have long been offered on portable typewriters, notwithstanding the remonstrances of certain of the suppliers concerned. The policy of the University of Toronto Press in importing University of Chicago Press publications (Chicago is the Press's only agency) and selling them in Canadian dollars at the United States list price, despite devaluation of the Canadian dollar, has set a pattern since followed by a number of other Canadian agents of American publishers. The savings involved for Canadian students, at all institutions in this country, are to be measured in tens of thousands of dollars.

The University Book Department has consistently, and with significant success, pressed for lowering of retail prices in Canada of books imported by local publishers selling under exclusive agency arrangements, and will continue to do so. In this connection it is to be noted that the University of Toronto Press is probably the only publisher in North America which purchases editions of British books for publication over its imprint only when terms can be arranged that permit conversion at the dollar equivalent of the sterling price.

By policies such as the foregoing, this institution is providing benefits to students at Toronto as well as elsewhere which are of great economic importance even though not always apparent to all consumers.

To summarize, the considerations set forth show that

INTERFACULTY ROUNDUP

Vic begins defence with 8-0 win

By AL SCHOENBORN

The Scarlet and Gold from Victoria College opened their defence of the Mulock Cup with an 8-0 win over St. Mike's on the back campus yesterday.

A diving interception of a St. Mike's pass by Varsity basketball star Dave West gave Vic possession of the ball on the Double Blue 40-yard line to set up the only major score of the game. The ensuing touchdown came on a pass from Vic quarterback Jim Stephenson to Eric Skeoch. Phil Rimmington added the convert.

Ward Passi, Hockey Blues left wing star, booted a single for the winners for an 8-0 half-time lead.

Neither team was able to hit paydirt in the second half as last season's Mulock Cup finalists toughened up on the defence.

LACROSSE

Playing with the confidence of veterans, Dentistry made an impressive entrance into the First Division of the interfac lacrosse league as they trounced a shaky Meds A squad 8-3.

John Kawaguchi led Dents marksmen with a three-goal hat-trick, Paul Sunohara and Garnet Julian each had a pair, while Rob Reay added a singleton. Jim Nelson, Jeff Hurwitz and Mike Easterbrook replied for the doctors.

RUGGER

In rugger action, defending champions Vic I defeated Meds A 9-0 on tries by Bill Jackson, Phil Rimmington and Glenn Tarver.

Trinity steamrolled over

SPS I 21-0. Paul Stockdale paced the winners with seven points on a try and two converts. Other tries went to Mike Treadwell, John O'Brien, Dave Gooderham and Mark Armstrong, while Phil Wigley and Michael Blackett added converts.

Other contests saw Wycliffe overcome Emmanuel 16-6, and St. Mike's shut out Meds C 5-0.

SOCCER

The tight race in Group I soccer continues as UC I, on the strength of a 3-1 win over Jr. Skule, hold a one-point margin over six teams deadlocked in second place in the eight team loop. Sr. SPS and PHE joined Vic I, St. Mike's A, Trinity A and Meds A at the one-point plateau as they fought to a scoreless draw. Goals by Peter Boeckle, Frank Felkai and S. Davies paced UC to its win over the engineers, whose lone goal came from O. Gajenek.

In other soccer action, Wycliffe took Emmanuel 2-0, Law beat Pharmacy 4-1, Meds B got by St. Mike's B 1-0 and Trinity B and SPS III played to a 0-0 tie.

VOLLEYBALL

In a lone volleyball contest, St. SPS outplayed UC I 15-4 and 15-7.

Gaetor and Wilson still juggling

A UTRFC

Syndicated Service

Varsity's defending champion Rugger Blues host McGill Redmen Saturday for their second league contest. Kick-off is scheduled for 11:00 on the back campus.

Those jealously sought-after first-string positions are still not settled as Coach Dick Gaetor and Captain Paul Wilson continue to juggle their line-up.

For the McGill match, fly-half Rich Hayman has been recalled from the Intermediates in efforts to rejuvenate the backs. Mike Joy plays his first game in the pack, and Joy paired with Paul Gray should give Blues the heaviest props in the OQAA loop. Newcomer John McNeil will be shuttled to scrum half for the game. This will mark the ex-Gael star's third positional change in as many games.

The Intermediates are without a match this weekend as Waterloo has folded for lack of players. Waterloo's position in the unofficial Intermediate league will probably be filled by York University. York was downed 13-9 by Varsity Thirds in a back-campus exhibition last night. The Thirds' scores went to Phil Wigley, Frank Buck, Duris Apse, and Brian Hull. In the Scrum: Blues have placed seven men on the OQAA All-Star fifteen scheduled to play an Ontario Rugby Union President's Fifteen Thanksgiving Monday. Selected Blues' are Paul Wilson, Ian Sinclair, Rod Sanders, Gethen Hughes, Bob Dodds, Bill Stow and Larry Johnson.

Bookstore cont.

the University Book Department, far from being able to offer a full service accompanied by discounts from retail prices, has been able to sustain its own considerable growth in recent years on a margin which is regarded with contempt by every established Canadian commercial bookseller whose main stock in trade is books. We have noted some of the compromises which might make some measure of discount possible, but we believe that the consensus on the Toronto campus would be to reject all such expedients, on the ground that the loss would far outweigh the gain. For the reason mentioned in the second paragraph of this letter, some of these points have been discussed in previous years, and we expect that they will be discussed in the future, such discussion we welcome, so long as it is characterized by the sober consideration which should typify an academic community, and is based on knowledge of the realities of the bookselling industry in this country.

While the first function of the University Bookstore must be the servicing of textbook requirements, and management and staff bend every effort toward the rapid supplying of texts in the first few weeks of term, all look forward with anticipation to the period when the rush is over, and the Bookstore can fulfill its second function, so well described by the President in his Report for the year ended in 1958:

"One can think of many other unifying agencies — of the new Bookstore, for instance, one of the few genuine bookstores in Canada . . . An hour spent browsing among the periodicals and books on display there (as distinct from the year) may well constitute one of the most valuable experiences in an undergraduate career."

Yours very truly,
M. JEANNERET,
Director.

Football shuttle system causes Rinkies confusion

By GORD BELLMORE

If optimism reigned in Baby Blues' camp last week while the Intermediates were preparing for the game with Western Colts, then the reigning mood this week is confusion.

Baby Blues have run into a veritable maze of problems, the result of which will probably mean a mediocre season. This is quite a comedown from the high hopes of last week.

The root of the problem lies in the very reason for the existence of Intermediate football. Baby Blues are designed to give potential Blues a chance to play. In reality, the two teams are one large group with players moving up and down according to the needs of the Varsity.

The coaches of course know what they are up against and try to allow for it. If things aren't running smoothly up top, coaching Baby Blues is like trying to plug a leaky dike with your fingers. As soon as you plug one hole another one crops up somewhere else. Pretty soon you run out of fingers. Unless reinforcements arrive, the dike breaks.

In Baby Blues case the dike is bending. The team just can't keep together long enough to really work as a unit. Injuries to both Blues and Rinkies in their weekend games have doubly hurt Baby Blues. The replacements for the injured Blues came from Baby Blues in the persons of Tom Verth, Jim Ronson and Terry Bates. Coupling this with the knee injury to Jim Rhodes and the ignominious departure of Arnie Carefoote from the team, Rinkies have lost the bulk of their defensive line as it was planned last week.

To further compound the problem, backs Andy Szandner, Pete Sutherland and John Rumble have been shuttling back and forth to Blues' workouts. Last night less than ten linemen were available for practice for one reason or another.

With only Tuesday and Wednesday to practice next week before meeting Ryerson Thursday, Baby Blues could be in trouble. Fortunately it won't be Western Colts again, and Rinkies should get by on what they have.

The situation is no one's fault, and there isn't really much that can be done about it. It has been the injuries which have hurt the most, the shifting of players only makes things more difficult. In a four-game season though there isn't much room for adjustments and Baby Blues are already behind the eight ball.

turn out for practices. Blues must rely on freshmen Dave Whitson and Guston Dacks to fill these absences. Both runners had considerable success in high-school cross-country, but it remains to be seen how they will fare over the twice-as-far five-mile college courses.

A year ago, minus Kidd, Blues lost to Wayne by a 21-34 count. In harrier scoring, a finisher receives the number of points of his placing. The team with the lowest four-man score wins.

Wayne is returning with the same squad as a year ago. Blues' only hope is that their experience on the hilly Toronto course will give them an edge. Wayne's home course, where last year's competition was held, is completely flat.

In 12 years of competition, Blues have only salvaged four victories.

stitute will participate in the regatta.

The Varsity Eight is the best of the three Toronto crews. Big, strong, and well conditioned by a summer of rowing, the Eight has been churning up the waterfront practising at high rates of stroke. Both the Junior and Freshman boats are low on experience, but are showing signs of rapid improvement. With a few races under their belts, they could become serious contenders for a championship.

A spotty Varsity harrier squad resumes an old rivalry Saturday when it hosts a powerful team from Wayne University over Blues' course in High Park.

Whether or not Bryce Taylor will be Blues' starting quarterback here Saturday against McGill Redmen is still up in the air. It appeared that Taylor would have his first chance as a Varsity starting quarterback after Jim Israel injured his eye against Queen's last week. But Israel was at practice last night and looked as effective as ever. He claims the eye doesn't bother him but is going to have it checked by the doctor today. Coach Dalt White said he wouldn't decide on his starting signal caller until just prior to game time. This system has been used very effectively by Ottawa Roughrider coach Frank Clair, who used to decide between Russ Jackson and Ron Lancaster just before the opening kickoff.

BYCE TAYLOR
Seeking first start

Although Israel is a respected quarterback, many observers would like to see what Taylor can do with a starting assignment. He was responsible for both Varsity touchdowns last week, throwing for one and running himself for the other. In any event, Taylor will start in the defensive backfield.

Blues' middle guard Dave McCullough is a doubtful starter after injuring his ankle against Golden Gaels. Terry Bates has been brought up from Baby Blues as insurance and either he or brother Noel will play middle guard if McCullough is not fit.

Tom Verth and Jim Ronson have also been brought up from Baby Blues. With the injury to offensive end Mike Hollett, Ross Dainty will play offensive end along with Ronson. Bill (Moose) Jackson has been moved to defensive end and will be flanked on the other side by Doug Bucknam. Verth will probably see some action at defensive end.

Verth was joking last night about not playing football since grade nine.

"Ron Vanderkelen (of Wisconsin) only played 90 seconds of collegiate ball before his senior year and look what happened to him. He started in the Rose Bowl game last year and turned pro for $25,000. I wonder what would happen if I ever get to play for 90 seconds." The team McGill Redmen field will be considerably weakened from last year's Yates Cup champs. They have lost 14 first stringers, which includes five all-stars one of which is quarterback Tom (The Turkey) Skyepek. Wouldn't it have been something if "The Turkey" were here for Thanksgiving Weekend. One McGill player who will come to Toronto, however, is all-star two-way halfback Willie Lambert. Although Lambert is only 156 pounds and stands 5'8", he is one of the most respected players in the league. This is his sixth season with Redmen.

When Dalt White was asked if he was going to use any special defence against the fast and shifty halfback, White took a comic format to evade the question.

"I'm going to get a long hook and hook him off the field," said White.

PESSIMISM GROWS ON TREES AT MCGILL

Things must have really hit rock bottom under the red and white toques at McGill University.

Bill Bewley is head coach of a football team that calls itself McGill Redmen—even though this team bears little resemblance to the one that carried the name for the past three seasons. After Redmen dropped their opening game, 16-13, to Western Mustangs last Saturday in Montreal, Bewley issued a statement to the effect that McGill quarterback Gary Cullen deserved another crack at the pivot spot on the basis of his showing in the opener.

BILL BEWLEY
Sleep-Walker?

Bewley has things pretty tough after losing some 20 players from last season's Yates Cup champions. But it's hard to believe that he has as little faith in his team as he seemed to express after last week's game. With Cullen at quarterback Redmen gained a grand total of 13 yards along the ground. The Montreal Gazette wasn't even that lenient, claiming Redmen only gained 7 (that's like seven) yards in the rushing department. Cullen completed eight of 21 passes for 153 yards, not an especially impressive record.

But here's Bewley saying that Cullen may be his quarterback again when Redmen move into Varsity Stadium to meet the home side tomorrow at two chimes. Old Bill, a CFL veteran with Montreal Alouettes, certainly can't be so pessimistic about his team's chances this season that he's satisfied with the anaemic display of his offence last Saturday. Cullen wasn't slated to start against Mustangs but regular quarterback Glen St. John was stricken with the flu a few days before the game and couldn't play. Cullen, in his sixth year at McGill, has played three seasons with McGill's Intermediate Indians and was back-up quarterback to Tom Skyepek in 1961. Last week's game was his first start as a McGill Redman.

This piece of analysis isn't really intended as a knock at Cullen, or even Bewley for that matter. It might indicate, however, that Bewley is really feeling the effects of the depleted ranks he has to work with. Either that or the scribe who quoted Bewley was following him in his sleep.

MCGILL'S LOSS IS THE LEAGUE'S LOSS

A year ago, Bewley gave up the game of football as a player to step into the coaching ranks. He inherited a team regarded by many as the best every to play Canadian college football. After a slow start, the familiar practice with McGill gridiron teams, Redmen caught fire and won five games in a row, the final one a 15-13 win over Queen's that gave McGill its second Yates Cup in three years.

But the life of a college athlete is short and the mortality rate on McGill's football team zoomed to a new peak when they came to passing out the diplomas, and whatever else they pass out at convocations.

Redmen lost some 20 players from the championship squad, the most notable of course Tom (The Turkey) Skyepek. Fourteen of the departed were first-stringers, a hard pill for any coach to swallow, even at the college level.

Skypek was the McGill team over the past three seasons. A three-year veteran of the U.S. Ivy League with Conell, he came to McGill in 1960 and before he returned to the U.S. gained for himself a reputation as one of the most celebrated and talented athletes in the history of Canadian college sport. When the Turkey left, the Redmen could never hope to be the same. To make matters worse, Redmen also lost Eric Walter, last season's scoring champion, through academic troubles. Others gone are Americans, George Telesh, Russ Zelko and John DiFederico along with Ian Monteith, Dave Morton and Steve Longstaff. Whitey Reimer, a former captain at Syracuse University, ran head first into the grandstand in the game against Blues at Molson Stadium last season and his playing days are over. Whitey is now McGill's team manager and a great loss to our league.

A great football team is no more — and in a way you have to feel sorry. Redmen of the past three years were an exciting team to watch, providing spectators in Montreal, Toronto, Kingston and London with hours of great entertainment. McGill's loss is the Senior Intercollegiate League's loss.

Opponents shouldn't find this reason, however, to take Redmen too lightly. Willie Lambert, Al McKenzie, Dick Feidler and Don Taylor are still among the best in the league.

And Bewley may already have gained one of the most important requirements of a top football coach—knowing how to bluff your opponents into a false sense of security.

KOLLINS KANDID PROGNOSTICATION

Blues don't buy and Red and White bluffs and Bryce Taylor emerges—Blues by three touchdowns. . . Queen's gets angry at London — Gaels by 16 points over Western.

Season's Record: 2 right, 1 wrong. Pct.: .667.

Chintu, UC highlight Varsity track meet

By AL SCHOENBORN

A man from Meds and a great team performance by University College highlighted yesterday's 1963 Interfaculty Track Meet at the Stadium. Rod Chintu was the man from Meds. He won the 880 yds. in a record time of 1:57.6, thus eclipsing the old mark set by Dave Crichton (Ap.Sc.) in 1938 and equalled by Bill Crothers (Pharm.) last year. Chintu also took the 440 yds. in 51.1 sec. and placed third in the high jump. His efforts earned him the Cody Trophy as the outstanding individual performer at the meet.

UC athletes gained six firsts, three seconds and four thirds while piling up 51 points to take the Rowell Memorial Cup. UC had a nine point margin over runner-up PHE, which had 42. Last year's winning squad from Vic placed third with 25 points followed by Meds with 21.

Leading the way for UC was a man known to the crowd only as "Uncle Harry". In his anxiety to get back to writing for the Varsity, he ran the mile event in a record time of 4:19.7. The previous record had also belonged to Crothers. Other UC victories came in the discus, taken by Peter Auski with a throw of 127'5", and the pole vault, won by Jerry Marsden on a jump of 10'7". Gurston Dacks sported a winning time of 16:27.4 in the three miles while the mile relay also went to UC in 3:44.0. Doug Cook got the other first for the Red and White with a time of 17.7 sec. in the 120 yd. hurdles.

The 440 yd. hurdles went to John Mackay of PHE in 1:06. The Phys Ed men also won the broad jump where Ted Terry led the way with a leap of 19'14", and the javelin on a throw of 172'10" by Gerry Kozak.

Vic edged two PHE teams to take the sprint relay in 45.5 sec., while another Vic type Gerry Brown became the only other double winner of the meet, taking the 100 yds. in 10.4 and the hop, step and jump with a distance of 41'4". The High jump went to Craig Cook from O.C.E. who topped 5'10". Uwe Scharge (Arch.), a triple winner in the Freshman Meet last week, again took the 220 yds. with a time of 22.9 sec.

A standout for SPS was Jarma Salovaara who led the shotputters with a toss of 42'9". He also placed second in the discus throw.

MASSEY PICKETS TOLD TO FIND WEALTHY BENEFACTOR

Female graduate students picketing Massey College Tuesday were invited inside the college quadrangle by Dr. Robertson Davies, college master, and told to find a wealthy female graduate who would endow women students with similar facilities. Eleven girls, led by Rosemary Speirs (SGS) and supported by five male students, carried signs claiming unfair discrimination against female graduate students. They also objected to the $2,500,000 college providing space for only 70 male graduate residents. Shortly after the picket began Dr. Davies asked for an explanation.

Miss Speirs told him the group felt more residence and study facilities should be provided for all graduate students. Then she asked Dr. Davies if the picketers could march in the quadrangle.

"Well, come on in and talk about it," Dr. Davies said, looking hesitantly at the crowd of reporters and photographers which had gathered.

The girls, male supporters, reporters and photographers trekked inside and toured once around the quadrangle while Dr. Davies talked with Miss Speirs.

He told Miss Speirs he thought they should find a wealthy female graduate who would endow a college for females, just as the Massey Foundation had built Massey College.

The pickets were unopposed by the college's junior fellows. The march was originally planned for noon but organizers were told to expect retaliation by the junior fellows and so the march was held earlier.

The group carried signs reading: "Seldom has so much been spent on so few," a Latin version of "Massey College must be destroyed," and "Build necessities before luxuries."

After walking around the outside of the college for a half hour the pickets, including Mary Pat McMahon, Students' Administrative Council vice-president, propped their signs against the front wall and left. The signs were immediately removed by a college staff member.

CUS magazine to go on sale SHARE off to lofty start

Campus Canada, the inter-university magazine, will go on sale on the campus a week today, it was announced at the second regular meeting of the U of T branch of the Canadian Union of Students Tuesday.

John Cosgriffe (IV APSC) said the magazine was published at the University of British Columbia, but contains articles of interest to all campuses. The 1,000 issues will be sold by the official CUS representatives in each college and faculty.

The representative from UC, Peter Williams, was appointed convener to obtain contacts for the CUS discount service.

A CUS card allows the holder to a 10 per cent discount in all stores honoring them.

CUS cards are issued, not only to university students, but also to students at Ryerson, York, and the hospitals. Students from outside Toronto holding cards are also entitled to the shopping privileges. Being a nation-wide organization, CUS also exerts pressure on public transportation for student discounts.

CUS plans to hold an open meeting within the next three weeks to inform students of the work of CUS and to gain more campus interest and support.

The SHARE campaign got off to a lofty, relaxing and echoing start on campus yesterday.

The campaign, sponsored by the World University Service, seeks $10,000 to be used by underprivileged students overseas.

A scaffold erected near Soldiers' Tower will keep a student aloft until the objective is reached. A large thermometer on the scaffold is recording the fund's progress.

Women's fraternities Nursing students and unidentified others started massaging backs during lunch yesterday. The SHARE therapy continues today in the Hart House music room and the Meds building.

Familiar three-quart milk bottles echoed coin donations in most buildings on campus Tuesday. Donors received both a "thank-you" and a talisman against later solicitings — a lapel pin.

Today, Victoria freshies will be shining shoes from 12:30 to 2. University College Players' Guild will offer the proceeds of its three-day run of Pirandello's The Man With the Flower in his Mouth to SHARE. The play begins at 1:15 p.m. today. Admission will be by contribution.

Scarves and toques are on sale in the JCR of UC today and Thursday, all proceeds going to SHARE.

Men's fraternities will man a day-long mile of dimes all over the campus Thursday. Women will go on sale the same day at Victoria College's Wymilwood, the Trinity Buttery and Rm. 135, Engineering Physics building, from 1 to 2 p.m.

Bissell defends university presidents

QUEBEC (Special) — Canadian university presidents were defended and their critics blasted here Monday by University of Toronto President Claude Bissell.

In his retiring speech as president of the National Conference of Canadian Universities and Colleges Dr. Bissell said university presidents have been criticized in two ways on their submissions to both federal and provincial governments.

In their reports over the past seven years that the federal government has been falling behind in its recognition of university needs, the presidents have been accused of being academic tycoon pressure groups; and of not being active enough in making their needs known, Dr. Bissell said.

The first criticism implies that the presidents are seeking some form of self-aggrandizement, and the second that their inactivity has left the universities in a perpetual state of inadequacy, Dr. Bissell charges.

"It is exasperating to find ourselves saddled with the responsibility for the very crisis we above all others have foreseen and tried to prevent," Dr. Bissell stated. Canadian universities are in a more favorable position than those in Great Britain and the United States insofar as freedom is concerned, Dr. Bissell added.

British universities have submitted to extensive government control, and the U.S. ones to an "elaborate series of checks and counter-checks that turn the academic life into an administrative haze," the president said.

"On the Canadian university scene I find a sense of un-bureaucratic responsibility upon which, I think, we can surely build for the future," he concluded.

CUSO volunteers remain enthused after first meet

Hopeful Canadian University Students Overseas travellers listened to former volunteers at a preliminary introduction Tuesday in the Hart House debates room and left the meeting still enthusiastic. Last year from a similar group of 80 U of T applicants only 45 were accepted, said CUSO assistant secretary Peter Newberry (I Emm). He said 96 volunteers left Canada at the end of August, bringing the total in the unofficial diplomatic corps to 128.

A CUSO convention in Ottawa this weekend will determine basic policy, especially the question of a two-year, one-year, or just summer program. Likely a two-year plan for volunteers in a particular country will be endorsed.

Mr. Newberry added that groups forming the central CUSO, the COV and CVSC, had actually grown up in Canada before the publicized Peace Corps in the U.S.

Advisor Ozzie Schmidt (PhD candidate in engineering) and Grant McDonald (III Knox) informed the evenly mixed gathering of men and women that the first working sessions would begin at the Hart House music room on Saturday mornings beginning Oct. 26.

Warns that US will see more racial violence

The racial situation in the United States is such that Americans will see more racial violence, Gary Perly (II UC) told the first meeting of the United Nations club Friday.

"The church bombing in Birmingham was the one most effective act to awake the American Negro," Perly said.

The more moderate civil rights groups such as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People are being "towed along" by more militant factions, he explained.

In outlining the basic problem he referred to The Classless Society, by Kurt Meyer, which states that the Negro society parallels the white but because of economic limitations does not correspond to it.

This produces frustration and resentment, against civilization which is directed against the most immediate manifestation of that civilization, the law.

The economic factor, Perly said, is responsible for many of the other problems. The American unemployment rate is largely confined to the "submerged eighth," the minority groups of Mexican, Puerto Rican and Negro.

This group is consistently on a significantly lower economic level than the rest, he said.

Humanists hear talk on religion and mental health

Dr. Clare Robinson, a psychiatrist, says the problem of religion and mental health presents "semantic difficulties."

He made this statement while addressing a group of about 15 at the opening meeting of the Humanist and Unitarian Society on Sunday. Stressing the need for a complete and universal definition of religion, Dr. Robinson pointed out the difficulty of finding such a definition. He concluded that it is an impossible task because of the many and varied concepts of religion held by modern man. He went on to say that for him religion was "a system of ethics with a certain pattern of ritual." Dr. Robinson also said that God for him was "the creative force in the universe."

Socialists elect leaders

The Socialist Forum met last week to establish a planning committee for this year's activities.

Those selected are Ed Johnston (IV UC), president; Tim Walsh (III UC), vice-president; Hans Modlich (II AFSC), secretary.

The committee defined the purpose of the forum as a sponsoring group for meetings "within a broad socialist context."

Open new chemical building

A golden key officially opened the new Lash Miller Chemical Laboratories on St. George Street Friday. Professor W. A. Noyes of the University of Texas delivered the opening address at Convocation Hall and, following a procession to the building, he opened the new laboratories.

Adelaide Miller unveiled a plaque in memory of her father, the late Professor Lash Miller.

Construction began in April, 1961, on the $6,000,000 structure. The L-shaped building is divided into three main sections.

The St. George St. wing consists of undergraduate laboratories - nine elementary and three advanced - able to accommodate 880 students. The three advanced laboratories - Physical Chemistry, Inorganic and Analytic Chemistry, and Organic Chemistry - are broken down into smaller rooms for special experiments.

The junction between the two wings contains four large lecture theatres and three smaller seminar rooms with facilities for projection and public address system in the largest theatre.

The long wing along Willcox St. is intended for research work. There is a multitude of specialized room designations and equipment, including spectrometry, resonance and spectroscopy labs, and a liquid nitrogen plant.

News in brief

Raid frat party

A police raid broke up a post-game party in the Phi Kappa Sigma fraternity house on St. George Street early Sunday morning. Officers confiscated all beer and liquor on the premises. Two unidentified people were charged with the illegal sale of liquor, and the rest present were charged as found-ins.

CUP revision urged

A motion to change radically the present structure and operations of the Canadian University Press came to a tie vote at the Ontario regional CUP conference Sunday at the Ryerson Institute of Technology.

The motion, to abandon the national office in Ottawa and discontinue the full-time paid position of national president, was presented by The Varsity and supported by The Ryersonian.

It will be presented to the national conference at Vancouver in December.

The proposed change would relocate the national office of CUP on the home campus of the national president, who would be a full-time student.

A further motion that The Varsity and The Ryersonian be mandated to study the effects of such a change passed with one abstention.

About 55 representatives from eight of the nine papers in the region attended the two-day conference.

Alumni given medals

Medals were awarded to two University of Toronto alumni last Friday during the dinner-dance. Present at the Engineering triennial reunion dinner were more than 500 alumni.

Dr. F. A. Forward (who graduated in 1924) and Dr. J. B. Challies (who graduated in 1903) were awarded medals for outstanding services in different fields of engineering.

Dr. Forward internationally known metallurgist, is head of the department of metallurgy at the University of British Columbia and Dr. Challies, who retired in 1952, is known across Canada as an eminent hydraulic engineer. This year's reunion marked the 40th anniversary of the class of First World War veterans, class of 1923. Also present were alumni who graduated in 1903.

security plus

The large majority of students at this university are about to become failures. Not academically or financially, but as human beings living a satisfying life.

They will fail because they will not live their lives for what they are, and when they are. As Mr. McCurdy has stated, they will not climb the mountains simply because the mountains are there.

Some students have condemned themselves to mediocrity already, and are forsaking their chance to obtain an education. These students are in pursuit of the degree which they hope will guarantee them a position in the world they soon have to enter.

These anti-students will soon be joined by many honest students who are now making an attempt to digest what is daily being thrown at them.

When they graduate they will try to find a job which is interesting, rewarding, remunerative, enlightening or secure. They will attempt to find a platform onto which they can climb, according to their individual tastes and plans.

Many of them will think they are entering rewarding and worthwhile endeavors; and at age 30 most of them will wonder what went wrong.

The thing most of them will have in common is a plan, however vague, of where they are heading. They will be aiming for some goal, which will guide them in their day to day decisions.

Not realizing their potential they will, within a few years, at least suspect the absurdity of their existence. Unless they are able to recognize their condition and, accepting it, use it as a foundation for their remaining years, they will have missed out on a satisfying life.

What these graduates will not have been doing for their student days and on is tackling what comes before them.

They will not realize that there is yet to be discovered the perfect internal combustion engine, a perfect political system, a solution to the horrors of deprivation and war, or an explanation for the condition of man's existence.

Instead they will view these and other problems as obstacles to be circumvented in following their predetermined paths.

They will not tackle these obstacles for what they are — something to overcome for the sheer satisfaction of overcoming a problem that exists and needs to be overcome.

They will go around the obstacles to their goal, which, when achieved, will have lost most of its original appeal.

Many will look back on the opportunities they bypassed, and wonder why they did not have the courage and foresight to tackle what they encountered.

At this point some will blow their brains out, and the rest will hang on until they die a natural death from acute alcoholism, ulcers or a heart attack.

It is an appalling prospect, and one which each student now thinks does not apply to himself.

the share campaign

The nice thing about the SHARE campaign now underway at this university is that you do not have to give anything.

If you are callous enough you can easily ignore the entreaties of the fund raisers, and, without a twinge of conscience, spend your dollar on cigarettes, beer and movies.

Furthermore, there is very little danger of your being confronted with the conditions the SHARE people are trying to eliminate.

You will never have to sleep on the floor of a hovel African students call a residence, nor will you have to live on the pitiful amount of food called a meal in India. Better still, you will not even have to witness these things.

We hope you enjoy your cigarettes, beer and movies.

Letters to the Editor

The President writes

A university community is, in essence, an international community, and membership in it carries with it an obligation to know and understand the problems of others.

With understanding must go action. The World University Service is an organization that successfully embodies the union of these two principles. Its annual fund-raising campaign is taking place this week — from Oct. 14 to Oct. 18. I heartily endorse the campaign and express the hope that there will be a generous response throughout the whole university community.

CLAUDE BISSELL,
President.

The P. M. writes

I am sorry for this delay in replying to your letter of August 28, but I have necessarily been out of town during a good deal of the past month.

All I can say at this time is to assure you that the question of Federal university scholarship and the many other representations regarding Federal financial assistance in the university area are receiving our careful consideration. We recognize that these are matters of the greatest importance but they cannot be settled in isolation from each other; or, indeed, as we have recently had driven home to us, without consultation and, in some cases, agreement with the provinces.

Nevertheless, as a government we expect to take appropriate and necessary action with regard to them as soon as that is possible.

L. B. PEARSON.

Questions accuracy

In his article titled "Snap U of T courses: Easy way to BA" (Varsity, Oct. 4) Jim MacKenzie wrote: "First year honor Sociology reached a similar climax in March when the professor gave typed questions for 'review purposes'. A number of them — no others — were on the exam. If the student had 'reviewed' well, two good days of work all year in the course could have paid off."

Typed questions were distributed in March; however, every other statement in the above report is inaccurate. The breakdown of the final grades in that course was:

First Class — 10 per cent,
Below the Line and Failure — 33 per cent. That is, one-third of a class of 146 failed to obtain a clear pass. Reporting carries the responsibility of knowing at least something about the facts.

LEO ZAKUTA,
Assistant Professor,
Dept. of Sociology.

A defence of frats

Prejudice, bias, opinion—how hard is it to go through life without falling into the pitfalls of these words.

Relate them to fraternities, and in particular University of Toronto fraternities, and you have a problem which has been aired for many years, and undoubtedly will be the centre of opinion for many years to come.

Being a member of a local fraternity, I am naturally biased towards it. Non-fraternity members have written articles and editorials in The Varsity. I will attempt, therefore, to give an unbiased "inside" story, based on facts and hitherto unprinted. The fraternity system in the United States is very strong — based on an allegiance with the university through an inter-fraternity council. University officials have deemed this system unworkable here. And so local fraternities are left to fend for themselves.

The main criticism levied against fraternities seems to be typified by the latest editorial which appeared in The Varsity Oct. 11, stating: "(fraternities) have no place in the life of a member of an academic community as the U of T."

"An obvious misconception of the facts," blurts the avid fraternity member. But he does have the facts to back him up. The particular fraternity of which I am a member boasts an average mark above the average in United States and Canada. And we are by no means alone in this claim.

"But," the anti-fraternity student complains, "they certainly couldn't have done that well locally, where high standards have to be maintained." Alas, a review of marks will again prove the man wrong.

Well, then, what exactly are the benefits derived from a fraternity. Sure we can point to the old arguments, "campus" social get-togethers, practise in parliamentary action, accommodation, charitable work or the promulgation of Judaeo-Christian ethical precepts," as the editorial reads. What is wrong with these, we ask.

But the hardened anti-fraternity pessimist smiles and says, "They aren't very good benefits when you have to pay for them."

Naturally you have to pay for things like room, board, parties, and other university requirements. The big advantage in this is that one can run his own affairs, for fraternities get a guiding hand from alumni, but only when they are steering in the wrong direction. Fraternities are not profit-making organizations, and as such, dues are not "fantastic," but in accordance with a student's budget. An out-of-town student can live almost as cheaply in the fraternity house. A "city-man" has to pay slightly more, however.

"Fraternities tend to attract people from similar economic and cultural backgrounds," the fraternity critic continues. Fraternity members or "brothers" are generally North American, from all walks of life, all occupations, all denominations, and all courses. Some of these can afford to pay their dues in advance, some at the required time, and some a little late, similar to university requirements, except in the last instance.

One exception, notable by its absence, is race. Stipulations against races have been taken out of most fraternity constitutions. Actual practice is a separate matter, however.

It will be many years before the Negro is accepted at par with the whites — especially in the deep south of United States. But their government has elevated the status of Negroes, in theory, and so have most fraternities.

Friends are not "ready-made" in fraternities. Rather, all pledges undergo a period of instruction in fraternity make-up and ideals, and gradually their bonds grow as to their type of character. Pledges must write an exam on fraternity material before they can become a brother. Initiations, no longer "hazing", bring the pledges closer together. This is the type of friendship which grows, similar to that which may be found in other clubs across campus.

Additionally, fraternity members take an interest in many worthwhile campus activities. Every fraternity boasts about its graduates—university presidents, movie stars, company presidents and athletes. Certainly there are "black sheep" in the fraternity — but aren't there these people in all walks of life? Finally, fraternities have been criticized for discrimination in choosing prospective members. But we are restricted at Toronto because we do not have an inter-fraternity council, to which anyone could apply. We have to rely on personal friends and contacts, and therefore our choice is naturally selective. Fraternities also participate in charity and public activities. Examples of these may be blood-raising campaigns, SHARE help, and Christmas parties for underprivileged children.

Why, therefore, are fraternities continually condemned as unacceptable institutions?

Reasonable (but perfidious) Iran quality thought. Lyn Owen and Larry Greenman were invaluable and Susan Slump picked flowers. Tony Bond and Ian McDougall thought we'd never let them go home, but Bob Oliver left early. Bob Sorokoll visited CUSO, but we marched on Massey. Intrepid. And the Sports Department was joined. Bruce Kidd, Katy O'Sullivan, Al Schoenborn, Gord Bellmore, Rodney Sanders, Paul Little, and Jim Ingles thronged, but where was Uncle Harry? Sam Feuer met the darkness and was so entranced that he decided to be duty photog. And long live perfidy.

Model Parliament needs revision

by R. G. EVANS

The present organization of the University of Toronto Model Parliament is not satisfactory. Too much stress is placed on "Model", and not enough on "University". In other words, it is fulfilling one of the basic requirements of a model parliament; it is providing an arena for politically-minded students to experiment with the techniques of manoeuvring and manipulating their fellow students, singly and in groups, in private and in public. This is very good, aside from providing experience for would-be politicians and junior rabble-rousers, it also sets up a lab course in how opinions are formed and things get decided, if not done, in a democratic society. But Model Parliament has not fulfilled all its responsibilities at this point. It is also part of a university, and as such should undertake to inform the university community at large. This must go beyond the successful formulation of party attitudes on current conflicts, and must involve rational penetration into deeper social issues. Occasionally such issues are brought up in a private member's bill, but these are generally talked out. This is inexcusable. The great advantage of a student parliament is that, once elected, it is not bound by the exigencies of practical politics. Why then pretend that it is?

It is my view that identification with "the other place" and its practical problems is all very well; but it has gone too far, and the practical necessities which prevent real parliament from serving as a vehicle for research and information are being applied here where they have no place. So I would recommend several reforms to decrease the degree of identification with the less valuable features of "the other place". First of all, there seems no good case against proportional representation. In an institution for the legitimization of executive authority, minority rule can be a crippling matter. But model parliaments have no authority. Why then impose the automatic majority rule? True, it may enable business to proceed in a more orderly fashion, which is good. But at the same time it ensures that the government is never in serious doubt about the outcome of a vote, so it's not forced to take many issues as seriously as they deserve. If the success or failure of a measure, or "power" itself rode on the outcome of a debate, there seems little doubt that the quality of the debate, and the depth of research involved, would be improved.

Further, there is no justification for the "talking-out" of private member's bills. Often these bring out important issues which are too dangerous for a political party but which require consideration. Surely with no power at stake such issues should be given the courtesy of honest discussion and a vote.

Finally the ban on parties without a federal candidate should be lifted. This ban has certain advantages; we do not want a bear-garden full of imperial monarchists, know-nothings, and Creditistes. But the parliament is already committed to regular political organizations. It would be greatly improved by a few independents concerned with social problems rather than current issues, problems which a legitimate party could not touch. So my basic thesis is that a model parliament must strike a balance between copying a real parliament and serving as a means of informing an intellectual community. Our parliament has copied too many of the wrong features of "the other place," and it is time the balance was redressed.

Un-American Canada

A member of the House un-American Activities Committee decries recent developments in Canada.

By JIM LAXER
Varsity Features Editor

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Chairman the times are badly un-American. No, no not Seeger again. Worse yet. It's department Canada. Things are strangely un-U.S-ish to the north. What have they done you ask? What have they not! Those Canadian fanatics are feeding Asiatics; they've set up a trusteeship on the lakes. More unbelievable my boys, the Better Business Bureau says they're selling rancid butter to Great Britain. Now I'm not one to crock at capitalist competition, goodness knows. But we're plainly being out-bargained by those damned Eskimos. Well I've checked through all the records and I know that I'm not wrong. John Diefenbaker's no longer their sovereign. The chief of the north woods is one Lester Bowles Pearson — a man of Nobel distinction.

His dossier says he's docile — in fact a trifle weak. We had never expected to hear the slightest squeak. There's something in the very air at Ottawa, that's not simply metaphoric Mister Chairman. We've had samples from the Rideau, the Driveway and the Peace Tower. It's indescribably — well tangy and somehow faintly south Siberian — get the point.

Surely it's not natural for the Russians and Canadians to be breathing something similar, after all. And now they're eating wheat from a pink and common basket from Saskatchewan. Admittedly, it's hardly consistent to point out that we're selling to the Commies ourselves. But let's be fair now. We the Yankees have the old American right to wink at something faintly un-U.S-ish. But not Canada. Such a subtle concession can never be afforded to a race as irrelevant as they.

Mister Chairman don't be mournful, I've not meant to give you quite so bad a scare. And I've got a plan, a solution — it's a Yankee doodle dandy. Listen now.

We get some ink at Newsweek and serve up a second scandal sheet — like the last, like the last. And when we've toppled Pearson the way of old John D., we cast our gaze on Banks — the young man from the sea. He'll botch up their shipping when he is sovereign lord till the wheat winds up in Windsor and the butter's dumped overboard.

Ade twins pose with friends at Pioneer Village

Trinity twins have pioneering spirit

By CAROL BURNHAM

During the summer, two 19-year-old twin sisters probably qualified as the most-photographed students from the University of Toronto.

Janet and Barbara Ade of Trinity College appeared countless times in Toronto newspapers in long gingham dresses, and carrying century-old parasols. Both worked at Pioneer Village, the conservation area in north Toronto which has a growing community of original 19th-century buildings.

Barbara ran the gift shop which sold Canadian handicrafts as well as candles and wool made right in the village, herbs grown in the gardens, and even pokers, boot-scrappers and door-knockers fashioned by the local blacksmith.

Janet was a pioneer in her own field. She collected and catalogued a collection of toys, never organized by anyone and all used in Canada from 1900.

Janet found the problem of creating so much of chaos fascinating. She had to pore over written by collectors to determine such date each toy was produced and how it was made. Sometimes a toy could be of some famous person — for example, a toy that belonged to the first premier of Ontario.

Janet is probably one of the few in Canada who has done any extensive work in this relative field.

Although Barbara was constantly meeting

Negro hatred rising in U. S.

By GARY PERLY

"We hold these truths to be self-evident . . . that all men are created equal . . ." Those words were written almost 200 years ago. The 14th amendment to the American Constitution was passed about 100 years ago. Yet, the Negro must fight for his rights even today.

A Negro student, whose father had been run off his 800-acre farm in Oklahoma, told me: "We've been slaves for 300 years and now we want our freedom!" And what should I, a white man, have told him — to be patient and wait until The Great White Father chooses to give him his long-promised freedom?

On a nation-wide TV hook-up recently, Gov. George Wallace of Alabama noted that he had discovered that "our nigras don't want any of this integration business — the ones who're pushing it are the lazy, the indolent, the ne'er-do-wells, the beatniks and the Communists." Many whites claim to have made similar discoveries. In point of fact, all they have discovered is that Uncle Tom was based on a real person. And so, too, was Aunt Jemima.

The New York City welfare department has just released figures which show that although the average income of Negroes in New York City is one-third lower than that of whites, their average rent is higher. On top of all this, perhaps the worst, they describe the living quarters of the average Negro (who is, on the average, the worst in the U.S.) is to note that 2 of the best-selling Harlem drug-stores are, respectively, cockroach bites and a salve for rat bites. Amazing as it may seem to some, Negroes and as such, their patience has its limit. In Harlem when four little girls were blown up in a Birmingham church. Shortly after that, out, I overheard a group of Negroes talking about having an argument.

A lean and hungry one, wearing a beret, said: "They're killing little girls! . . . let's tear up Times Square in the East River!"

A well-fed, well-dressed one was counting on won't solve anything . . . it'll only be them to spill some black blood. They're animals and they can therefore justify doing to us. We have to play it cool and mumble quietly!" And so on and so on for over an hour. A lean and hungry one, shaking, crying, emotion and mumbling, "Those white . . ."

Archaeology team proves Fort Albany captured by French

A student archeological expedition to James Bay, directed by Walter Kenyon, Royal Ontario Museum staff archeologist, found enough material to prove that Fort Albany was the fort captured by the French in 1686.

Mr. Kenyon with six students set out this summer on his third expedition to the area with hopes of proving the fort was that built by the Hudson's Bay Company about 1679 on the present Albany Island.

The group also was seeking the Pery, a supply boat sunk in James Bay in 1791. Search for the Pery was hindered by sandbars and the presence of sandbars.

The motives for excavating the site were to obtain samples of the building materials, to obtain illustrations for the ROM gallery; and, most of all, to gain a good ground plan so that the fort could be reconstructed for museum and educational purposes.

Janet feels that her job was probably more interesting. The satisfaction of knowing that "no one has done what you've done," she says, means that the work is never dull.
Janet should have a real sense of accomplishment — she finished the researching and cataloging of the toy collection in early September, and now answers questions on the display at the museum on the weekends.
Both Barbara and Janet found their work related to their history courses at U of T, and would recommend such a job for anyone who is interested in 19th-century life in Canada. Some positions are open for students for summer and weekend work.
"In fact," says Janet, "I became so interested in my work that I've even started my own doll collection."

it dealt with the murderer of the postman Moore (now free) and as it dealt with the murderer of Medgar Evers (never brought to trial — taking a short rest in mental hospital)?
Some people argue that it's a question of education — an education that will take many, many years. A Philadelphia Negro put it to me: "We don't care if you like us or not. We only want fair play. You don't have to like us, but you do have to serve us in your restaurants and you do have to teach our kids in your schools and you do have to employ us in your companies."
One afternoon I ate in the Muslim-run Shabazz Restaurant in Harlem. Even though hatred of whites is part of the Muslim creed, they served me. There was an evident air of hostility, yes, but they served me.
Alan Borovoy, executive secretary for human rights of the Toronto Labor Council, will tell you that "the human rights question is one of the few human problems about which you are either 100 per cent right or 100 per cent wrong. It's an absolute concept — like purity. You're either 100 per cent in favour of acheiving human dignity now or you aren't with us."

old trading posts.

(The scene is the forecourt of a modest $2,500,000 college in Environs, central Toronto republic. Sheep graze, blissfully on the distant hills. Yew trees bend in the wind. It is morning.
(The college staff in 14th-century garb occupies itself washing down the drawbridge, cleaning the teeth of the portcullis and fluoridating the moat.

(Approaching the college are Speirs the Maid, with trumpet, and a local pickup group of McMahon on sax, Drushka on drums and 48 female graduate student singers. From within the college the sound of Ketelbey's "In a Monastery Garden" rises and then fades. The Maid's group reaches the moat and she cries to the gatekeeper.

Maid (brandishing trumpet and silver charger): We want your leader!

Gatekeeper (confused): Forsooth I undirstonde thee ille.
What tongue speakest thou?

Maid: The Master!

(The gatekeeper disappears and then quickly returns with the Master, heavily bearded and wearing a brown monastic cloak fastened at his waist with rope. Sandals are on his feet. His head is shaved. Behind him is the blind Welsh bard Merlin, carrying a harp and a jingling leather purse.)

Master (sitting in modest $100 suede chair that has been brought forward): Aye?

Maid: Good morning Master. God has sent me to prove women's worth.

Master: Yoicks! Be I damned?

Maid: No sir, God is very merciful and the blessed Saint Pankhurst who speaks to me every day will intercede for you.
Merlin (whispering audibly to Master): Mwy boen yw koffau kyuoeth gweidy colier — It is a greater torment to remember power after it is lost.

Master (sadly): Women desyren to have sovereignty. As well over hir housbond as hir love.

(Speirs turns to her group and raises her hands like a conductor. The women form six lines of eight, whisk sheet music from their bosoms and open their mouths wide. The castlfolk leap for maces and bows, fearing some fantastic new weapon is about to be unleashed on them.

(Drushka and Ward play a fast four-bar intro and then the Maid comes in on the horn with the women singing:)

There was a young maiden named Speirs
And her friends who spent nearly two years
Teaching men to ignore
Other men, who are bores,
And to turn them instead to brassieres.

(Merlin lays down his harp and purse and covers his ears. The male graduate students wearing modest red satin smoking jackets appear at the battlements and stare in stupefaction at the bizarre scene below.

Master: Women are lyke tricks by slight of honde / Whych, to admyre, wee shoulde nat undirstonde.

(The Master glares warningly at his students who now are eagerly eyeing some of the women. The women, noting their interest, begin to disrobe. McMahon and Drushka faint.)

Maid: The woman that deliberates is lost! She certainly is!

Master (annoyed at having been out-quoted): All women born are so perverse / No manne nede boast their love possessing.

Maid (brightly): A lady with a lamp shall stand / In the great history of the land, / A noble type of good, / Heroic womanhood.

Master (losing ground): Ummm . . . fraytly thy namme is woman. Onde also . . . as wee muste accounte for everye idle worde, so wee muste accounte for everye idle silense.

A Junior Fellow (from the rampart): And now I see with eye serene, / The very pulse of the machine; / A perfect woman, nobly planned, / To warm, to comfort and command.

(The Junior Fellow flings his sherry-glass into the moat, climbs down the ivy-covered walls, removes his clothes and rushes into the phalanx of women. Speirs cheers. The Master shakes his fist at the other male students.)

Master: Wylte thou have these women to be thy awful wedded wives?

Merlin: Ny weleiste eto nemawr o boeneu uffernn — So far thou hast seen little of the pains of Hell.

(The men waver, watching the activities of the Lost Fellow.
Then with shrill shrieks they follow him over the wall.

(Great fissures appear in the walls. Chunks of firebrick and cement tumble into the moat — unnoticed by the orgiastic group of graduate students.

(Merlin, having escaped with his purse, negotiates with the Maid over terms for a new co-educational graduate college.)

Under apartheid in South Africa, university is rarely reached by Negroes. Zone restrictions often rule out even grade school education.

SHARE aids apartheid victims

In its program of aid to education, SHARE has unavoidably come face to face with apartheid in South Africa. The victory of an oppressed people over a program directed against the aims of higher education ultimately depends on the moral and financial support of SHARE.

Until 1960, no Negroes in South Africa were allowed to proceed from high school to university. In that year, the World University Service — sponsor of SHARE — took advantage of a loophole in government policy and established four centres where Negro students could proceed to a degree from the University of London by correspondence.

To retaliate, the government has tightened such loose restrictions, and now commonly refuses even secondary education to Negroes in many areas. Unfortunately, because of the government's many localizing restrictions, many Negro students are unaware of the conditions of their country as compared with those elsewhere.

Hence SHARE finds it doubly difficult to help the students who often are indifferent or prone to dropping out of their course. Very few of the program's students attend full-time, and most must commute fair distances — much to the government's chagrin — and hold part-time jobs.

The SHARE program has become one of salutary deportation — getting the Negroes out of their environment into the mainstream of true civilization.

Effectively helping the students because of its distant and neutral headquarters in Geneva, WUS has poured an annual $50,000 into the African program.

Past support by Nobel Peace Prize winner Albert Luthuli and Alan Paton, author of Cry the Beloved Country, depends for future success on continued help from SHARE. Everyone has commented on apartheid, some quite heatedly. The Canadian's chance to help is on campus this week. Help the students help themselves, through SHARE.

Pick debating team

The University of Toronto debating team was chosen last week. Regular members are: John Brett (SGS); John Godfrey (III Trin); David Cravitt (I UC); Richard Guiso (III SMC); John Holt (II UC); Jim Huzel (III Vic); Gary Kelly (III Vic); Jeffrey Lyons (III Law); Ashish Sen (SGS); Joec Shaw (I Law); Howard Simmons (SGS); Peter Wilson (III Trin); Harvey Wortzman (III UC).

Alternate members are: H. Goldkind (III UC); M. MacMillan (II Trin); H. Pohoretsky (II UC).

Camera club opens house

The annual open house of the Hart House Camera Club will introduce one of the oldest such clubs in Canada to new members tonight at 8 p.m. in the music room.

Members and interested students will have a chance to meet the club executive, hear two lectures on photography and tour the dark room facilities.

Ron Sorley, president of the Toronto Camera Club, will speak on pictorial black and white photography and will show prints. Past president Ron Pugh will talk on "People as I see them in color."

Top track stars featured at championships here Saturday

By UNCLE HARRY

The top track and field performers from at least nine eastern Canadian universities display their talents here Saturday in the Intercollegiate Track Championships. The meet begins at 1 p.m. in Varsity Stadium.

Although Varsity tracksters have easily carried off the Tate MacKenzie Trophy, emblematic of the championship, for the last two seasons, graduations and academic ineligibilities have pared several sure winners from last year's powerful squad.

A year ago Blues ran up twice as many points as the nearest school. But world-class half-miler Bill Crothers has departed through graduation, as has top sprinter Al Brereton.

The list of academic ineligibles is so long that Coach Hal Brown has already remarked: "A dual meet between this year's Varsity squad and those who failed would be a close battle."

Main threat to Blues in Saturday's meet should be McMaster. Marauders boast the conference's best sprinter in Torontonians Frank Baines and have the depth to pile up numerous second- and third-place points.

The dark-horse for the championship must be the Western Mustang. In British Empire Games steeplechaser Hylke Vander Wal and Ontario 440-yard champion Don McCarten, Western has a nucleus around which to build a team.

But if Blues' Rod Chintu can whip McCarten in the 440 yards and Bruce Kidd can outrun Vander Wal in the mile and three-mile events, the Mustang push will be seriously crippled.

The overall scoring race may be further complicated by sole top entries from other schools. In this category is Queen's Bill White, favored to win 440-yard hurdles.

In the field: To hear the comments of Blues' veterans Dave Cook and Craig Cook (no relation), the MacKenzie Trophy will still rest in Hart House after the weekend. Dave Cook has been plagued by tendon trouble this fall, but hopes this won't prevent him from winning his third 120-yard hurdles title... last Saturday in High Park Varsity harriers bowed to Wayne University 25-30, despite the fine showing of Bruce Kidd and Gurston Dacks who placed first and third respectively.

ROD CHINTU
Varsity track ace

INTERFACULTY ROUNDUP

Dents gridders set claim as contenders

BY AL SCHOENBORN

Dentistry established itself as a Division I football powerhouse on the back campus Friday afternoon by whipping Skule 18-7.

Dan Kit booted the Engineers into a 1-0 first-quarter lead, but Dents scored a touch-down-per-quarter after that to pull away. Glen Katsuyama added a last-quarter major for SPS. Jim Biggar, Bradley Holmes and Red Warren contributed touchdowns for the winners.

Although it is too early to be sure, the Dents victory gave indications of a fierce struggle for Mulock Cup supremacy and possibly of a break in Vic's record-breaking five-year hold on the silverware.

SOCCER

There continues to be a scarcity of goals in interfac soccer play as matches between PHE and Jr. SPS and between UC II and Vic II failed to produce a single goal Tuesday. Friday Architecture edged Forestry 1-0.

LACROSSE

The race in Group I lacrosse looks to be a two-team battle as both St. Mike's A and PHE A crushed their opposition in recent games.

The Double Blue ran over a disorganized Vic I squad 9-2 on Friday. Barry Fleming led the St. Mike's shooters with three goals while Vern McCreary, Don Schmidt and George Olah each potted a pair. Dave O'Brien and Ron Clark hit for Vic.

Tuesday, PHE A knocked off Dents, which had easily won its first Group I contest with Meds. Led by Don Arthurs and Larry Nancekivell with five and four goals respectively, the boys from Hart House won 12-3. Other Phys Ed scorers were Barry Bartlett (2) and Bob Wyles. John Kawaguchi scored a pair and Paul Sunohara one for Dents. Group II action commenced Tuesday as an impressive SPS I squad popped in four first-period counters to coast to an 8-4 victory over UC. Bruce Burgess paced the skulemen with a hat trick, Wayne Archer scored two and Jerry McElroy, Ron Sanderson and G. Petroff had singletons. Les Cappe and Al Schoenborn shared the UC tallies with two apiece

RUGGER

In seven-a-side rugger, PHE A overpowered UC 26-3. Ernie Philp and Pete Derry with two tries, Don Arthurs and Larry Nancekivell with one each, and Andy Szandtner's four converts took care of the PHE scoring. Kinnel counted the lone try for UC. PHE B also won, taking Trinity B 9-3, while New College shut out Pharmacy 11-0. Vic II and Meds B played to a 6-6 tie.

VOLLEYBALL

Volleyball action saw Jr. Skule top Vic I 15-8, 13-15, 15-9, while Trinity edged St. Mike's A 17-15, 16-14. In other games third-year Meds took Pharmacy 12-15, 16-14, 15-5, and First Pre-Meds beat SPS C 15-4, 15-7. Law A defaulted to PHE.

Burwash wins net crown as Blues lose

PHE freshman Pete Burwash won the intercollegiate singles tennis championship at University of Montreal last week although Varsity finished second to McGill in the team standings.

Burwash, who at 18 is rated as one of Canada's top junior players, won all five of his singles matches against the first seeds of the other five colleges in the tournament. His most impressive win was a 6-2, 6-2 victory over highly-rated Steve Chandler of McGill, a native of California.

In the team standings, McGill won the title with 26 points to Varsity's 23. Montreal was third with 16, followed by Western with 11, Laval with 9 and McMaster with 5.

In other singles play, Varsity's number two seed Hugh Parker won four of five matches, third seed Doug Coulter won all five and fourth seed Werner Mees was 2-and-3. In doubles play, Burwash and Coulter were 3-2 and Parker and Mees were 4-1. Bruce Denny-Brown and Chandler of McGill won the doubles title with a perfect 5-0 score.

Prospects appear good for another McGill victory next year as Davis Cupper Keith Carpenter will be back with the McGill team. Carpenter is academically ineligible this year.

Minor injuries suffered in rugby win

A UTRFC

Syndicated Service

Varsity Rugby Blues are suffering from a rash of injuries as a result of Saturday's 17-0 whitewash of visiting McGill Redmen. Most of the scrapes and bruises can be traced to the concrete-like condition of the back campus pitch. Fortunately these discomforting injuries won't keep any Blue out of Saturday's encounter with Ontario Agricultural College in Guelph. Varsity dominated the McGill match in every department. On one occasion the powerful home-team scrum pushed the Redmen scrum back over their own goal-line for a pack try. Other tries went to Bill Charleton, Ge-then Hughes, and Paul Wilson. The Golden Toe, Wilson, picked up five more points with a conversion and a penalty kick. Blues face a tougher task Saturday in Guelph where the Aggies usually are inspired to play over their heads. Against the stocky farmers, Blues will rely heavily on the running of Charleton and Ian Sinclair, and the line-out jumping of Hughes and Jim Humphries.

In the scrum: Varsity captain Paul Wilson was the outstanding performer in Monday's exhibition match between an OQAA All-Star Fifteen and an Ontario Rugby Union Select team. Wilson scored all the points for the Universities team in a 15-14 setback. Wilson's scores came from two tries, one conversion and two penalty kicks, one of which was a 45-yard boot. Other Blues to see All-Star action were Bill Charleton, Mike Treadwell, Rod Sanders, John McNeil, Larry Johnson, and Bob Dodds... Queen's continues to share first place with Toronto on the strength of a 3-0 squeaker over OAC in Guelph Saturday... In an exhibition against the Aurora Flyers Saturday, the Intermediates swamped their opponents 28-0... Today at York the Thirds attempt to rout York again, while the back campus sees an intra-squad game between the Blues and the Intermediates.

Halfback line leads Blues to 4-3 soccer victory

By KATY O'SULLIVAN

In a fast, hard-fought contest, Varsity Soccer Blues triumphed over McGill Redmen 4-3 Saturday on the back campus. Walter Sawka led off the scoring for McGill in the first five minutes of play. Peter Haynes of Toronto tied the game, heading a corner kick into the nets. John Hardy, outmanoeuvring Blues' defence, scored again for Redmen and Haynes again tied the game, this time on a 25-yard free kick. Just before the half Urs Maag slammed in Toronto's third goal.

As the second period got under way, newcomer to Toronto's lineup, Pat Terrelonge, tapped in Blues' winning goal before George Constantis tallied McGill's final goal. Varsity's halfback line was outstanding, controlling the play and scoring three of Blues' goals.

On Toronto's defence, Nick Walker was the key player. A tough, determined defence-man, Walker acted as a second goalkeeper in stopping Redmen's forward drives. On the whole Blues' defence did not act in unison; crossed signals between the players led to tense moments in front of Toronto's nets.

Varsity's offence ran into difficulty getting through the exceptionally tall and strong McGill defenders. Redmen's defence was the most effective Toronto has encountered so far in four games this season.

With this win, Blues' take a one-goal lead in the two-game, total point series for the Blackwood Trophy. The final game in this series will be played in Montreal Nov. 2. Blues' next league game will be played Saturday against University of Western Ontario in London. Game time is 12 noon.

Katy's Comments: Blues defeated McMaster 2-1 here last Wednesday. Bobby Lewis and Peter Haynes scored for Blues, Jim Anderson for Mac... The home-and-home series with McGill for the Blackwood Trophy does not count in the OQAA standings since McGill does not meet the other OQAA teams.

Ryerson visits Rinks Thursday

By GORD BELLMORE

All of a sudden the Intermediate Intercollegiate Football League is a toss-up. Ryerson Rams, the unknown entry, surprised Western Colts in their game in Toronto Saturday 21-23 with a convincing performance. Varsity Baby Blues will host this same Ryerson team at Varsity Stadium Thursday night. If Rinkies can take Ryerson they will force a three-way tie in the standings with each of the three teams having a win and a loss. Unfortunately this is a big "if". Rinkies lost their opener to Western and thus face a tough hurdle in the lively Rams.

Baby Blues were game enough against Western but they were lacking in offence. They have had almost two weeks to work on their problems since then but player shuffling and injuries have left them a doubtful quantity. Perhaps significant is the fact that most of the offensive unit has been kept intact in this period and has been able to work together to some degree.

There has been time to put in a more varied offence and to sharpen the timing. Most of the player troubles have been with the defence but Baby Blues will be bolstered by several players from the Senior Blues. Tom Verth, Jim Ronson, John Fraser and Terry Bates will join the team. All are linemen and all but Fraser played for Rinkies against Western. Backs Pete Sutherland and Andy Szandtner, who also played against Colts, and Chris Speyer are also expected to oppose Ryerson.

HOT

stroke Forbes Marnoch, exhibited remarkable strength for its first competition, and left defending Intercollegiate champion Western bobbing in its wake. The Junior boat has only rowed together for two weeks, but stroke Paul Vogt's smooth pace led them to a two-length victory over Ryerson and Waterloo. To make the afternoon complete, the Freshmen mastered Coxswain George McColough's relaxed pace and upset McMaster's rookies by one length.

Scullers sweep five-college regatta at lakeshore

The Varsity Rowing Eight raced to a two-and-one-half length victory over McMaster in an exhibition regatta on the Toronto lakeshore Saturday. Varsity's two other boats also stroked to impressive wins in the five-school regatta. The senior Eight, paced by

Blues need 4 wins

By SHEL KRAKOFKY

Associate Sports Editor

With Saturday's 25-24 loss to McGill Redmen, Varsity Blues remain the only winless team in the Senior Intercollegiate Football League.

If Blues have any designs on the Yates Cup, they will have to virtually go undefeated in their four remaining games. Although they are off to a bad start, Blues are still in contention for the championship. It must be remembered that McGill lost their first two games of the season last year en route to the Yates Cup.

Queen's took sole possession of first place with a 20-18 win over Western. Mustangs almost pulled an upset, leading 17-13 in the fourth quarter, but a bad snap by three-time all-star centre John McTras Jr. set up the winning touchdown for Gaels.

Blues will have to play a more inspired and harder hitting brand of football than they did on Saturday if they have any intentions of bringing the Yates silverware back to Toronto.

Except for the heroics displayed by halfback Gerry Sternberg and quarterback Bryce Taylor in the last five minutes, Blues played a shabby game.

They lost three fumbles, two of these resulting in McGill touchdowns. Redmen also intercepted four passes, two from Jim Israel and two from Taylor.

Blues controlled the play in the first half but could not keep up a sustained drive. The game was played in McGill's territory for almost the entire half but Blues could only muster a paltry four points. Israel mixed his plays well but when the chips were down, his pass receivers ran awry and went after the ball with Crisco in their hands.

By the time the fourth quarter rolled around, Redmen led 24-4 with shifty Willie Lambert accounting for 18 of McGill's points on two touchdowns, a field goal, two converts and a single. Al Shreiber got the other McGill touchdown when he recovered Dave Galloway's fumble of a pitchout on Varsity's 12-yard line and ran over for the major.

Leon Abbott added a single in the last quarter to make the McGill All-Star end Don Taylor (79) makes a diving catch of 'Garry Cullen's pass in Saturday's game. Blues' Ray German (21) moves in on the play.

—VSP czarnecki

score 25-4 and this set the stage for the final five minutes of the game.

Sternberg and Taylor got together for 75, 31, and 63 yard touchdowns to make the final score look respectable. In fact Blues almost pulled this one out of the fire.

Taylor converted Sternberg's first and third touchdowns but hit the right crossbar with his second try and Varsity fell one point short of tying.

QUICK KICKS: Halfback Harold Hall will be missing from Blues' lineup for at least three weeks. He suffered two broken ribs after throwing a block for Bryce Taylor who intercepted a pass. Hall was replacing Ken Davison at defensive halfback at the time... Davison suffered a minor concussion in the second quarter but is expected to play against Western on Saturday...

With Hall out, Sternberg has won himself a starting position at offensive halfback... Saturday was the first time Sternberg's parents ever came to see him play in a football game...

Halfback Riivo Ilves, who has been out of Blues' lineup for four weeks with a separated shoulder should be back in time for Varsity's home game against Mustangs in two weeks... Offensive end Mike Hollett who missed Saturday's game with a bad ankle, should be back in action Saturday...

Lambert lugged the ball for 141 yards in 14 carries... McGill fullback Pete Howlett ran for 48 yards in 13 tries before suffering a broken nose and a rib injury... Varsity fullback Bill Watters gained 35 yards in 4 carries while Hall gained 34 yards in 11 carries before being injured...

Western quarterback, Bob Israel spent the weekend in the hospital with a sore leg... McGill quarterback Gary Cullen is out for the season with torn knee ligaments suffered in Saturday's game...

Varsity sailors miss college crown by eighth of a point mere eighth of a point separated Varsity's Sailing Team from the Canadian Intercollegiate Sailing Championships in a regatta at Royal Military College last weekend.

Sir George Williams University took the Col. Grant Trophy for the championship, scoring 13.875 points to Varsity's 13.75.

Defending champion Waterloo University placed third. The Toronto team of Al Crosbie, Jim Ingles, and Peter Drake won three of five races, but a special point-system used because of a strong wind gave the Montreal team the victory.

STERNBERG PUTS HIMSELF IN LAMBERT'S CLASS

At first examination, there doesn't seem to be too much in common between Willie Lambert and Gerry Sternberg. Lambert plays for McGill Redmen, is 26 years old, a married man and a father, and is less than a year away from becoming a dentist. This is the sixth year he has terrorized the Senior Intercollegiate Football League with his speed and pass-catching. For the past three seasons he was a league all-star, last season being chosen by the coaches of the league as an all-star in both the offensive and defensive backfields.

GERRY STERNBERG

Sternberg is only 20 years old, a second-year student in Arts at University College. He has only played organized football since Grade 11 and is in only his second season with Varsity Blues. When Lambert first played in the intercollegiate league, the closest Sternberg came to a football game were the games he watched as a Grade 10 student at Bloor Collegiate. Sternberg hasn't yet played a complete game at offence in college football.

Yet there is an analogy that can be drawn between Wonderful Willie and Sophomore Gerry. This was pointed out in last Saturday's game at Varsity Stadium, won by Redmen 25-24. Lambert and Sternberg were the offensive stars of the game, each registering 18 points. Lambert displayed his versatility by scoring two touchdowns and kicking two converts, a field goal and a single. Sternberg thrilled the crowd of more than 10,000 by getting in the clear on three separate occasions in the last five minutes to pull in perfect passes from quarterback Bryce Taylor and romp for three touchdowns that just missed giving Blues a tie.

Lambert is regarded as the best halfback in the SIFL and few can dispute this fact. A hardened veteran, Willie would not be out of place on a professional gridiron.

But Willie graduates next spring, unless they find another course to keep him around, and his title as the league's top halfback will be up for grabs.

WILLIE'S TITLE WILL BE UP FOR GRABS

Sternberg could be the player to succeed Lambert.

"He can be the best halfback in the league," says Varsity assistant coach Mike Chykaliuk.

Chykaliuk isn't alone in his praise for Sternberg. When Sternberg vied for a position with Blues in his freshman year last season, head coach Dalt White rated him as the best first-year prospect he'd seen in 12 years of Varsity coaching. And Sternberg's teammates often claim he's as determined as any player they've seen.

But it has been a frustrating experience for Gerry to prove he's capable of giving Blues one of the best offensive threats in the league. Last season White started Sternberg in the defensive backfield, the logical position for a freshman halfback. Before the season was long underway, White knew he had a prize catch. He repeatedly mentioned what he thought Sternberg could do if he played offence. But by this time Sternberg was too valuable to the defence to give him a chance on the attack.

As a defensive halfback, he was a standout. In the game at Varsity Stadium against Western Mustangs he protected a 16-7 Varsity lead by coming from nowhere to tackle Brian Conacher after Conacher had raced 50 yards to Blues' 35-yard line. Sternberg added insult to the Western injury by knocking the ball loose from Conacher and giving Blues possession. Blues went on to win 23-14.

The only time Sternberg got to carry the ball was on kick returns and interceptions. And his hardnosed, deceptive style soon made opponents and spectators aware that he was capable of going all the way anytime he got his hands on the ball. All expectations pointed to a great season for Sternberg this year. But things got off on the wrong foot. In training he sprained an ankle and couldn't play in the exhibition games against Ottawa and Western. This setback relegated him to only part-time duty in the league opener at Queen's and even by last Saturday he hadn't won a starting place in the lineup.

When halfback Harold Hall was injured in the third quarter, however, Sternberg got the call. His three spectacular touchdowns in the final five minutes were the result of sheer speed, perfect timing and, of course, excellent passing by Taylor.

Sternberg hasn't really begun to show what he can do. These were only the first three passes he has caught in college and he has had little opportunity to run with the ball. If his showing in practice is any indication, Sternberg will surprise a lot of people with his ball-carrying, even though at 5'9" and 168 pounds he (like Lambert) is one of the smallest players in the league.

Sternberg certainly has a great start. But like they say in vaudeville—What does he do for an encore?

Quivering Skulemen buy girls

Seven hundred excited engineers packed into the physics building Thursday to bid at the annual Skule SHARE auction.

The cannon was fired, and as soon as the smoke cleared and several apple-throwing artsmen were ejected six girls took their places on the block accompanied by the Lady Godiva Memorial Band and shouts of "Take it off!"

Coveted front-row seats went to photographers and loud applause greeted one photog who tested his light meter against a girl's leg.

Non-bidding audience members showered pennies and paper airplanes on the girls, the auctioneers and anything else available.

The bidding was intensely competitive as the Skulemen pooled their funds to raise the price of a girl. Top price — $175 — was paid for Ruth Gould (I Vic) and her tickets to a Blue and White dance.

Total take for auctioned items — girls, tickets to the Victory theatre, slide-rules and a wooden door — was more than $900.

Similar auctions at Trinity and Victoria featured bargains — top price here was only $20.

Odds and ends at Trinity included head of arts Wally Ross (IV Trin) at $29.50 and a package deal — divinity student plus bed — at $10.

Money collected went to SHARE making a total to date of almost $6,000. The girl auctions brought in about $1,400 while the mile-of dimes contributed $1,390.

SHARE activities Friday — the final day of the campaign — will include wandering folksingers at Victoria and backrubs in the Trinity Buttery.

Ward urges SAC to expand

Student governments must educate students in their responsibilities as citizens and members of the academic community, Students' Administrative Council President Doug Ward (III Emm) said Wednesday night.

In his opening address to this year's council, Ward surveyed student conditions throughout the world, and contrasted them with conditions in Canada.

Ward described the problems of student government as not just the question of student dress, discipline and activities, but the role of the university in our fast-moving milieu, curricula, expansion, and academic freedom.

Partisan spirit, which could turn the university into an aggregate of pressure groups clamoring for rights, must be guarded against, Ward said.

But a well-informed and cohesive student identity which can come to the aid of the whole community, must be maintained, Ward continued.

Ward emphasized that student governments should address themselves to their present responsibilities, rather than worrying about creating a power which they do not have.

Exams, Passover conflict, SAC told

Jewish students frequently suffer because their examinations conflict with religious holidays, the Students' Administrative Council learned Wednesday night.

Final examinations usually coincide with up to four days of the Passover holiday, it was pointed out. Students not willing to write exams on a religious holiday have been forced to write supplemental examinations, and have often lost honor standing as a result.

In addition, students observing the holiday have been forced to forego part or all of their summer employment, said Dave Sefton (III APSC).

The SAC recommended to the Caput that exams conflicting with religious holidays be rescheduled or, if this was not possible, that special consideration be given to students so affected.

The SAC also recognized the National Federation of Canadian University Students Life Plan of the Canadian Premier Life Insurance Company, but recommended that students investigate other plans to suit their own particular needs.

The NFCUS term insurance is convertible to ordinary life insurance on graduation. It was learned that the plan offers lower than usual term rates but that other companies offer lower rates on ordinary life insurance.

Form new arts college council

An Inter-College Presidents' Council was established Thursday by the students' council presidents of New, St. Michael's, Victoria, University and Trinity Colleges. The Trinity College Council's acceptance of the plan has not been confirmed. The council will provide loose ties and improved communication among the colleges.

"The Students' Administrative Council does not provide a forum for discussion of problems common to the arts colleges" said Dave Blatman (II New) one of the presidents.

"But we are not trying to establish a new legislative body" Blatman added. At monthly closed meetings, the council will discuss problems common to student governments and arts students. In addition, they will be able to express a collective arts opinion on matters of campus-wide importance. The presidents, Dave Blatman (II New), Rick Patrick (III SMC), Walt Ross (IV Trin), Phil Epstein (III UC) and Sandy Burnett (IV Vic) meet for the first time at St. Michael's College on Nov. 21.

Whyte shepherds washed their socks by nytghe.

Female grads will have to wait

Residential space for female graduate students at University of Toronto will not be available for at least two or three years, an official said yesterday.

Frank Stone, vice-president in charge of administration, said: The university has been aware of the acute lack of space for graduate students, and have a staff committee considering the problems.

"But there is nothing definite yet on the drawing boards."

Tuesday, 15 students, both male and female, led by Rosemary Speirs (SGS), picketed Massey College protesting the lack of residence space for graduate students.

Meanwhile, a Massey College Junior Fellow expressed his own objections to one facet of the residence.

John Wells (SGS) Wednesday washed several pairs of socks in the Massey College quadrangle pool because the $2,500,000 college has no laundry facilities for students.

The socks, left to dry on the edge of the pool, were confiscated by Dr. Robertson Davies, master, and later returned to Wells.

WUS picks national committee

The World University Service announced Thursday the selection of the national committee made at the national assembly at Montmorency, Que., last week.

Members from the University of Toronto will include Paul Becker (I Law), vice chairman; Roger Jones (Development Office), treasurer; Sandra Johnston, a staff member at Vic, and Doug Ward (III Emm), committee members. The national assembly will also invite Morris Murill and Robert Rawlings, business and financial committee; Prof. Ted Rathee, Mr. Fukatsu, Prof. W. O. Fennell, and Tim Smith (III Vic), committee on international affairs; Stuart Goodings and Louise Laing (IV Nurs), national affairs committee; and Franz Koch and Prof. K. L. Levy, seminar committee.

Ban 'blue' film

VANCOUVER (CUP)—A movie showing sexual intercourse has been banned at the University of British Columbia. The student-produced Bitter Ash was to have been screened in the UBC auditorium and admission was to have been charged. Larry Kent said his film cost $3,000 to produce and demanded the Alma Mater Society of the university and the B.C. board of censors allow the performances to save him from taking a large loss. He defended the controversial scene, which according to one report shows the sex act "from beginning to end." "The point we are trying to make is that promiscuity is an impossible means of escape," he said.

Jordan gets post

OTTAWA (CUP)—Jordan Sullivan, last year's University of Toronto Students' Administrative Council president, Thursday was elected chairman of the structures commission of the English caucus of the Canadian Union of Students.

"It'll be great to get down to work," Sullivan said in an interview.

"There's nothing so washed up as a former student president. I am delighted to have been rescued from the limbo of the has-beens." The commission was set up to make recommendations to next year's CUS congress.

Lashes BNA Act

The British North America Act is outdated, Andre L'Heureux, co-founder of the Quebec Socialist Party told a meeting of 75 students sponsored by the campus New Democrats Wednesday. "The Ottawa government is over-centralized," he said, "and the provinces cannot fulfil their aspirations." He advocated a new confederation in which both French and English Canadians would govern their own educational and cultural affairs. "This," Mr. L'Heureux said, "would prevent English-speaking Canadians from treating the French as second-class citizens."

Liberals 'left'

Most Liberals favor movement to the left rather than to the right, Professor Mark MacGuigan said Thursday. These members with leftist leanings must ultimately take control of the Liberal party in Canada he added. Prof. MacGuigan, a candidate in St. Patrick's riding in the recent provincial election and associate professor of law at the University of Toronto, said that the intellectuals within a political party must constantly reform their own party. He was speaking on the "reform of liberalism" at a meeting of the Liberal Club. He said while reform is not a major need at the moment it is a continuing process and as such should be studied.

He spoke about reform of both Parliament and of the Liberal party itself.

He said that neither the dominion nor the provincial legislature offered research assistance to the "rank and file" members either of the government or the opposition. "All responsibility is being assumed by the cabinet and not enough by other members," he said. Reform is necessary to give real power to the private member. This reform should be modelled on the U.S. system as "a private member means more there than in the Parliamentary system."

He also said a party "with more attention to principle" is more in keeping with the mood of the Canadian people which is developing. In the last election there was "not a very great concentration on principle and I think we suffered from this."

Red Plays U. S.

Nelson Clarke, Canadian organizer of the Communist party, says his party is discriminated against and misunderstood by most Canadians.

He was speaking on "Co-existence and Freedom" at University College Wednesday.

Mr. Clarke said peaceful co-existence is needed to end competition between the socialist and capitalist systems, based on establishing which system can provide a better standard of living, most freedom and democracy, and the highest development of the individual. He is confident that the social system leading to communism will prove best for humanity. Peace provides the best conditions for people under colonial oppression to redress their wrongs and win their freedom, as in the case of Cuba, he said. He said he does not suggest freedom is the chief perfection in the U.S.S.R., but he says some freedom is greater there than in this country, as in criticism of bureaucracy, factory management and government. He blamed Russian backwardness in this respect on the war-time invasion and on Stalin's paranoiac fear of Western ideas of democracy. Mr. Clarke laid the responsibility for the causes of the cold war on Western imperialist countries, especially the U.S.A. He said preparations for war are profitable to capitalists, especially arms manufacturers. When the United States attempted to establish world economic and military domination at the end of the Second World War and found opposition by socialist countries, he said, the buildup of weapons, the arms race and the cold war began. "But now the monopoly capitalists in the United States who thought they could sit back and make profits are seeing things more soberly." Mr. Clarke called the cold war the breeder of violent anti-Communists who disagreed with communism and its policy through blind prejudice based on information from people who work to slander the Communist party.

'Dilemma' looms

"Why is it today that we see the haunting spectacle of endless lines of anonymous faces in our mental health institutions?"

This question asked by Mrs. Dorothy Borwell at the Student Christian Movement lunch meeting where she lectured Thursday underlines the dilemma of mental health in Canada.

She went on to say that the basis of the problem lies in the government's lack of response to recommendations by mental health officials and public apathy.

Recommendations made more than 40 years ago recently re-appeared in the book More for the Mind. Mrs. Borwell said the work is an indictment on our present system.

One of the recommendations was to have institutions comprised of small "cottages" for more individual care. Instead we have huge, understaffed mental hospitals in which proper care can't be given, she said. People line up for food, showers, and even walks.

Public apathy shows itself in the attitudes and images which people hold concerning mental illness, she said. Mental illness is thought to be a stigma and a sign of moral weakness. The public's only thought on the subject is revealed in the words "queer, psycho, and crack-up," she said.

Mrs. Borwell, a psychiatric nurse and lecturer at the U of T School of Nursing, is the only person to organize an "underground" SCM, she said. While she was a student nurse at Toronto General Hospital, the Inter-School Christian Fellowship group was the only religious organization allowed on campus.

So the SCM went underground.

Mrs. Borwell commented: "We were considered pink or Communist. Therefore we discussed the Christian significance of Karl Marx."

Pick weekenders

The University of Toronto Weekends Committee today announced the successful applicants for the Carabin and Harvard Weekend.

Those selected for Harvard are: Fred Bienfeld (IV UC), Paul Connolly (III SMC), Robert Evans (IV Vic), Fiona Gardner (III Trin), Steve Goudge (IV Vic), Vladimir Hartschinski (II Meds), Cynthia Kappus (III SMC), Louise Laing (IV Nurs),

This is the week that will be

Theatre:

Grest — Repertory Opening — Arthur Meglin fell flat on his collective face but the Crest's ambition knows no bounds. Juno and the Paycock opens October 18th. Of Mice and Men likewise October 22nd.

C'Keefe — The Girl Who Came to Supper — Florence Henderson saves this jaded musical from complete boredom.

Dell Tavern — The Zoo Story and Summer in the Country — Even 90 minutes of Jack Creley can't harm this stimulating duo.

The Questers Theatre — Return To The Mountain — At least the old Village Playhouse isn't empty!

Coach House Theatre — Major Barbara — The University Alumnae battle G.B.S. ... a standoffish performance.

Royal Alex — Potpourri of Commercialism — Canadian Players Friday Evening, Saturday Mat. Henry IV Part One, Sat. Eve. An Enemy of the People. Next week An Evening at the Royal. Jackie Mason may provide some laughs but with this bill he's not enough.

Movies:

Odeon Carlton — The Caretakers — Robert Stack nesses up another Hollywood shocker.

Odeon Hyland — Heavens Above — Not even the angel of versatility (Peter Sellers) can rescue this grounded fowl.

Odeon Fairlawn — Lawrence of Arabia — Lawrence is the greatest. Ask Gregory Peck. Savoy etc — Mondo Cane — Shocking, abhorrent, scandalizing, revolting, nauseating, disgusting, sadistic. Not really.

Loew's — For Love or Money — Kirk Douglas has both but he's no comic. If you love your money watch TV.

Loew's Uptown — The V. I. P.'s — Burton is bad; Taylor is traumatic. Margeret Ruth'erford is herself. This is good?

Towne — Women of the World — Where's 8½?

International — Mrs. Gibbons' Boys — Diana Dors explodes into British comedy.

Little Cinema — Dreams — Studio 1; The Chasers — Studio 2 — Only two weeks left to see one of the last bulwarks of anti-mogul, hate-the-masses, intellectual houses of celluloid.

Imperial-Nortown — 20,000 Leagues Under the Sea — Sinking fast under the Rampage. Tivoli — Rogers and Hammerstein Festival — The American dream lives again but the music makes it all worthwhile. Friday King and I. Next week Garouzel.

Hollywood — A New Kind of Love — Paris is a lady, London is a man, Maurice Chevalier is 75.

Eglinton — How the West Was Won — All this for one train wreck?

University — Cleopatra — If mediocrity is bliss, Cleopatra approaches nirvana. New Yorker — Il Posto — A world premiere and no review yet.

Downtown etc — The Haunting etc — Til Wednesday.

Music:

Music Hart House Orchestra — Great Hall — The new season begins Sunday at 9:00 under Boyd Neel. Greta Krauss and others perform an all Bach concert.

Mahalia Jackson — Massey Hall Tonight at 8:30. The world's greatest gospel singer. Hootenanny — Maple Leaf Gardens — The world's biggest hootenanny needs YOU. And your banjos and guitars. Tonight at 8:00.

Wet and dry jazz — Art Blakey and the jazz messengers are boss at the First Floor iClub til Saturday. Chico Hamilton and Coltrane — imitator Charles Lloyd swing at the Friar's. Gene Krupa opens Monday at the Savarin.

Saturday, 8:30 p.m. WBEN-FM A concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Sunday, 3:00 p.m. A concert by the New York Philharmonic Orchestra.

Beginning Oct. 27, the 1963-64 concert series by the CBC Symphony Orchestra. Time 2:30 p.m. Sunday. Works to be performed include Walton's new Variations on a Theme of Hindemith, the Symphony no. 5 by Hans Werner Henze, and the Symphony no. 3 by Peter Racine Frick.

Art:

Art Gallery of Toronto — Rodin's sculpture and drawings on exhibit until October 20. Alumni Hall, Victoria College — Exhibition by John Newman, member of the Canadian Society of Graphic Art and staff of O.C.A.

The sound of surprise

By David Jackel

By the time you read this column, the results will be in on an experiment to determine whether or not Torontonians can support good jazz.

Julian Burns, the impresario of the First Floor Club, is playing it on the line for the people who claim that the best American jazz groups never make it to this city.

In an effort to see if those who complain can do anything besides talk, he has booked Art Blakey and the Jazz Messengers into the First Floor for this week.

His operation is essentially a one-man job, but despite his problems Burns isn't looking for sympathy. He just wants to prove something, one way or the other.

The success or failure of this venture has already been decided by the crowds on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday nights. And since these were the nights of a student discount, the reaction of jazz fans on campus played a part in determining Burns' future policy. Next week's column will carry an account of the outcome.

BEST BLAKEY IN YEARS

If you haven't heard the group by this time, make every effort to do so, since every member of the Messengers is a first-rate soloist.

Trumpeter Freddie Hubbard and trombonist Curtis Fuller are relatively young musicians in the process of building individual solo styles. Both are excellent technicians and both display a sense of humor in their music which is all to rare among modern jazzmen. Fuller's work is especially noteworthy, particularly his middle register solos on ballads.

Bassist Reggie Workman provides the group with a strong foundation and uses his solo space to good advantage. Pianist Cedar Walton's work has improved greatly in the past few years, and he shares credit with tenor-man Wayne Shorter for the inventive arrangements employed by the Messengers. Shorter also solos well, in a manner which shows that he has listened to other saxophonists without becoming dominated by them.

As for leader Blakey himself, you can count on the fingers of one hand the drummers who can equal his playing either as a soloist or behind the hornmen.

Blakey is also playing with more attention to good taste and dynamics than he has often displayed in the past, and these are qualities rarely found in drummers who lead their own groups.

This is the best edition of the Messengers which Blakey has put together since Horace Silver departed back in the 1950's. And it is heard in near-ideal surroundings.

FIRST FLOOR BARGAIN

All of which brings us to the subject of the First Floor Club and its admission prices. During the Blakey engagement, the usual distracting conversation among the customers has been refreshingly absent. So much so that the attention which the audience was displaying earlier this week has seldom been seen in Toronto outside the concert hall. Blakey himself was impressed, and he's seen a lot of audiences.

As for the admission being charged this week, if you think it's too much, stop and figure it out. The price paid at the door entitles you to two hours of jazz. At a downtown tavern two hours of jazz requires you to sit for four hours nursing your drinks and trying to hear the music over the noise. And besides, if you sit in a tavern for four hours, chances are that you'll spend a lot more than the admission price to the First Floor, and be so smashed that you can't hear the last set anyway. Julian Burns believes that the atmosphere at his club is more conducive to listening. The audience reaction to Blakey has proven him right.

OTHER JAZZ

Meanwhile, at the Friars' Tavern, Chico Hamilton and his quartet will present their conception of modern music through next week. And they are good enough to make the tavern hazards already mentioned worth risking in this case. If you've been reading this column, you'll know that this group is presenting one version of the "new thing". Briefly, this means unusual harmonies, oddly structured original compositions, and solos which may employ almost every sound which can be extracted from the instrument being played.

Tenor saxist Charles Lloyd is an exciting soloist and drummer Hamilton himself has never played better. His quartet's performance makes up for the recent Friars billing of Wild Bill Davis—as a great jazz act.

Of course, for those who don't like hard-swinging jazz, there's always Joe Williams at the Town. Jazz pianist Junior Mance also has some well-deserved solo space, and Williams himself can swing the uptempo numbers when not singing the saccharine ballads which he seems to favor.

Tonight at Massey Hall the incomparable Mahalia Jackson will sing gospel music, which swings harder than a lot of local jazz. Some tickets may still be available.

SCIENCE

The theory of inheritance

By Paul Corey

A question that interests me as a geneticist is the extent to which science should be allowed to manipulate the genetic endowment of a human population.

Is it morally right, for example, to give a specialized group of people such as eugenicists the power to say what parents should not have children? Could this power be used to gain selfish, political ends? Would a social system that uses such controls better itself biologically or would there be any possible harm in its introduction?

The three major methods with which science can manipulate population are sterilization, abortion and birth control. Although each method has its obvious advantages the final aim of these methods is the same — the prevention of birth. Before the advantages of each of these methods is compared a knowledge is required of how the eugenicist can possibly better the human population by preventing birth.

In each cell of the human body with the exception of the sex cells there are 46 little structures called chromosomes. An important consideration is that all human cells with the exception again of the sex cells have 23 "pairs" of chromosomes. In the sex cells of the gonads a special process of cell division called meiosis takes place. In this process one of each of the 23 pairs separates from the other member of the pair with the result that two cells of 23 chromosomes are produced. These cells which have only half the number of chromosomes that the rest of the human cells have will eventually develop into the sperm cells in the male and into the eggs in the female.

To simplify matters let us consider only one pair of chromosomes. Let us suppose that a certain area of one of the chromosomes enables the reaction  $A + B = AB$  to proceed somewhere in the cell (where A and B are two chemicals which react to form the product AB.) Let us accept the hypothesis that this area of the chromosome, which we'll call C, is instrumental in the production of an enzyme, that is, a protein catalyst which hastens the rate of the above reaction. Let us suppose that the spatially identical area of the other member of the chromosome pair is different so that the reaction  $A + B = AB$  is not allowed to proceed. Let us call this aberrant area of the second chromosome c.

So far we have a simplified cell of two chromosomes. One chromosome has area or gene C whereas the other has gene c. In that special kind of cell division called meiosis two sex cells will be formed each with one of the two genes. Let us call the type of human whose cells have a C gene and a c gene Cc.

Let us suppose that a Cc male marries a Cc female. The sex cells of the Cc male produces in equal numbers gametes bearing the C gene and gametes bearing the c gene (the male sperm cells and the female eggs may be called gametes). Similarly the female produces C gametes and c gametes (eggs) in equal numbers.

In our simplified version the egg could be a C type or a c type. These two types of gametes were produced in equal numbers in the ovaries (egg — producing organs). Consequently it is equally likely that a C gamete or a c gamete will enter into the fallopian tube for purposes of fertilization. In a similar manner it is seen that among the 200,000,000 or more sperm cells that the female receives from the male one finds an equal number of C and c types. Four different kinds of fertilization are equally possible:

1. A male C gamete and a female C gamete which will give a CC child.
2. A male C gamete and a female c gamete which will give a Cc child.
3. A male c gamete and a female C gamete which will give a cC child.
4. A male c gamete and a female c gamete which will give a cc child.

The cc child is called homozygous for the gene c since it has the gene c on both chromosomes. This child has no genetic equipment to make the reaction  $A + B = AB$  proceed. This is only true if, of course, there is no gene on any of the other 44 chromosomes in an actual human cell which can do the job. This assumption is made in a discussion of single factor inheritance.

This brings us to the CC and Cc children. If the single C gene in the Cc child is completely sufficient to enable the reaction  $A + B = AB$  to proceed then there may be no advantage in the presence of the second C gene in the CC child. If this is the case and if the second C gene causes no abnormality such as a harmful overproduction of AB in the human cell then it will be impossible to detect any difference between the CC and Cc individuals with respect to the quantity of AB produced. It is seen therefore

Clerical chaos

By Tim Bentley

Heavens Above!

A small English town, Orbiston Parva, is the scene of typical Sellers confusion when the Rev. John Smallwood is accidentally selected as rector of Holy Trinity church.

Arriving at the rectory in a garbage truck driven by an illiterate West Indian negro (Brock Peters), Sellers introduces the comedy with the improbability that is a keynote of Heavens Above!

Soon Peters is made rector's warden in the ever-so-upper-class parish. With the assistance of the local despot Lady Despard (Isabel Jeans), free food is distributed to the poor (and the not so poor). This sabotages the local merchants and soon there is a riot.

After a few cynical glances at church and state politics (both of which are now in the uncomfortable glare of an economic emergency), the problem of the upstart parson is resolved — or almost. And it is from this "almost" that the film gets its title.

One hilarious scene occurs when Lady Despard's butler ejects the Bible - quoting young minister from the family mansion. As a small dog pees on Seller's boot, the butler quotes, "And he went and hanged himself, Matthew 27:5, Go and do thou likewise, Luke 10:37!"

Sellers is in complete control as the quiet and simple John Smallwood, a man of conviction who refuses to knuckle under to money, power or common sense.

His humour is more visual than verbal. To the tune of "Exodus", we see him leading the disreputable Smith family in to the parsonage in the name of charity, and then watch them steal him blind — even to the lead roof of the church!

He does have some excellent lines though. Arriving at Orbiston Parva, the victim of an unimaginative case of mistaken parsons, Sellers remarks that he had never before thought of himself as "a clerical error".

Heavens Above! at the Odeon Hyland can be recommended to everyone who enjoys English humour beautifully underplayed and charmingly contrived.

Suspense with a twist

By Paul Ennis

The Running Man is a fast moving pulsating suspense drama with a twist. Anger, jealousy, and colour are set against a Spanish backdrop. Carol Reed has directed a film crammed with anxiety and buoyed by superlative acting.

Rex Black (Laurence Harvey) is a frustrated adventurer. Tired of English normality he fakes his death in a glider crash so that his wife Stella (Lee Remick) can collect his insurance.

All goes smoothly for over three months — too smoothly. Then Stephen, the insurance agent (Alan Bates) confronts Stella over a Spanish Bloody Mary and the race begins.

Ironically Rex, now Jim Jerome, blond and Australian, is unaware that Stephen is now a painter. He shares everything with Stephen including his wife. He fails to realize that Stephen is more interested in Stella than Rex's supposed death.

After numerous incidents where Stephen appears to be on to his game, Rex almost manages a getaway. In true classical tradition the film ends as it begins — with a plane crash.

The plot is so studded with innuendo and irony that the old-fashioned insurance line is given a novel approach.

The three principals are excellently portrayed. Harvey tackles his Macbeth-like character in calculating fashion. Lee Remick portrays the unwilling wife with cosmopolitan innocence — her eyes are fascination. Alan Bates gives Stephen the right amount of boyish naivete. His countenance, which is enigmatic enough to make Rex wary, offers no clue to his purposes.

Carol Reed has crafted the picture with a tight and skilful hand. It never lapses into those scenes of dullness or unnecessary wild action which often impair similar movies.

Today

The University College Players' Guild is presenting "The Man With the Flower In His Mouth", in the Women's Union Theatre, at 1:15 p.m. today.

This perverse and delightful comedy by Pirandello roams delicately on the hair breadth of the mind. "The Man" around whom the play centers skates on the verge of a madness which is really sanity.

Unattached from the normal formation of lives, "the man" meets a commuter, and through a puzzling disarray of thoughts ("life is like apricots . . . how do you eat them?"), he becomes a symbol for the disordered world of life which is thrown all at once into contact with Death. But like all Pirandello's symbols, the mirror is multi-fold, and reflects what you choose to see in it. In other words, Pirandello is in bloom. Put a flower in your mouth, and go and see it.

that the gene c has no detectable effect in the presence of gene C. The gene C is said to be dominant to c and the gene c recessive to C.

Let us suppose that C is the gene which controls the physiological and biochemical pathways leading to "brown eyes" and c for "blue eyes." Since a blue-eyed parent must be cc then it can only have c gametes. Consequently only blue-eyed children can result from the mating of two blue-eyed parents. It is more difficult to assess the genetic framework of a brown-eyed person since both CC and Cc types have brown eyes. If two homozygous brown-eyed parents (CC) were to mate then only brown-eyed CC children would result. However if two heterozygous Cc parents were to mate one would find on the average three brown-eyed children (CC, Cc, cC) for every blue-eyed child (cc). However the difficulty is that the homozygous brown-eyed parents cannot be distinguished from the heterozygous brown-eyed parents. As a result the geneticist cannot tell two brown-eyed parents whether or not it is possible for them to have a blue-eyed child.

Fortunately few parents seem concerned about the possibility of having a blue eyed child. But suppose that the gene C determined the production of AB which was not merely a pigment which determined eye coloration but an important enzyme in whose absence a serious disease would develop. Then parents would be concerned and would want to know if they were heterozygous "carriers" of the abnormal recessive gene. If it could be stated that both parents were heterozygous Cc carriers then they would know that the risk of having an abnormal child is about one in four. Looking at it from a more cheerful angle the scientist may be able to set the minds of two fretful parents at ease with the information that both are homozygous for the normal gene C. Consequently there would be no possibility for these parents to have an abnormal child — one deficient in AB.

The question of the desirability of using birth control, sterilization, or abortion to prevent the birth of an AB abnormal child is outside the domain of science.

The abnormal child, however much pain he suffers, cannot be eliminated in our society because of the prevalent belief in the holiness of human life. Suppose it were thought that all children of 'carrier' parents would be seriously abnormal. It is conceivable that society would be tempted to use sterilization methods more readily than if only one-quarter of the children stood the chance of being abnormal as is the case. Consequently we see that although science does not say anything about the desirability of an action, the evidence it presents may strongly influence a society to act in a certain manner.

NICKEL IN WORLD MARKETS...JOBS FOR CANADIANS

How Canadian Nickel helps bring pasteurized milk to Iranian children

Until a few years ago, fresh, pasteurized milk was virtually unknown to a great many Iranian youngsters. But, today, thanks to those interested in the welfare of the world's less fortunate children, a modern milk-processing plant outside Teheran is providing enough pasteurized milk daily for thousands of little Iranians. And Canadian nickel is helping, just as it does in similar projects in other parts of the globe. Nickel stainless steel is used for the tanks, pasteurizers, homogenizers and other equipment in the plant. Why nickel stainless steel? Because nickel stainless steel is highly resistant to corrosion and very easy to keep spotlessly clean. The growth of nickel markets at home and abroad helps strengthen Canada's economy and helps provide jobs for Canadians.

African student fights back

In this article Silas O. Nwachukwu, an African student, takes issue with the Letter to a Foreign Student written by Ravi Gupta and published in the Review two weeks ago.

The Overseas Student body may feel grateful to Mr. Gupta for the soul searching indictment he has levelled against it as a group; and the new student may well draw on his vast wealth of experience. In this article, I will be treating 'Overseas Student' as synonymous with the Afro-Asian Student. The Student from Europe sharing in the European culture of which Canada is essentially a part, may not find Mr. Gupta's article applicable to him. I must point out that I do NOT share the views expressed by Gupta and contend that such an impression has been conveyed by a small segment of the overseas student population. I forthwith assert that these impressions should not have led to such sweeping generalisations as made by Mr. Gupta.

I have illustrated my replies by generously drawing on my experiences with the African Students Association, whose activities I feel are as varied as the association is dynamic. Mr. Gupta maintains that what the overseas student has to show for his stay abroad is a degree and a refrigerator, and in the same vein asserts that the student is lacking in Canadian culture.

Canadian culture?

What is Canadian culture one may ask? What is the role of Technology in Canadian culture? If Technology is not part or, in fact, a major part of Canadian culture, then what is? Yet the student who gains the mastery of some part of Canadian technology is considered lacking in Canadian culture. He credits the student with acquiring the concept of refrigeration without crediting him with the awareness of what refrigeration could do to revolutionise living conditions in some of these tropical lands.

Mr. Gupta states that the overseas student feels morally bound to defend the actions of his government and all the customs of his society. This again is a very sweeping generalisation. It would be very sad indeed to find an Indian student who could not defend and justify his government's intervention in Goa of 1962 for instance.

Here in Canada, there were angry outbursts about India's violation of her principle of non-violence, and all that talk of playing traitor to the spirit of Gandhi. With Gupta's type of logic, the use of force would be wrong. India used force to liberate Goa, therefore India is wrong. It is gratifying that most Indians I talked to at the time found justification in Portugal's refusal even to negotiate.

Again and again, a great number of Canadians denounce Dr. Nkrumah of Ghana for his dynamic leadership; his rather high handed treatment of some political opponents; for his vision of Pan Africanism, and his economic policies calling for greater emphasis on state and indigenous control.

Do criticize

In the same breath, they laud the leadership in Nigeria for its level headedness and realism. I must point out that some Ghanaians have been rather critical of the government's Preventive Detention Act — in fact one of them denounced Dr. Nkrumah in a Hart House debate, and yet another Ghanaian did the same in a discussion in FROS.

I must also emphasize that several Nigerian students have spared no pains to point out that this so-called level-headedness of Nigerian leadership is illusory, stemming largely from a lack of initiative and political immaturity of its leadership.

As for avenues of contact with Canadians the most obvious are FROS, WUS and UN clubs, and my impression is that Mr. Gupta feels that these are the only ones. I must inform him that the African students foundation plays a very significant role. Evidently he denies the overseas student the initiative and ability to make his own contacts outside of these organisations. In fact, one finds such personal contacts even more rewarding than some of these mass invitations which have, unfortunately been tailored to a particular pattern.

Rotarians help

Now let us examine these contacts and the scope they afford for another "experiment in living". Probably the overseas student is invited to a Caledon Hills weekend; if the weather is good, he probably enjoys a hay ride and returns singing "O Canada". Or he may be entertained by the Rotarians, a wonderful group dedicated to humanitarian deeds.

But what insight does he get? This varies tremendously—he may get invited back, and a friendly relationship on a personal basis is established — that way he gets to know a great deal of the so-called Canadian way of life. For the most part, however, this sort of relationship does not develop and you can go on several Rotarian invitations taking only little peeps at the Canadian way of life. The usual routine, of course, is to have dinner with a family. In order to establish some familiarity, the overseas student is invariably asked such questions as "Where do you come from?" and "What do you do?"

Such brief contacts cannot lead to any but very general discussions. It would be naive to confront a host whose background he barely knows with details of Kant's philosophy or modern theories of relativity. Most people would be content to leave this manner of approach to the pedantic.

Do discriminate

Mr. Gupta contends that there is no racial discrimination in job opportunities in Canada. I would like to draw his attention to Alan Edmund's article in the Toronto Daily Star of August 12, 1963. It dealt with the case of Mr. Braithwaite, an ex-graduate of this university in Law and in economics who in the past election, became the first negro member of the Ontario legislature.

The headline read: "Toronto has no cause to be proud of its Negro-White record. The personnel manager was stone faced but honest, 'I can't give you the clerk's job,' he told the applicant. 'If I did, the rest of the staff would quit.'" Similar instances of discrimination have been observed in other areas. For example, the SAC carried out an investigation into the allegations of discrimination practices in the renting of rooms to students. Of the limited number of landlords quizzed, over 500 refused to sign a declaration, pledging to sublet rooms to students independent of race, colour or creed. All Toronto newspapers carried long articles on these hideous revelations. Evidently, Mr. Gupta in his contention has been pathetically blind to the facts.

Another point that merits specific comment is the statement by Mr. Gupta that the overseas student feels depressed on returning home at the thought of having to work for a long time to buy a car. Since Gupta has posed as the spokesman of all overseas students, this statement would provoke much laughter from African students who, in fact, have hitherto been frequently accused of rushing home because of the promise of "BIG" cars and privileged positions; for the job opportunities at the highest levels in Africa are practically infinite. There are, however, at this university about 100 African Students drawn from various parts of the vast continent — from the Mediterranean to the Cape; from the Guinea Coast to the Indian Ocean, encompassing a vast assemblage of varied cultural background.

Like own group

Unlike Mr. Gupta we believe there is a strong case for us to have an organisation of our own — the African Students Association — which offers a forum for the discussion of our problems, and an opportunity to get to know each other and each other's country.

But that is not all. We exist to project our cultural diversity on the Canadian scene, through films, talks and socials. The objective is simple — to elicit criticism from Canadians by way of comparative analysis.

During the last academic year, we had six film-shows depicting life in various parts of Africa, the old alongside the new. We held more than eight discussions on Africa, some from panelists composed exclusively of Canadians — we like to know what others think of our problems. We have organised talks by distinguished Canadians who

... but Gupta stands firm

I am very grateful to Mr. Nwachukwu for exposing so clearly my "pathetic blindness to facts".

Since I personally know Mr. Nwachukwu to be a man of too much integrity to deliberately misinterpret my article, I ought to be all the more indebted to him for providing almost a perfect illustration of the overseas student of whom I spoke in my article.

The holy foreign student reacts to any "self-criticism" by closing the doors of his temple and declaring the critic as other-incited. Having secured the bolt from inside, he bursts into a loud song of "self-praise". And he glorifies himself by showering curses on the other temples and the other deities — this proves for him the greatness of his own shrine.

For him there is no interaction except between systems, his foundations. He does not know what to do outside these patterns. He does not dare to step out of his temple. He does not dare to question. In other shrines, he does not dare to go past the front door. How sad indeed that he boasts about the shallowness of his pilgrimage!

Hootenany - CUCND style

By Jim Thwaites

"The human race is faced with a funny problem — Extinction!" Thus the C.U.C.N.D. began its hootenanny last Friday night — in the true spirit of Pete Seeger," according to the M.C. Peter Kastner.

And after apologizing for the fact that Pete Seeger and Joan Baez couldn't quite make it that evening — Ted Sole was introduced and came in with his "Skin a goo'd and greasy" (song i.e.). Ted's volume was praised by some killjoy from the rear who shouted "That last number could have been done without a mike."

A good guitar and banjo duet, Randy and Shelly, came on next. And so the evening progressed — Peter Acker giving us an international flavour with his Spanish and French Canadian songs, and Barry O'Neill, vice-president of C.U.C.N.D., making quite a hit with his "Ban the Bomb" song especially when he "got to the place where the asterisks start."

But perhaps the Spokesmen made the greatest impression. Coming in red-hot from the Mariposa Festival, this trio had a truly 'professional' air. And in their "Passing Through" they struck this appropriate note:

"Yankee, Russian, Black or Tan,

A man is just a man."

The evening changed its tempo with "Birney the Beachcomber's" Limbo show. As all folk-types tend to do, Birney at first insisted on the meaning behind what he was about to do.

And as he peeled off his leopardskin top, and stood blond, bearded and bare-foot, in his multicolour beachcombers, the Halifax III started in with a heavy beat. The crowd clapped rhythmically as Birney lit the cloth wrapping on the spar and began to limbo.

The bar was gradually lowered until it finally stood on two pop bottles, and Birney made it and came up with a lighted cigaret in his mouth. The M.C., Peter Kastner, came in continually with jokes and songs about C.U.C.N.D. and sounded the keynote in those simple words:

"All I want to do is go through school, and live to do what I want to do." — just let us alone to live normal lives without having to worry about where our next bomb is coming from.

Often though, his tone was one of sarcastic cynicism driving distasteful reality home, as in his 'Political Song' where Hitler, Khrushchev and Pearson, were made to sound like broken records, jabbering over and over again their doctrinaire stands.

At the end of the evening, Ian Gentles, proposed a vigil near the City Hall on Saturday afternoon for "A WORLD FREE FROM ARMS" to be sponsored by C.U.C.N.D., S.C.M., and five off-campus organizations. Ian spoke with a calm sincerity, giving the highly successful hootenanny a solemn and meaningful final note.

ART

Wave of Montreal art opens here

By Paul Russell

The Bellefleur Exhibition which opened last week at the Dorothy Cameron Gallery is the first of a wave of shows representing contemporary Montreal Artists. A one-man show of the works of Rita Letendre opens soon at the Dorothy Cameron Gallery: The Fall Sale at the Toronto Art Gallery is featuring Montreal art this year: Hart House opens a group show — Ten Montreal Artists — in two weeks.

Bellefleur's art, although twice removed from the Automatiste group of 1940 (founded by Borduas and Riopelle), nevertheless has an affiliation with their style which comes forth in a few of the works in this show. But where Borduas sought an "automatic" non-reasoned sense relationship between Artist and Media, Bellefleur is striking in the control and restraint which is the dominant feature of his style. This control enables him to handle a wide range of colour combination and still keep his work balanced and orderly. Despite the recent influences of the Paris and New York Schools on his work, Bellefleur is not completely an abstract painter. His strong linear qualities and areas of colour are essentially literal and representational — eg. the organic worm forms in "Dialogues sous-Marins". There are no oils in this show. All works are in gouache, ink, and lithography.

Dealers have many reasons for showing novices

By Anne Lindner

In the year 1900 a nineteen year old artist was introduced to Berthe Weill, a picture dealer in Paris. She bought three canvases of bull scenes for a price that fifty years later had multiplied itself by one hundred. Did she know that the young man who signed his painting Pablo Ruiz Picasso was to become the world's greatest living artist?

Today, in 1963, in Toronto, many similar scenes take place. Small dealers and galleries are buying, staking, exhibiting young and revolutionary artists. Why?

Why would a man start a gallery with only 63 cents in his pocket and in three years still be operating a gallery with an overhead of still only 63 cents? And why would a young man stick his neck out, show controversial art and end up being guillotined by public opinion? Why would a dealer be willing to suffer inevitable scorn from his artists when they too attack him? And finally, why would a novice dealer present unknown art that will certainly be panned by conservative newspaper reviewers?

Philanthropic dealers are concerned because Toronto has not enough galleries. They feel that we in Toronto must see art as it is produced and not ten years later; that young artists be given equal opportunity with established ones.

Less noble are the dealers who like art and want to be surrounded by it, not necessarily to sell it. There are dealers who enjoy sitting back and watching people and reactions parade through their gallery. In the same selfish vein are those who display art which will bring only the "Riche" to their gallery. Related to this is the ego reason. The man who sells art because he was not a success at it himself might get a vicarious pleasure out of hanging paintings perhaps subconsciously dreaming that they are his own creation.

And then there are the dealers who want to make money. However ignoble the reason may seem, it probably lurked in Berthe Weill's mind when she bought Picasso's paintings, just as it lurks in the mind of 90 per cent of the art dealers of Toronto.

It seems a shame, does it not; to force on the public only the art which they (the dealers) think will be worth the big money in another twenty years?

A lonely figure in society

By Barbara Amiel

A Precocious Autobiography by Yevgeny Yevtushenko; Dutton & Co.; 124 pages and 8 photos; $4.35

A Precocious Autobiography fairly radiates with the healthy uncorruptible glow of yellow wheat and warm sunshine. This is the writing, as the dust jacket ominously proclaims, of "a spirited young intellectual who insists upon thinking for himself, no matter what the cost."

The book was written to correct the false impression that the book was written to correct the false impression that

According to Yevtushenko the Western press had received or created of him. It is in his own words to show "what I am".

Yevtushenko was born in Siberia in 1933 of a peasant mother and an intellectual father. He was educated in Moscow where, by his admission, his schoolwork was remarkably bad. It is not an extraordinary childhood, but one punctuated by events and conditions familiar to Russians and Europeans of the period.

Evacuation and the quick tragedy of death; the blunt edge of suffering, worry and rationing. He's a sensitive child alright — able at only eight years of age to detect the pain behind the accordion playing soldiers off on flatcars to the front. And at eleven he is alone in Moscow while his mother entertains troops at the front and his father entertains a new wife and children. War ends. His mother returns, her head shaved, after catching typhus.

Yevgeny writes poetry instead of homework and finally is expelled from school on a false charge of theft. He runs away to join his father, becomes a laborer and returns with money for a typewriter. The poet is home.

Though the first thirty years of Yevgeny's life seem to have been filled with enough evidence of the beastliness of man and universe to have turned any normal boy into a raving misanthropist or ruthless capitalist at the very least, like other victims before him Yevgeny is filled with nothing but hope and belief in the future. This is in fact the real raison d'être for his book. It is to explain, to polish the faith and hope that is the very essence of communism; to fashion an outlet for the moods and ideas of Russia today.

In Yevtushenko's work — according to Yevtushenko — can be found the fusion of Russian moods and ideas "what is held in common by many... the so-far unexpressed ideas of many". Modestly, Yevtushenko is the conscience of Russia.

From this point of view the book should be of interest simply for the insight offered into the outlook of a Russian born long after the Revolution into an established Soviet society, that is suddenly shaken by the events of 1953. Optimism, hope, The Future — this is the tenor of the book-rather like newscopy after the test-ban treaty.

Unfortunately such a clarlated work. You can only approximate the quality of the prose and bear in mind the lengthy apologies of the translators. Nevertheless Yevtushenko's strength in this book lies in sudden unexpected moments when for an instant something gleams before us — a moment is very nearly captured.

In spite of the translation the intensity and poetry of such moments survive: the Forum movie house on V day in Moscow, packed with vodka drinking soldiers and on the stage in sequined dress, golden shoes and a black wig to conceal a shaved head — Yevgeny's mother; even the rather whipped moral fable Yevtushenko narrates is suddenly alive:

"I looked at the woman.

She continued to wash her tormentors feet, her tears rolling down her cheeks and falling into the dirty, soapy water, next to the blissfully wriggling toes."

BOOKS

ion call evokes a rather cynical response. It's all too glib. Yevtushenko's thought is excessively naive and faced with such statements as in speaking of abusive letters after Babiy Yar, "In our country it is the bastards who are in danger. It was not I but Markov who had something to fear" it seems almost kind to call Yevtushenko merely naive. Yevtushenko may claim he speaks for the Russian people, that "times have changed", that it is not necessarily wrong to seek an understanding of the European artistic traditions, but he is silent on the fate of Naritza, Essenin or Valeri Tais.

From a literary standpoint judgement of A Precocious Autobiography is particularly hard because of the problems presented in reading a tran-

But there is something strangely lacking in A Precocious Autobiography. Yevtushenko has responded to the human condition by denying it. He has explained the indignities of the past as guarantees for the justice of the present and future. All the doubts and fears which almost appear in his book are smothered and smoothed by the cult of faith, by belief in the integrity of the Revolution.

But where are the people? where is the hurt? where is the fallibility? It is as if Yevtushenko has overcome the dread and anguish that infects the human heart by baking it in a rosy oven. Now the mind and heart reacts on an empirical level only — inside all is cauterized

Literary love-child

By N. David Greyson

High on The Hog by Foster Meharry Russell; Northumberland Book Co.; Cobourg, Ont.; $4.00

Within 30 seconds of examining "High On The Hog", I assessed it to be the literary love-child of the editor of a small town newspaper.

In that Foster Meharry Russell is the editor of the Cobourg Sentinel-Star, my diagnosis was confirmed. My prognosis is that the child will do poorly — congenital weakness.

"High on The Hog" is a home-spun study of the plain, old-fashioned, just good simple folk of "Our Town", a never-never land of stereotyped citizens, and hackneyed happenings.

Page after page, we plunge deeper and deeper inside town limits, till at last, we have reached our own limits. "Our Town" is no Mariposa, nor is the author a Stephen Leacock or a Harry Golden. Somehow, the book lacks polish, or a spark of genius. It just goes on and on, tediously describing character after character, chapter after chapter. But their fads and foibles, perfidies and perplexities are really of little interest.

At best, the book is parochial. Quite possibly, the characters represented might easily be recognized by the citizens of Cobourg, (or likened closely enough to residents of any old small town) but I feel that the book has little appeal, if any, outside a rural setting.

I could not decide if the book was humour, or a social commentary. I did smile a couple of times, but then, my sense of humour is exceedingly acute.

High On The Hog", regretably, is low on my list.

Foster Meharry Russell, a prolific writer (four books published in Cobourg in as many years) may be one of the unsung heroes of Canadian literature. It is enough recognition.

THEATRE

Paced for drinkers

By Al Rosen

This strange combination of a nineteenth century Russian farce, Anton Chekhov's Summer in the Country, and a very modern American drama, Edward Albee's Zoo Story, are now playing at the Dell — a tavern turned theatre.

"Summer in the Country", like most Chekhov farces, is little more than an old joke — in this case the man whose family in the country overburdens him with errands every time he goes into the city.

In the production at the Dell, it is a bad joke. The play is terribly overacted, with Jack Creley's opening speech consisting of a long series of grunts and wierd moanings.

Peter Boretski, the director, feeling that Chekhov's slapstick was not enough, looked for his laughs by having the poor, depressed husband getting tangled in a woman's skirt which he was carrying, tripping over the furniture or blowing his nose in a tablecloth.

The audience loved it, but this reviewer was bored by the whole thing. The second part of the program — the part the audience had come to see — unfortunately fared little better than the first.

"The Zoo Story", perhaps the best known of Albee's works, is also one of the difficult pieces of the modern theatre. It is a no-plot play, a revelation of the character's personalities rather than a story.

The incident is a meeting of Peter, the middle-class, junior executive, with Jerry, who is madly trying to rationalize his existence.

The play centres around Jerry, who at one point has a fifteen minute monologue.

A production of this play, requires top acting, and good pacing, in order to involve the audience in the lives of these characters, and sustain their interest for forty minutes.

The pacing at the outset is slow — dramatic pauses being extended long enough to give the Dell's waiter a chance to serve a few more drinks, and at times, both Jack Creley (as Jerry) and Roland Hewgill (as Peter) seemed entirely disinterested in the play.

This pace continued for most of the performance, except for the rare moments when Creley would come to life as the play reached a climax.

The problem is that these high points were not properly built to, and rather than being meaningful to the audience, they merely startled them, and brought their attention back to the performance. This was especially apparent at the end, for which the audience was entirely unprepared.

Jack Creley, who has done the play before, seemed uncomfortable in his part, — unable to come to grips with the confused personality of Jerry. Roland Hewgill was adequate although his part has little opportunity to be (more developed fully).

An efficient but unconvincing performance of a very difficult play.

Witty impact lost

By David Sector

"Poverty is the worst of crimes!"

This is the theme of George Bernard Shaw's Major Barbara which opens the season for the University Alumnae Drama Club at the Coach House.

Lady Britomart Undershaft, a very proper Victorian matron, is forced to summon her long-estranged husband Andrew because their three children are ready for marriage and require additional funds. Andrew Undershaft is an unscrupulous war-profiteer who has made his fortune selling munitions to the highest bidders. He worships the trinity of money, power and gunpowder.

Conflict is inevitable between Andrew and his daughter Barbara, who is a Major in the Salvation Army. Barbara is determined to draft her father into the Army, but he foils her evangelical plans by purchasing the Army.

Major Barbara was written in 1905 at the peak of Shaw's most prolific period. It is often considered his tour de force in cynicism and style. Shaw pokes nimbly at several of his favorite targets: religious hypocrisy, political hypocrisy, and moral hypocrisy.

Unfortunately much of Shaw's barbed wit loses its impact in the Coach House production, because the actors lack the necessary finesse and timing. The University Alumnae are a competent amateur troupe, but they did not capture the comic presence which Shaw intended in Major Barbara.

One delightful exception is Allen Farrell as Charles Lomax, the aristocratic buffoon engaged to Sarah Undershaft. He plays the role with such utter imbecility that we are sure he is precisely what Shaw had in mind.

The background music is provided by U of T's Faculty of Music. They sound remarkably authentic as a Salvation Army Band.

Shaw fans can catch Major Barbara at the Coach House until October 26, unless they are guilty of the most heinous crime... poverty.

And another look at movies

By Volkmar Richter

Showing at the Downtown and 11 other theatres is an interesting but undistinguished little item called Wall of Noise.

Ty Hardin (of TV cowboy fame) stars as an ambitious young horse-trainer attempting to get out from under the influence of his bosses and be on his own.

Along the way he meets with some interesting complications such as an adulterous affair with his boss's wife.

Hardin is adequate (but nothing more) in his role.

Also seen are Ralph Meeker who is very effective as the tough construction boss who is trying to break into big-time horse racing in his spare time, and Suzanne Pleshette who is suitably sexy and tempting in the role of his wife. Much less effective is Dorothy Provine as our hero's girl-friend.

The picture moves along briskly and shows some of the best racing scenes this reviewer has ever seen in a motion picture.

Graduates in higher education!

The pilots who wear TCA wings are capable, confident men, many of whom have thousands of hours of flying experience. But, they still have to write periodic examinations. And take refresher courses covering the complex flight procedures of modern aviation. Even have their flying skills checked four times a year in flight simulators which cost as much as a million dollars, yet never get an inch off the ground. TCA pilots, however, don't mind these examinations. They know the minute they stop having them, they're grounded. □ When you get on the move in the business world—or if you're travelling for pure, 'plane pleasure, go TCA. It's who's "up front" that counts—and TCA has the finest!

have visited various African countries.

We participated actively in campus activities. It will be recalled that the African Students Association organised an Africa Night in Trinity Buttery which drew a mammoth crowd of over 500 people — an impressive record indeed. This is not the work of the lethargic recluse or apathetic individuals as Mr. Gupta would make the public believe.

But our activities are not confined to the campus. Schools, Churches, junior chambers of commerce inundate us with requests for speakers on one aspect or other life in Africa and the role the Canadian can play. At the moment we are organising a series of talks on Africa and we always endeavour to draw in as large a number of Canadians as possible. I personally invite Gupta to these talks with the full guarantee of intellectual discussion and lots of room for self criticism.

I have gone to this length to indicate that the overseas student body is not entirely "chicken" as Mr. Gupta makes them out to be, but contains dynamic elements. In concluding — I dismiss the indictment of Mr. Gupta as a sweeping generalisation bordering on arrogance and apparently caused by his unawareness of the activities of most overseas students — a situation which readily leads the mind to foster mistaken impressions.

In fact, one cannot escape the conclusion that Mr. Gupta is playing to the gallery of a section of the Canadian public and has grossly misrepresented the overseas student.

Yevtushenko (cont.)

In any case, as with his poetry Yevtushenko offers the most when he forgets about solemnly explaining, justifying and admonishing and concentrates on the same "nature.... women.... Weltschmerz" that he renounces in favour of civic poetry. "I am often represented as a colourful figure, startling against the gray background of Soviet society. This is not what I am at all."

Perhaps the author of A Precocious Autobiography does blend in with his background. But the author of such poems as "Colours" and even "Zima Junction" is a lonely figure in any society. He is lonely by virtue of conscience and sensibility not geography or political belief. And his best prose and poetry is of sensibilities not ideas. Sometimes it is very close to us:

I am so frightened, I am so frightened, of the unexpected sunrise finishing, of revelations
and tears and the excitement finishing.
I don't fight it, my love is this fear,
I nourish it who can nourish nothing, love's slipshod watchman.
Fear hems me in.

MUSIC

By PAUL ROBINSON

Dare we hope that the symphony of the thousand was the end of an epoch? Listening to Mahler's sprawling colossus the other evening, I was appalled as I was at the opening of Lincoln Centre where the same music was played, at the utter lack of taste or talent to be found in this score. Everybody shouts, bleats of fiddles as if possessed, but sadly, nobody makes music.

And only the evening before, I encountered a similar situation: the opening concert of the season by the TSO. It was not enough that Brahms was played without knowledge, respect or pleasure, but also, we were witness to the spectacle of a one-year-old piano concerto which harked back to the knuckledusting vulgarities of Anton Rubinstein, Liszt and sundry unmentionables of that ilk, being received as the long-awaited appendix to The Word.

But I will say this, after a couple of hours warmup on the ball field, I am sure Lorin Hollander could play the Barber work even louder than John Browning.

Britten's Sinfonia da Requiem may contain but incidental sparks of the young genius, but this is the first time I have heard it given a cavalier treatment more suitable to Soirees Musicales.

In spite of Sir Ernest MacMillan's express wish (in the latest TSO News) that critics get technical, name names, as it were, when the quality of performance demands it, I must plead illness: ennui.

For some time now we have dutifully attempted to balance Mr. Susskind's orchestra for him, draw attention to its intonation, and most basically, to point out that a purveyor of musical goods (and bads) to a hungry public at large has a social responsibility. We think Mr. Susskind should not take this responsibility lightly.

may they express their disapproval? I am thinking, of course, of the TSO audience. I suppose if they were at all spontaneous, they would leap to their feet, jostle one another to the floor in their efforts to get to the front of the hall, and haul the imposter from the podium. Since the likelihood of such an occurrence, is, at best remote, what else might we hope for?

Stay home. Fine, but Mr. Homburger has cunningly arranged that those persons who desire the pleasure of having Oistrakh, Serkin, etc. perform for them, must take Mr. Susskind into the bargain. (Every orchestra does not feel compelled to take refuge in the big-name soloist system; witness the Cleveland Orchestra. Five pairs of concerts are either all-orchestral or feature soloists from the orchestra. Eight other pairs are conducted by the associate conductors, neither of whom enjoy international reputations. All concerts are virtually sold out before the season begins.) The matter is thus in the almighty hands of the board of directors. On their learned counsel rests the destiny of a disordered, parasitic and hence, dispensable institution. Perhaps now they will be envious and greedy enough to learn a lesson from the lesson of Montreal, where a 25-year-old dynamo recently performed a minor miracle on the local symphony orchestra.

The hiring of Boris Brott as assistant conductor for the TSO may indicate a move in this direction, but let it not be a half measure: Seje Ozawa is an even better conductor than Zubin Mehta, as the Toronto public will soon discover for itself.

Sean O'Casey's strong, slim fingers groped for an ashtray. His wife leaned forward to guide his hand. The 83-year-old Irish playwright whose Juno and the Paycock opens tonight at the Crest Theatre is nearly blind now. He sat shrouded in sweaters in his hot house at Torquay, England, and talked to a brash reporter one-quarter his age. "How old are you?" he asked. I told him. "You're just starting your life and I'm ending mine," he said softly. He lit his pipe and stared out the window on a grey ocean. His Juno and the Paycock has as heroine a proud, courageous woman striving to be a binding force in her family. Similar women appear in many O'Casey plays. "There are thousands of Junos in the Irish slums," he told me. "The Irish people are kind, generous and self-sacrificing — the working classes I mean. "Juno is not an uncommon thing among the slums, and my own mother was a typical example of what a Juno could be, and was. "I knew hundreds of them, and I always had a profound respect and regard for them, toiling through life under tremendous difficulties and keeping a bright heart among it all." "It was an impudent and uncalled-for thing to ban a play written by me, one of my best plays, and a play that was hopeful and joyous and gay, with nothing in it that anybody could possibly object to." Sean twisted his glasses between his fingers. The perfectly round, old-fashioned lenses swung to and fro as he recalled his chagrin at the Irish people's silence.

NO LONGER VIOLENT

The restriction of performances was an angry act. There is no violence in Sean now. But his pride remains and so does the ban.

His feelings about the church in Ireland caused him to move permanently to England 37 years ago. "The Roman Catholic church has too much damned control over the whole world," he said.

"Wherever you get this dogmatic and institutionalized religion, you get divisions and intolerance. It's only when people give up the idea of religion all together that you begin to get a bit of sense, fair dealing and decent living."

I asked him about his realism and the methods he uses to achieve versimilitude.

"I was interested in everything around me," he said. "My sight was poor but I still had a keen sense of observation and I watched carefully for the little foibles, gestures and eccentricities of that individual or the other individual, and I never forget them once I saw them."

Sean's father died young. The eight survivors of the family's 13 children were raised by the mother.

Tuberculosis hit Sean early and kept him from school. That was lucky, in part.

"I was saved the terrible oppression that existed in the schools of those days and still exists in the Irish schools today," he said.

Sean's wife Eileen, formerly an actress and about 20 years younger than Sean, bustled about the room as we talked. Sean sat smoking calmly as his thoughts went way back to beginnings.

What he most loved talking about was his feud with the Catholic church. Since 1938 he has not allowed any of his plays to be performed professionally in Ireland.

In that year the Roman Catholic archbishop of Dublin objected to The Drums of Father Ned, an O'Casey play he regarded as anti-clerical in its attacks on bigotry, puritanism and phony piety.

RELIGIOUS PEOPLE PROTESTED

"That started all the pious people protesting," Sean said. "All the religious societies got up on their hind legs and demanded the play be rejected. The committee took fright and worked in such a way that I decided to withdraw the play."

Then the aged son of Dublin waited patiently, expecting his countrymen to protest the archbishop's ban.

"I had a very acute ear for any little phrase that interested me. It remained in my mind. I usually added to it, or wove another completely different phrase from it, to suit my own fanciful idea of what a character might say in a play."

"It's never-ending work. You must never separate yourself from real life if you're going to write a play. You must be ready to hear anything and everything, because you never know when a person may use an extraordinary or interesting remark that may be witty—unconsciously in most cases but consciously to you — and you store it up, and you may use it years afterwards."

His early years were lean. Now the money is coming. He said a trifle gumpily in his Dublin brogue: "Bloody near toime." The great Irishmen — Yeats, Joyce, Shaw — have gone. Now only O'Casey remains to remind Ireland of her golden age of modern literature.

Bi-cultural book exhibit in Hart House

By Douglas Lockhead

Keats and baudelaire — an exhibition

Bi-culturalism, one might almost venture "romantic bi-culturalism", is just one of the themes suggested by Mr. Robert S. Kenny's impressive combined exhibition of books of the English poet John Keats and the French writer Charles Baudelaire now on display in the Hart House Art Gallery.

Mr. Kenny's exhibit, which fills nine cases, is part of the result of years of collecting and it amply displays the discrimination, tenacity and inventiveness that mark the imaginative book collector. There is also something about this display that reveals the very personal kind of pleasure, even glaze, that must have been his as he hunted his books on two continents. Technically, the exhibition embraces a period beginning in 1795, when Keats was born, and ending in 1867 when Baudelaire died. Keats died in 1821, the year Baudelaire was born. It is impossible, however, to confine two such major writers in this way, as the influence of both continues to increase over the years. For example, Mr. Kenny adds a local touch by including an edition of the poems of the French-Canadian poet Emile Nelligan (1879-1941). Nelligan, one of Canada's best poets, was greatly influenced by Verlaine, Mallarmé, Rimbaud, and perhaps, most of all by Baudelaire. Then, also, there is the well-known interest of Baudelaire in Edgar Allan Poe's writing, and this is noted by the inclusion of a collection of Baudelaire's critical papers on the American poet.

The Keats portion of the display contains standard editions of his poetical works, including Garrod's edition of 1939 and the handsome eight-volume "Hampstead Edition" published by Scribner. There is an edition of the Letters of Keats, edited by Maurice Buxton Forman, himself one of the great private collectors of Keats. The display includes copies of the Keats-Shelley Memorial Bulletin, photographs of the Keats House and Museum, as well as many other association items. An intriguing volume is a copy of an Itinerary of Italy, or Traveller's Guide . . . 1819. Professor J. R. MacGillivray's Keats, a Bibliography and Reference Guide, 1949, is still the basic finding list for Keats' writing and it occupies a deservedly prominent place in Mr. Kenny's display. As with Keats, Baudelaire's influence has continued to increase with the years. After the expiry of copyright in 1917, considerable scholarship has been devoted to Baudelaire, the man and his work. There is the great Conard Edition, the first volume of which appeared in 1922, while other editions, commentaries, biographies and interpretations have appeared in a steady stream. Mr. Kenny's selection contains many of these studies, including collections of the writings of Baudelaire's contemporaries Verlaine, Rimbaud and Mallarmé, as well as such items as a copy of a catalogue of a unique collection of Baudelaire assembled at La Bibliothèque Nationale in 1957 to honour the centennial of the publication of his most substantial work Les Fleurs du mal.

Mr. Robert Kenny's original and thoughtfully prepared exhibit is well worth a visit. It is interesting in itself; it is also an outstanding example of what the private book collector of modest means can do if he defines his limits, saves his pennies for the occasional expensive find, and keeps looking.

The Keats-Baudelaire Exhibition, sponsored by the Hart House Library Committee, is on display in the Art Gallery from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. (ladies invited, after 2 p.m.) and will be open until November 3rd.

Blues visit undefeated Mustangs

By KATY O'SULLIVAN

Varsity Soccer Blues fight for first place in the intercollegiate league Saturday when they meet Western Mustangs in London.

The away contest will be Blues' first meeting with the undefeated Mustangs this fall. With two wins in three games, Toronto is currently tied for second place with Ryerson Rams, three points behind Western. And Blues have played two less games than Ryerson.

Western has won three of four matches so far. Only a tie with McMaster prevents Western from boasting a perfect record.

Blues will start tomorrow's contest in top form. They've had a full week's rest since their last outing, and are free of any serious injuries.

Among the starters in tomorrow's game are: Bobby Lewis (III Vic): A tricky player with professional potential, Lewis is used exclusively at inside forward, a position in the soccer lineup similar to a football quarterback. In this key position he keeps the team moving offensively and helps effect Varsity's outstanding passing attacks. With his fast and skillful footwork, enabling him to dribble past any defenceman in the league, Lewis is a thorn in the side of the opposition.

INTERFACULTY ROUNDUP

St. Mike's and PHE dominate lacrosse

By AL SCHOENBORN

An unfortunate situation has developed in interfaculty lacrosse as St. Mike's A and PHE A are in a class by themselves in Group I. Each has won both its contests by run-away scores.

Tuesday night Meds A was trounced 13-3 by defending champion St. Mike's A. Don Schmidt paced the winners with four counters. Vern McCreary and George Olah each had a pair.

Chris King, Jeff Hurwitz and S. Yoshida hit for the doctors. Yesterday the Phys Ed "A" squad passed, ran and checked its way to a 17-0 shellacking of a feeble Vic I team, weakened by the absence of star forward Dave O'Brien and the second-quarter loss of defenceman Ron Clarke. Down 8-0 after three quarters, Vic ran out of steam and Don Arthurs & Co. poured in nine more in the final stanza. Arthurs led the rout with six goals while Barry Bartlett was impressive with a five-goal performance.

After 11 straight losses stretching back to the beginning of last year, Meds A amalgamated with Meds B and will play in group II. The combination team promptly downed Pharmacy 6-4.

Jeff Hurwitz led Meds with a hat trick. Stan Litch scored two.

In other games Vic II beat SPS II 5-1, and Trinity took PHE II 4-2. A game between Pre-Med I and SPS III failed to produce a goal, while Pre-Med II tied Knox 2-2.

FOOTBALL

The Red and Gold from Vic yesterday won their second consecutive game as they downed SPS 14-7. It was the engineers' second loss in as many starts.

Dan Kit gave Skule a 1-0 lead on a second-quarter single. Then Phil Rimmington, who scored all 14 of Vic's points, went over for a touchdown which he converted to give Vic a 7-1 halftime lead. After a scoreless third quarter, Glen Katsuyama for SPS and Rimmington for Vic exchanged majors in the final period. Rimmington's second convert attempt was also good.

Group II play opened with three shutouts. Yesterday UC spoiled the debut of New College as they defeated the Green and Gold 20-0.

UC opened the scoring in the first period when Jack Messinger fell on a blocked kick in the New College end-zone. Lloyd Pollock ran a bad snap around the end for the convert.

Dave Willens and Dan Gryte scored TD's in the second and third quarters and Hartley Garfield kicked a 30-yard single to account for the rest of the Redmen's scoring.

An early safety touch, a second period field goal by Don Heys and a last-quarter TD by Saychuck gave Pharmacy an 11-0 win over Forestry. Meds scored a 15-0 triumph over Trinity in their opener on touchdowns by Jim Boyce, and Bob Clark. Boyce added a single and John Mueller booted two converts.

RUGGER

Vic I and Trinity A both registered their second wins of the young rugger season. Vic I blanked PHE A 6-0 on tries by Al Major and Mike Meredith. Trinity A took Vic II 8-0, as Paul Stockdale and Dave Gooderham scored Trinity tries. Knox knocked off Architecture 11-5.

SOCCER

Group I soccer is still a close race as Wednesday's three 1-0 scores indicates. Sr. SPS beat UC, Vic I edged Trin. A and St. Mike's A downed Meds A by the same 1-0 count.

In group II action, Law took Knox 2-0, while Pharmacy won over Emmanuel 4-0.

VOLLEYBALL

Vic I defeated UC II 15-8, 15-13 and Sr. SPS took Third-year Meds 15-10, 15-7, Forestry A beat Architecture 15-8, 15-7.

Well I'll be chaps . . . That's rugger star Paul Wilson in a football uniform, with a rugger sweater of course. Ruggerite Andy Davidson (left) is helping Paul onto the field for the first football game of his life. Paul handled the opening kickoff and a few plays on defence for Trinity in their opener against Meds Wednesday.

Rugger Blues take aim at Aggies' handcuff

A UTRFC Syndicated Service

Varsity Rugger Blues attempt to shatter the long-standing jinx of Ontario Agricultural College's home pitch Saturday when they tackle the Aggies in Guelph.

And Blues will be handicapped in this superhuman effort by the loss of two key players through injuries.

Although Blues have reigned as Intercollegiate Champions for the past four years, they have only salvaged one win on the OAC field in that period.

The supernatural trance which has thwarted Blues in Guelph has been personally selective as well. Varsity Captain Paul Wilson, who continually dumbfounds opponents with his feats of place-kicking, has yet to split the uprights in Guelph.

Injuries to OQAA-Stars Larry Johnson and Bob Dodds not only hurt Blues, but also necessitate further line-up changes. Bill Nelems and Terry Picton are the two replacements, and the whole line-up has been reshuffled to better distribute Blues' power.

The Intermediates journey to London for a match with Western Colts. Captain Dave Torbet is on the injured list and will be replaced by Brian Hull. In the Scrums: The Thirds again downed York University yesterday in a game at York. Score was 3-0. . . Paul Wilson has been selected as a reserve for the Ontario Provincial Fifteen. . .

Blue John Cameron finally surrendered to his teammates' entreaties that he do something about his eyesight. He purchased a pair of contact lenses.

PASSI AND MONTEITH SUFFER KNEE INJURIES

Football takes toll on pucksters

Varsity Hockey Blues have yet to start formal workouts for the 1963-64 season but already there is bad news from the shiny front. Ward Passi and Steve Monteith, the top two scorers in the Eastern Division last season, will join the hockey squad late because of injuries sustained in interfaculty football games. Passi, who in his rookie season led the division with 19 goals, was second to Monteith with 33 points and was a unanimous selection as the all-star left winger, suffered torn knee ligaments while playing for Victoria last Thursday against St. Mike's.

Passi's leg is in a cast and he is expected to be sidelined for at least four weeks. He hopes to be back with Hockey Blues for the opening league game at McGill Dec. 6.

Monteith, all-star right winger and division scoring leader with 36 points, suffered a similar but less serious injury Wednesday while playing for Trinity against Medicine. He will be sidelined for about three weeks.

Passi and Monteith played with centre Sonny Osborne last season, forming the Mop Line. This trio was 1-2-3 in division scoring and was selected as a unit to the All-star team. Osborne has since graduated.

Hockey Notes: Blues have only lost three first stringers from last season's second-place team. Jesse Weller and Barry Rowland have graduated and Gord Cunningham is academically ineligible. . . At the same time the ice crew has added John Gillilan, a top performer with McGill Redmen for five seasons now at U of T Law School; Bob

WARD PASSI

STEVE MONTEITH

Hamilton, a freshman defenceman formerly with Hamilton's 1962 Memorial Cup Junior champions; and Ian Sinclair, college hockey's top defenceman who played with McMaster last season after two seasons with Blues. . . The Intercollegiate Hockey League will consist of one division this season, the teams being Laval, Montreal, McGill, Toronto, McMaster, Queen's and Waterloo.

Win against Western a must if Varsity wants shot at Yates

By SHEL KRAKOFSKY

Associate Sports Editor

It's a long way home for Varsity Blues, who must virtually win their remaining four games in the regular OAAA schedule to get a shot at Mr. Yates' cup.

Blues play Western Mustangs at London Saturday in the first of a home-and-home series that will make or break their chance of resurgence after losing their first two games of the young season.

Blues defeated Mustangs here in a pre-season game, 13-7, but neither team displayed its real power. The game turned out to be a struggle of tactics as both coaches substituted freely and did not attempt imaginative offences.

With the exception of halfback Harold Hall and defensive tackle John Fraser, Blues travel to Western with the team at full strength for the first time since the season started. Riivo Ilves will likely see action at defensive halfback after being out for four weeks with a separated shoulder, suffered in an exhibition game against University of Ottawa.

Offensive end Mike Hollett, who missed last week's game with a bad ankle, will suit up for this one. Fraser suffered pulled ligaments in his elbow and will be out for two weeks.

The doctor has told Hall he will be out of action for at least three weeks with broken ribs suffered in last week's game but Hall, the determined competitor he is, hopes to be ready for next week's game here against Mustangs. He has continued to work out despite difficulty breathing.

One of the bright spots in Blues' two losses has been the emergence of rookie defensive tackle Ray Reynolds. The 19-year-old, 245-pound product of Toronto's Oakwood Collegiate has shown he can more than hold his own in intercollegiate competition.

At Queen's, Reynolds made a key recovery of a fumble to set up Varsity's tying touchdown and he has drawn praises from U of T coach Dalt White.

"There's no one in the league that he can't handle and he has good speed for a player of his size," said White.

Blues contend with formidable opposition when they tackle Western Saturday. Pre-season consensus was that Mustangs would have a big rebuilding job after losing more than half of last year's team. But coach John Metras has some fine rookies on his roster that includes quarterback Bob Israel and offensive end Pat McConnell. McConnell is currently in fourth place in league scoring with 16 points and is a good punter.

QUICK KICKS: Queen's begins a home-and-home series with McGill this weekend in Montreal. After losing their first two games last year, McGill defeated the previously unbeaten Golden Gaels in both games of a home-and-home series...

Bob Israel, who suffered an injury to his leg in last week's game, appears ready for Saturday's tilt... This weekend is Western's homecoming... Western centre John Metras Jr. will miss the Intercollegiate Track Meet in Toronto because of Saturday's football game. Metras is the defending javelin champion.

THREE-WAY TIE FOR FIRST PLACE

Baby Blues win 15-0

By GORD BELLMORE

Varsity Baby Blues handed Ryerson Rams a convincing 15-0 shutout at Varsity Stadium last night. The win caused a three-way traffic jam in the Intermediate loop with each team owning 1-1 records.

After a see-saw first half in which Toronto built up a 7-0 lead, the tough Rinkie defence completely strangled the Ram offence in the second half. The visitors didn't get past midfield until the last minute of play when the game was out of reach.

Rinkies displayed a persistent ground attack featured by the running of Ron Peroff, Pete Sutherland and Brian McKee, and a quick hard-charging line. Toronto controlled the ball for long periods of time, banging out consistent short yardage between the tackles.

Ryerson's defence tired under the relentless pressure towards the end as Baby Blues threatened several times.

Despite Baby Blues superiority, the issue was still in doubt until Peroff broke away on a routine run off-tackle and went 68 yards for the t.d. with three minutes left in the game.

Baby Blues' earlier score came in the first quarter when quarterback Craig Williamson hit flanker Mike Gray in the end zone on a 10-yard toss. The touchdown was set up by the recovery of a Ryerson fumble on the 25-yard line.

Williamson only took three plays to capitalize on the break as he directed the team in for the score. Ben Hutzel kicked both converts and a fourth-quarter single.

Ryerson threatened twice in the first half but the Rinkie defence tightened each time. After that Ryerson couldn't get moving despite the fine running of fullback Bill Genova who was a threat every time he carried the ball. The alert Toronto defence picked off three errant Ram passes and the tough hitting paid off in three fumbles.

Both offences would have been far more effective but for the numerous penalties to both sides. Time and again offensive drives were stalled by official's flags.

PRESENTING INTERCOLLEGIATE TRACK AND FIELD

While the multitudes of football fanatics make the trek to jolly old London town tomorrow, the local travel-weary brood will still be able to keep Varsity Stadium company. The athletes on display tomorrow at the Bloor Street Bowl won't be wearing heavily-padded armor and they won't be throwing, kicking and fumbling footballs all over the lot.

The occasion is the annual Ontario-Quebec Athletic Association track and field meet, being held this year on a weekend for the first time in memory. This spectacle is one of the most under-rated and under-publicized college sports attractions in these parts, and is certainly worth far more than the price of admission — it's free.

There has been considerable interest in track at Varsity the past few years, mainly because of the international reputations gained by Bruce Kidd and Bill Crothers. But the U of T squad is without Crothers this year and the intercollegiate title picture is somewhat hazy.

Last year at McMaster, Varsity won 10 of the 17 events and ran up the highest points-total in the history of the OAAA meet. Varsity's final score nearly tripled that of the nearest opponent.

With Crothers and a few others having graduated and a host of top stars academically ineligible, however, the Track Blues will have to go all-out to retain the Tait Mackenzie Trophy.

VISITORS HAVE TOP STARS FOR SHOWDOWN

McMaster, last year's runner-up, is expected to give Varsity the toughest time with Frank Baines, formerly at Central Tech. in Toronto, rated as the best sprinter in the conference. Western has top performers in Hylke Van der Wal, who ran the steeplechase for Canada at the last British Empire Games, and Don McCarten. Ontario's 440-yard champion. Van der Wal will face Kidd in the mile and three-miles while McCarten tests Varsity's Rod Chintu in the 440.

Kidd holds intercollegiate records in the mile and three-miles, having first set the marks two years ago and bettering them last year at Mac. His records of 4:11.7 for the mile and 13:47.3 for the three-miles should fall if Kidd is pushed by Van der Wal.

Ontario Agricultural College's trump card will once again be Sonny Akpata, who set records last year in the broad jump and triple jump and shared honors with Kidd as the top performer at the meet. Queen's has its impressive athlete also, in Bill White, favored to win the 440-yard hurdles.

All in all, it promises to be an interesting and exciting day at the Stadium tomorrow for the non-football types. Nine colleges will be participating, McGill, Montreal, McMaster, OAC, Queen's, Windsor, Waterloo, Western and Toronto.

FOOL'S FRIDAY FISTAMATIONS

Contrary to reports in the former pink publication, Varsity Blues are still in the running for the Yates Cup. The cross-roads in this silverware race are reached tomorrow at Little Stadium in London. If Blues win, they're back in the fight. If they lose, goodbye... Gary Cranmer was an all-star fullback with Western Mustangs two seasons back. Last year he failed and was ineligible. This season he was cut by Mustangs. It seems that Gary and Western coach John (The Bull) Metras didn't quite see eye to eye... All-star fullback Jim Young of Queen's Gaels returned to the lineup against Western last week but didn't show the form that made him the best runner in the league last season. Young had been sidelined for two weeks with a pulled hip muscle...

McGill Redmen are sorry to lose quarterback Gary Cullen for the season with torn knee ligaments, even though Cullen was slated as second-stringer behind Glen St. John. Cullen led Redmen in the first two games while St. John recovered from the flu and impressed enough to challenge for the starting pivot spot...

The Soccer Blues lost one of their oldest and dearest fans recently when Hugh Boyd died at the age of 67. Mr. Boyd had attended Varsity soccer games for years with his friends Charlie Oster and George Osler. Charlie, at 77, and George, at 84, are still avid fans and Charlie still accompanies the team on all road games...

An authoritative grape vine source says Maple Leaf hockey star Carl Brewer is seeking full-time admission in second year Arts here. Brewer is out of hockey until at least the New Year due to a broken arm suffered in the Stanley Cup playoffs... Accolades to the Blue and White Band, which turned in a much-improved showing at last Saturday's football game... Don Awrey, brother of Hockey Blues' Bob Awrey, has stuck with Boston Bruins as a defenceman in his first year out of junior hockey...

KOLLINS KANDID PROGNOSTICATION: Blues just have to win Little Stadium or no Little Stadium — Blues by a touchdown over Western... Queen's wakes up in Montreal — Gaels by 15 points over McGill. Season's Record: 3 right, 2 wrong. Pct.: .600... And Uncle Harry predicts Varsity will win the track meet by four points over McMaster.

SHARE breaks record

One of the many fund-raising activities undertaken by the SHARE campaign was a hootenanny staged at Vic.

University of Toronto students set a record for generosity during last week's SHARE campaign. As of last night, $8,080 had been returned to campaign director Chris Snyder (Ext. 4). The university objective was $10,000. A few faculties have yet to be heard from. Fourteen colleges and schools broke previous collection records in the campaign that broke the previous record by more than $2,000.

Thursday's mile of dimes also netted more than a similar gimmick used in a campaign last year. Emmanuel led the small schools with a 125 per cent collection. School of Social Work also managed to collect more than a dollar a student, the drive's objective.

(See page 3 for detailed results.)

The Faculty of Engineering returned the biggest collection, $900. Victoria College was next among the big schools with $870.

The U of T staff collected $672. Campaign director Snyder estimates that the final tally of money to be sent to underprivileged students overseas will exceed $9,000.

Sole Negro rejected by SAC

A Negro University of Toronto student said Sunday night she was confused and disappointed that she had been rejected as a delegate to the University of North Carolina weekend exchange.

Yvonne Yearwood (LS) was the only Negro to apply for inclusion in the group of 25 students going on the Students' Administrative Council "Tarheel" visit.

Diana Bennett (III UC), SAC weekends chairman, said Sunday night she had heard three days after the deadline for applications that Miss Yearwood wanted to go to North Carolina but that she hadn't applied.

"We let her know we would accept her application," Miss Bennett said, "and she applied and was interviewed."

"I would have particularly liked to have had a Negro on this trip."

But Miss Yearwood received a mimeographed letter last week telling her she had been rejected along with about 75 other students.

"I thought it a bit strange," Miss Yearwood said, answering questions put by a Varsity staff writer.

"I had been told the officials of the exchange were disappointed that no Negroes had applied."

The University of North Carolina has what Miss Bennett referred to as "token integration." She said if Miss Yearwood's application had been accepted, the SAC would have had to warn the Tarheel students in advance so that accommodation problems would not arise.

Miss Yearwood, who came to the U of T from Trinidad, said she had told the two girls who interviewed her that she knew about the racial situation at North Carolina and that she wanted very much to go there to see the problem for herself. "I told the interviewers that if I was demonstrated against, I would expect the U of T group to back me up," she said.

"They assured me they would. They seemed enthusiastic . . .

"Then they rejected me. I thought of all the possible reasons. I thought maybe they had been subjected to pressure from above."

Mary Charles (IV UC), one of the two girls who interviewed Miss Yearwood for the SAC, said Sunday night the applicant "didn't seem as enthusiastic as other people."

"She was intelligent — had a lot of good ideas, you know," Miss Charles said, "but she didn't carry herself as well."

The other interviewer, Joanne Bennett (IV Trin), was in Chicago Sunday and was unavailable for comment. But Miss Charles said they both had conferred about Miss Yearwood's application and interview and that they shared each other's views about her.

Dr. George Brown dies

Ottawa (Special) — Dr. George W. Brown, professor emeritus of history at the University of Toronto, died suddenly last Friday night. Honorary editor of the Royal Society of Canada, he suffered a heart seizure at a meeting of the society's publications committee here.

In addition to serving as professor of history, Dr. Brown was the general editor of the Dictionary of Canadian Biography, and for many years was editor of the University of Toronto press.

A native of Glencoe, Ont., Dr. Brown received his B.A. from the U of T in 1915, and his M.A. and Ph.D. from the University of Chicago. He is well known for his earlier historical works including: Readings in Canadian History, Building the Canadian Nation, Canada and the Commonwealth, and Canada in the Making.

Funeral service will be held Tuesday in Timothy Eaton Memorial Church, where he had been a member for 40 years.

Canada is not nuclear power

Canada must be content with a comparatively minor role in nuclear disarmament talks, General E. L. M. Burns warned Friday at the opening lecture of the Student Christian Movement - Combined Universities Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament series "Arms and the Man." Canada is not a nuclear power, he said. General Burns, a veteran of the two world wars and the UN Emergency Force and a delegate to the 18-nation Geneva world conference on disarmament defined a nuclear power as "a nation that can transform raw materials into nuclear explosives and construct vehicles for nuclear weapons."

He said the United States and the Soviet Union are the only full nuclear powers in the world today, with Britain and France, to a lesser degree. "Canada," he said, "can only persuade, criticize, and attempt to negotiate a compromise." He said that the idea of having a balanced amount of nuclear power on each side has been refused by the Soviet Union since the U.S. demands some sort of inspection before such a system would be tenable.

"Furthermore," he said, "the Russians feel that the West just wants to gain added information for future attack through such inspection."

General Burns explained that while all this seems negative, disarmament is possible though it must be worked out over a period of years with the cooperation of the armed forces.

"Public opinion," he said, "must demand that we face the problem honestly and sincerely in ways that will not hamper progress."

He added that although nuclear war will never be impossible, innovations such as the Washington-Moscow "hot line" and recent partial test-ban treaties can reduce the probability of such an event.

New Dems To Choose Leader

U of T New Democrats will elect their Model Parliament leader next Monday at 1 p.m. in Rm. 1,086, Sidney Smith Hall. This year their choice might be a girl, or might be an engineer.

At least three people will stand for the post. Alan Bowker (III UC), Mike McDonald (III SMC) and Mary Brewin (II Trin) are in the running, and Ron Evans (IV APSC) is considering standing for the position, said Wilf Day (II UC), president of the club.

The New Democrats will be the first club to pick their leader for the Model Parliament election campaign, which starts in November and ends with the Model Parliament election Dec. 6.

All clubs will soon be starting sessions to decide on their platform for the campaign.

Carol Ann Balmer wins CFTO beauty crown

Carol Ann Balmer (I PHE) won the Princess of CFTO-TV title from five finalists who appeared on Channel 9's Morning Magazine, it was announced last Wednesday. Carol took part in evening gown, talent and swim suit competitions held before the station's official panel of judges in Agincourt, Ont. A firm supporter of biculturalism, Carol performed her talent routine in French. As winner in the Toronto Area "Search for Miss Canada 1964" contest, Carol is entitled to compete with 24 other princesses from across Canada in the 1964 Miss Canada Pageant.

The pageant to be held at O'Keefe Centre in November will offer more than $5,000 in educational and talent scholarships.

"I would consider it a great honor to represent young womanhood in Canada," Carol said.

Trucks don't play tennis

Tennis players at St. Michael's College would have had a tough time batting balls Sunday night. A large truck perched absurdly in the middle of the courts. It was all a gag. The college staff chuckled but smiles faded when they wondered how to remove the vehicle. The wire fence around the courts formed an effective barrier. The Varsity learned late Sunday that four St. Michael's residence males were behind the prank. They led a band of about 300. They pushed the truck along St. Mary's St. early Sunday morning and nuzzled the fence delicately. The north wall of the fence had been unhinged at one corner so the whole side of the fence swung out. One group of men quickly took down the nets, another shoved the truck into position and a third group worked with wrenches to put the court wall back into position. The 30 men worked quietly despite shrieks from girls across the street at Loretto College. The feat took 10 minutes. The group leader explained his motives: "I thought it would lend a better atmosphere to St. Mike's. 'I wanted to throw a jeep in there too, but the other guys didn't think we should." He added that there was something else planned for "later on". The truck was borrowed from the loading docks behind Elmsley residence. It is used by the college for loading fertilizer. The plan was executed by the group with a few unexpected interruptions. An early check of the campus by the watchmen threw the boys a bit, and attention from the girls from Loretto was a surprise. Girls with 2 a.m. leaves heckled the men while they worked. The group that loosened the hinges of the court at 10:30 p.m. had to do this preparatory work without their leader. This was another unforeseen obstacle, he explained. "I was slightly inebriated at a party. But I made the 2 a.m. session."

Bathtubs are secondary

There are more important things in Canada than bathtubs, a meeting of the Toronto University Geographic Society in Sidney Smith Hall was told Friday. Mishaal Ray of the University of Ottawa spoke on "Problems of Economic Regionalization and its Relation to Matters of Public Policy." He called the old technique of census-taking in Canada obsolete, and recommended the use of computers for greater speed and less possible error. Mr. Ray criticized the fact that the full results of the 1961 census are still not entirely published now in 1963, and that the least important results are worked out first. "Why should results be published on the number of people who have private bathrooms to themselves, while employment statistics are not yet available?" he asked. Mr. Ray said that he wanted to see results of interest to the country as a whole, information on migration, and not the number of houses with hot and cold running water. He recommended dropping unimportant questions which can be deduced from general information from census questions. Mr. Ray went on to the results of a computer factor analysis for central Canada. "Geographers agreed with our results," said Mr. Ray, "but the federal government didn't like it."

The results fanned out in three basic patterns of variability. First there was a band of English, Protestant urban-dwelling people mostly in manufacturing, with high incomes, a high rate of immigration, and less unemployment.

Then there was a band of French, Catholic rural-dwelling people with lower immigration, lower incomes, small population growth and little immigration.

Last there was a pioneer band of people who fitted neither category, living far out from population centres of any kind.

Mr. Ray said: "It was rather embarrassing for the government."

UC Lit elections

The University College Literary and Athletic Society has announced the results of the Friday elections. Don Rogers (III UC) was elected Students' Administrative Council representative. Karen Greenberg (I UC) was named women's SAC rep. Carol Barrett was named first-year athletic rep.

Burns (cont'd)

"It is necessary," he concluded "to think of the other side as people, the same as ourselves." The next lecture in the series will be given by Professor John Yoder of the Mennonite Seminary in Elkhart, Indiana. He will speak on "A Christian's Responsibility to the State" at 4:30 p.m. today in West Hall, UC.

Name students to participate in Tarheel exchange

The following are those selected for the Tarheel exchange with the University of North Carolina. Terry Adler (IV UC), Barb Amiel (SGS), Dave Beatty (III Trin), Peter Breiks (IV APSC), Janet Finch (II Vic), Peter Casson (III APSC), Dave Greyson (III Meds), Howard Gorman (IV UC), Ellen Hamilton (IV Trin), Dale Hayes (III UC), Peter Haynes (SGS), Suzanne Hennings (IV Trin), Patrick Humphreys (OCE), Urs Maag (SGS), Barb MacDonald (SocWk), William Mann (III APSC), Robert McGee (III Meds), Susan Pepper (III Vic), Barb Purkis (II Trin), John Schram (II Law), Richard Symmes (IV APSC), Joanne Trott, (III Vic), Peter Wendling (III Law), and Harry White (IV C).

Ron Mills fund still open

The Ron Mills fund, set up to aid the family of the young university parking attendant who died at 28 of cancer, is still open for contributions. Certain policy qualifications made Ron Mills ineligible for insurance, and thus left his wife and two children unprepared to carry on after his death. The fund set up by The Varsity based in the SAC office has collected $850. SAC contributions accounted for $100 with students and staff making up the rest. Student response to this fund has been very generous, especially in view of the fact that very little campaigning was done, and that the SHARE drive came along at the same time.

Mennonite scholar to lecture

A prominent Mennonite theologian, active in both Europe and North America, will speak on campus today. Dr. John Howard Yoder, director of theology at Goshen College, Goshen, Ind., will speak on "A Christian's Responsibility to the State" in the west hall of University College at 4:30 p.m.

Dr. Yoder has most recently participated in ecumenical discussions with European theologians on pacifism and Christianity in the contemporary world scene. His visit has been jointly sponsored by the Student Christian Movement the CU-CND and the Association of Mennonite University Students.

Publicity seekers note

The Varsity publicity department will hold a meeting Wednesday at 4 p.m. in the Varsity office to provide information on how advance publicity on campus events is handled by the paper. Any campus group which is, or will be seeking publicity in The Varsity is advised to send a representative to this meeting.

revision needed

The Comment column in last Wednesday's Varsity carried an article criticizing the present Model Parliament and asking for revisions.

In his commentary R. G. Evans said, while the present system provides an arena for politically minded students to experiment with political techniques, it does nothing to inform the university community on other than party attitudes. Evans proposed using a system of proportional representation, including the end of a majority government; more consideration of private members' bills; and a lift of the ban on parties without federal representation.

During at least the past three years, thanks largely to a former Editor of The Varsity, Model Parliament has degenerated to such a level that it needs to be drastically revised if it is to serve any worthwhile purpose.

Past Model Parliaments have been characterized by everything that makes politics a dirty word, and by little that makes politics a noble activity.

Last year the campus was plagued by the Liberal "people to people campaign", attention seeking stunts and an exodus from Ottawa of hand-shaking MPs who did nothing more constructive than further the ends of their own party.

For the past three years the campus Liberals have led this type of useless behaviour, and have contributed the least to intelligent discussion of important issues.

Last year the Conservatives brought in Georges Hees, Davie Fulton and Howard Green; the New Democratic Party provided Reid Scott; the Communists, Leslie Morris; and the Socreds imported Real Caouette and Bert Leboe.

All of these persons made speeches, explained their party's position and answered questions. The Liberals did none of these.

Furthermore, the Liberals defended their approach by pointing out the increased number of students they encouraged to vote, the number of "victories" they had amassed, and concluded by stating "that's politics."

The point is, this does not have to be the manner in which political activities are carried out, particularly on a university campus.

Because nothing of national importance is at stake, insofar as the final outcome of the Model Parliament is concerned, the campaign and session could be used to acquaint students with the important issues of the day and the manner in which politics can work under the best of conditions. There is no reason why students at this university should allow themselves to be used as pawns by the campus politicians.

If this year's Model Parliament participants turn the campaign into the three-ring circus with Tammany Hall side-lights, they should be ignored.

Further, the Students' Administrative Council should act now to ensure that the events of the last three years are not repeated.

Implementation by the SAC of Evans's proposals would put the parliament in a better framework; while student refusal to be stampeded by glory seeking Junior MPs would help place the whole campaign on an intelligent and worthwhile level.

Cooking course gains new status

By BOB SOROKOLIT

A change in name from Household Science to the Faculty of Food Sciences this year should help give the Roman-pillared little grey school-house on the corner of Avenue Road and Bloor Street its rightful respect. Besides the name change — the first in its 60 year history — the curriculum will now parallel that of an honor science course, and throw off the old stigma of "a glorified home economics cooking class."

For example, a common first year features three hours of calculus weekly, with chemistry, physics, botany, zoology and an arts option besides the "cooking" subjects of community development, design, and nutrition, textiles and food chemistry.

And entrance requirements are being raised to 64%, with credits necessary in three mathematics papers.

"This is a hard way to get a diamond ring, if someone thinks students are here just for that," said Barbara A. McLaren, the dean, and a PhD in-biochemistry.

Dr. McLaren said the new name expresses better the idea of the new program.

She mused that Food and Textile sciences had been considered as a possible name, but she realized that this would have been popularly shortened to FATS by fanatical campus abbreviators like The Varsity.

Students in their last three years will be able to branch into courses in nutrition, textiles, or food chemistry before they receive a BSc (Food Sc.) By careful selection of options they may also get qualifications in more than one of these branches.

"True, all women naturally think of marriage, but this course is not necessary for homemaking, as it is not necessary to have a PhD in Sociology to be a good homemaker," said Dr. McLaren.

She cited research management in the food industry and teaching as one of the fields for graduates. (Incidentally, all 18 professors and lecturers in the faculty are women. This year there is a male freshman, the first in the school's history!)

Although there are facilities for 100 students in each year, the breakdown in Food Science is 31 in first year, and 32, 18 and 15 respectively in each of the years of the old Household Sciences course.

The 300 students from General Arts now taking special options in the school will slowly disappear in three years, leaving more room for Food Scientists and, incidentally, more men in the course.

Letters to the editor

Raps Vic and Trin

The Editor,
The Varsity,
University of Toronto,
Toronto, Ontario.

Dear Sir:

In my four years at this university, I have seen three rather pointed campaigns directed by your newspaper against fraternal discrimination. I feel that, with certain exceptions, your case has been well presented — discrimination solely on the basis of colour, race or creed is intolerable, and most local fraternities, even though bounded by constitutions catering to the racially divided and prejudiced situation as it exists in the United States, have made significant progress towards the abolition of such discrimination.

Yet I cannot ever remember reading in the Varsity, or elsewhere, for that matter, any mention of discrimination as it exists in other parts of the university community.

To his end, I would like to point out that two colleges on this campus, namely, Trinity and Victoria, have regulations barring their female students from joining fraternities. Victoria's regulation, as I understand it, has only this year been enforced, with the result that the Toronto Pan-Hellenic Society (the women's inter-fraternity council) was forced to deny the privileges of rushing to some 33 Victoria girls, even though other Victoria girls are already members from previous years.

As an interested but outside observer, I am very much disturbed by this ruling as being indicative of a basically wrong moral philosophy on the part of these colleges. I would assume that, since the University of Toronto does not recognize fraternities in any way, a student should have the same God-given right to join the fraternity of her choice as she has to join the curling club, bridge circle, or even church of her choice.

The University can claim the right to regulate her behaviour on the campus, but to attempt to regulate it off the campus, as in this case, is as blatant a form of discrimination as has ever been practiced by fraternities themselves.

The University of Toronto holds the principles of equality and human rights very dearly. It appears to me, that in this instance, it is setting new standards in hypocrisy by allowing two of its colleges to practice the very discrimination that it purports to abhor. Perhaps some reasonable and constructive action could be taken to rectify this extremely unfortunate situation.

York, a university?

Your rag has slighted the members of York University past the point of silent suffering. Not only do you deprecate their rugged prowess, but you state on the front page that "CUS cards are issued, not only to University students, but also to students at Ryerson, York, and the hospitals". We highly resent this statement, and firmly believe it serves to demonstrate the ignorance of the writer. Such a statement leads one to wonder exactly who the university students are in this town. We are. Arc you?

Allan Millward (III York)
James K. McCaul (I York)
There is no doubt in our minds who the university students are — and we had always included York students. This reaction to an editorial error seems to indicate that the York students are themselves unsure of their status. Ed.)

Youth concert comes to Toronto

Les Jeunesses Musicales, a world-wide organization dedicated to bringing fine music to young audiences and consequently giving them an appreciation for music, makes its first foray into the Toronto music market next Monday in the Edward Johnson Building.

The organization, drawing most of its 800,000 members from the under-30 age group, will sponsor four concerts, from Oct. 28 through Feb. 17.

Three of the concerts will feature youth talent. The fourth will be the Brussels Wind Quintet, instrumentalists drawn from Belgium's finest orchestras. The quartet will open the series next Monday.

The quintet-flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon and French horn — will play selections from Vivaldi, Rameau, Mozart and Hindemith.

Audrey Johannesen, a native of Regina, will display the talent that earned her a degree from the London Royal Academy of Music when she will be soloist on Nov. 18.

Gloria Richard, well-known for her recitals in the East and on the CBC, will be soprano soloist at the Jan. 28 session.

Sir Ernest MacMillan

Coro Incas, a group of young male singers from a village near Milan, Italy will make Toronto one of their stops on their first North American tour. They will close the concert series Feb. 17.

All concerts will include lectures given by the guest performers.

Interested students can subscribe to the series by joining the Toronto branch of Les Jeunesses Musicales. A $5 student membership will pay for concert tickets, five editions of the society's Chronicle, and membership in the JMC record club in Montreal.

Information is available from the Toronto branch — the 140th and newest in Canada — at the Brodie School of Music and Modern Dance, 1310 Eglinton Ave. W., Toronto 10.

BRITISH SCIENTISTS

Representatives from Imperial Chemical Industries Ltd., England, will be visiting the campus on Monday, 4th November and Tuesday, 5th November, to meet and exchange information with post-graduate and post-doctorate scientists from Britain and the British Commonwealth who would like to consider careers with I.C.I. in the United Kingdom. An interview appointment can be arranged through the Placement Office prior to October 31st.

MIRACLE ON SPADINA

Men line up in front of new Scott Mission building.

by HERMANN REBEL

Has Wymilwood become too crowded and stuffy lately? Is the JCR still too wretched? Or the Buttery too quiet? Then why not eat at the Scott Mission? The food is good and what's more, it's free!

This is of course not an advertisement directed at the destitute university student although according to the Mission's policy, anyone, absolutely anyone, could come in, sit down and eat. There are no questions asked. This policy of trust and faith has been a feature of the Mission for as long as it has existed, for trust and faith are what motivate its founder, Dr. Morris Zeidmann, a Presbyterian church minister and graduate of Knox College, class of '25.

Dr. Zeidmann's story is basically a success story, a very different kind of success story. Long associated with the Presbyterian Christian Synagogue in Toronto's chinatown, Dr. Zeidmann broke away from that institution in 1941 when the Presbyterian church withdrew its resources from charity and put them instead into the war-effort. The Zeidmann family went into deep debt, put up its own mission, and hasn't looked back since. The new $750,000 edifice that occupies the present Spadina Avenue site is the result of many years of risk, determination and plain work.

Dr. Zeidmann is not a Canadian version of Kris Kringle, although the Mission has often been called "The Miracle on Spadina Avenue". Charity always has its price both in terms of money and personal sacrifice. There is no magic wand, no miracle. The entire operation is completely dependent upon public contributions of money, food and clothing. Most of its staff consists of volunteers who donate their time and effort to helping the social misfits, the unused and often unusable old men that have become the Mission's trade mark.

None of the big impersonal charity machines support the Mission. It stands completely on its own. As Dr.

Zeidmann put it:

"Most people like to pay their $25.00 or $50.00 all at once, just to get it off their minds. Our contributors don't just want to placate their conscience, but have a genuine interest. They like to know exactly where their contributions go."

What happens to the contributions received? The food of course winds up in the traditional soup kitchen which feeds from 500 to 900 men daily. Small neighbourhood merchants and large food processors make this possible. The meals are varied considerably and are much better than popular myth believes them to be. "I wouldn't give anybody anything to eat that I wouldn't eat myself."

Due to the variety of contributions the menu itself is anything but monotonous. From the several choices of fruit juice ("We like our boys to get all their vitamins"), through the main course of a meat dish, to the ice-cream and coffee dessert, the meal is eaten rapidly and silently, for outside there is another sitting of at least three hundred men, who have also been waiting since early morning for their one daily meal. Respect for his fellow man is the lesson that the mission teaches the down-and-outer.

It is remarkable that not one of these ex-cons, drug addicts, and alcoholics will let his greed or his hunger deprive another man of his due. Moderation and mutual respect are the orders of the day.

Food is not the only line of the Mission. In a large basement storeroom the contributions of shoes, coats, shirts, lampshades, pants, bedsheets, dresses, toys and other practical items are kept for distribution to the needy. Again no questions are asked. Men's pants and shoes are extremely rare items. So rare indeed, that once Dr. Zeidmann gave away a pair of his own trousers, since nothing else was available.

In the office on the main floor where Dr. Zeidmann's wife and two daughters manage affairs, the small luxuries of life, which most of us would consider commonplace are kept. Teabags, soap, razorblades, bandaids, shoelaces, headache tablets, streetcar fares, haircut tickets are there, free for the asking.

One could continue almost indefinitely. The Mission houses a nursing school for the children of working mothers. It operates a summer camp for the inhabitants of Toronto's slum sections. It serves as an employment agency. It sends food, medicine, and clothing to needy countries overseas. It is, above all, a refuge for men and women who have reached the lowest levels a human being can reach.

The Mission not only provides material goods and food to these men and women, but also offers something that is needed a great deal more: human self-respect. It treats the down-and-outer as a human being, always aware of the sensitivity that that term implies.

Watching how Dr. Zeidmann and his family and co-workers derive satisfaction from their work, how the men react to this treatment of respect and trust, one cannot forget that the basic motives behind it all are Christian motives. The Scott Mission teaches a lesson in applied Christianity. Dr. Zeidmann does not preach the eternal sermon, for bible-thumping isn't in his line. He goes to those who need help and helps them. It's as simple as that. There is a world of difference between this practical attitude and the Christian kaffeeklatsches so prevalent not only on this very campus, but also all over this land.

It was mentioned before that some of the Mission's customers are alcoholics, drug addicts, and ex-cons from Kingston and Leavenworth. But this does not tell the whole story. The majority of these men go to the Mission for one reason only: they are old and alone and have nowhere else to go. Our community is such that once a man has given the working years of his youth to the community he no longer is of any use and is pushed out by the wayside. What happens to a man once he becomes to old to ear his daily bread is nobody's concern. Edward Albee's metaphor basically holds true, for it is as though we burried our old people in sand-boxes and forgot about them.

Only a few, to whom Dr. Zeidmann and his family belong, don't forget. Their real purpose and the real purpose of the Scott Mission is to try and fill a major gap, make up for a major flaw in our community and way of thinking.

The old Scott Mission which has given way to a more modern building.

Approximately 900 men eat in this dining hall every

Inside the Scott Mission.

Norway students are educators

By BRUCE KIDD

Canadian university students have it pretty good.
Members of the elite five per cent of society which attends college, we expect this statistic to lift us out on top of the herd.

We're unconcerned that most of our educational costs are covered by the government, but in campus
Mock Parliament elections we vote for the parties promising free university tuition for high-school graduates.

We take these privileges for granted, and would guffaw at anyone who suggested we do anything in return. We're encouraged to feel this way by a tradition of ivory tower isolation.

Ornson who claimed higher education was a trust to be imparted to those who were not able to attend university themselves.

From the outset the students wanted their non-academic pupils to share both the intrinsic benefits and the social esteem to be enjoyed from college courses.

In the initial years of the mid-19th-century religion and the classics formed the major part of the curriculum. As educational emphasis shifted to the physical sciences and then the social sciences, the Studenters' program in turn expanded to fill these new needs.

What had been going on in Oslo for more than 100 years has recently spread around training is not always necessary.

A Studenters' teaching career does not end with graduation. Some teachers are grads who have gone into professional teaching, and continue to assist the adult education service. Other graduates - businessmen, engineers, etc. - who have begun to work in remote areas, have carried the service with them.

Now the service has a number of full-time graduates who conduct classes in mushrooming industrial centres, where films, books, and instruction wouldn't ordinarily exist.

What is there in it for the workers, clerks, farmers, and housewives who attend the University students who teach in Norway education scheme.

But not everywhere are university students oblivious to the masses on the other side of the cloistered walls. In Norway, a university education is something to be shared with non-academic brethren.

Each year more than 45,000 out-of-school Norwegians from 45 to 80 are taught subjects ranging from Greek to psychology, and the whole program - teaching, organization, and administration - is conducted by students.

The Norske Studenters' Friundervisning (adult education service) can trace its roots to the 1830's when students at the University of Oslo volunteered to give classes to children at orphanages in the town.

Thirty years later the children's program grew into an adult one. This transition was made on the suggestion of the Norwegian poet, Bj-

the country. Now the Students' is a nation-wide organization having centres in more than 150 areas.

But what demands does this program impose upon the teachers, who by day must revert to the other side of the lectern?

An undergraduate usually teaches a course per term, a course being 12 90-minute classes, one a week.

He (or she) receives some elementary lessons in methodology in summer seminars.
For their efforts, a contribution is made towards a student's tuition.

For academic subjects, a fea-cher must have passed one or two university courses in the subject he is to teach (roughly equivalent to two or three years of an honour course at U of T). For the recently-offered avocational courses (painting, drawing, modelling etc.) university courses? Any hope for a better job? Usually not. Courses are for the purpose of enlarging a liberal education, and learning to make better use of one's leisure time.

There are no examinations, and no marks are awarded (although on rare occasions a student can request a certificate showing he completed a course). But in every case the layman-student departs with a much broader understanding of past and present trends in intellectual thought.
Armies of Canadians are today demanding higher education. While universities, colleges, and professional schools are rapidly expanding to meet some of these needs, many persons just aren't going to get in.

Many of these inevitable frustrations could be eased by a Canadian program similar to the Norske Studenters. It's not that we don't have the time.

...and in this corner

By SHEILA LITHWICK

Women's tennis and outdoor archery teams were double winners this weekend in their respective intercollegiate tournament finals at McMaster and Queen's.

These wins mark the second and third consecutive years of outdoor archery and tennis supremacy for the Varsity women. The outdoor archery targets at Queen's George Richardson Stadium tallied 3,970 points for Toronto's winning foursome. This was seven points behind Toronto's 1962 intercollegiate outdoor record.

The only team even close to Toronto was a hard-fighting Queen's group that shot 3,845. Western and McMaster placed third and fourth respectively.

Juli Yamasaki (II PHE) established an outdoor archery record for the individual Columbia Round (four ends at 30, 40, & 50 yards) with her score of 562. Marg Wagstaff of Western set the old record in 1962 with 558.

The archers boasted an all-around team with Gail White (II PHE) placing first in individual scoring with 1,082 and Jan Forsdike (III PHE) fourth with 999.

The future looks bright if these gals work as well at the indoor tournament.

The big news on the tennis front is in the form of 5'6", dark-haired, (Trinity SHARE auction price — $28) Brenda Nunns (I Trin).

Miss Nunns, a member of the Canadian Junior Tennis Team, and more recently University of Toronto Interfaculty Tennis Champ, played a flawless net and back court game to make up a 4-0 record.

Her membership on the team has reinforced the three-year reign of Veronica Holdup (III PHE) on the asphalt courts. Since Miss Holdup joined Physical Education, Toronto has enjoyed two consecutive victorious years. This year proved no exception as she defeated all opponents in her second singles play.

Doubles; with Hildegard Balogh (III SMC), a veteran netter, and Carol Barrett (I UC), her freshman counterpart; equalled the other two results with four winning matches. The final results left Toronto with a perfect 12-point score, McGill with 8, McMaster 5, Queen's 3 and Western 2.

It is very evident to sports observers that Toronto harbors many individual champions. However, we do not have enough of the breed that make up good team members.

All but one (Ice Hockey) of last year's trophies symbolized personal triumphs.

We are proud of our stars. But where are our team players? Where is that breed of woman who overlooks personal glory for the thrill of team cooperation and team participation?

It is true the past has proven us a power in individual sports (any university can be if they encourage the right people to attend). However, it is hoped that the future will rebalance the scales for the team effort and raise the calibre of team play.

Soccerites outplay UWO but not on scoreboard

By KATY O'SULLIVAN

After soccer Blues' 2-1 loss at Western Saturday, even the Mustang coach admitted justice is missing somewhere. Varsity's controlled passing attack kept the ball in a constant scoring position yet Blues couldn't put it into the nets. Mustangs scored on their first shot on goal.

Western's rough-and-tumble style of play was purely defensive as they continually broke up Blues' forward drive. But with the ball in their possession Mustangs could not sustain an attack.

It was goalkeeper Irwin Satchd who helped save the day for Western. He was particularly effective in frustrating Blues' attempts to score from their many corner kicks.

This win gives Western a strong hold on first place with nine out of a possible ten points. Toronto is tied with Ryerson, four points apiece, for third. With no wins at all OAVC is in last place.

The only way Blues can cop the championship now is to win their four remaining league games, while Western must lose at least two of the games left on its schedule.

Fred Morgan led off the scoring for Western in Saturday's action at the 10-minute mark of the first period. Lorenzo Girones scored Western's winning goal when the game was five minutes into the second period. Bobby Lewis tallied for Varsity ten minutes later. Peter Haynes played an outstanding game for Toronto behind owo $-iougioDga as the half-back unit gain proved itself the driving force behind Blues' attack. Varsity was hampered, however, by the inability of its defence to act as a co-ordinated unit.

Blues will have their chance to avenge this defeat when they will be the match to prove that Varsity's greater ability and soccer know-how still wins games.

Next game on Blue's schedule is against Ryerson Thursday. Game time is 3 p.m. on the back campus.

IT'S A LONG WAY FROM MAC TO WESTERN

Chris is certainly making himself known in his first year in the Senior Intercollegiate League. He came to Mustangs this season after three years with McMaster, where he was a full-back. Although only 5'11" and 185 pounds his take-charge style of play shows why he was able to handle a fullback position. Chris made tackles all over the field from his corner line-backing post, picked up Israel's blocked kick to run for a touchdown, and made an interception in the final quarter.

The rest of the Mustang defence had their share of the glory as well. End Dick Suderman recovered two fumbles, one he converted into a touchdown and the other set up a t.d. Defensive end Mitchelson and halfbacks Rob Campbell and Bill Payne also picked off passes to thwart Varsity drives. And the rest of the defenders; middle guard John Gilbert, tackles Jack Cowin and Ross Nicholson, linebacker Pete Martin, and backs Robin Wearing and Jim Weber; helped bang Blues around like a pith ball in a wind storm.

The most obvious measure of Western's defensive work was the fact that Blues were credited with only three pass completions in the whole game. And actually Blues only completed one pass, the other two resulting from pass-interference penalties against 'Stangs. The lone completion, from Israel to Dave Galloway, didn't come until there were only two minutes and 40 seconds left in the game and Western was leading 52-8.

The only Blue Western couldn't contain was halfback Gerry Sternberg, who rushed for 108 yards on 19 carries, an average of nearly six yards per carry. But even this couldn't help Blues. After the game, amidst the bedlam in the Western dressing room, Chris was asked what he felt the main difference is between the Senior Intercollegiate League and Ontario Intercollegiate loop, in which he played with McMaster.

"In the other league," commented the ubiquitous Chris, "there are some great players on every team. But in this league, all the guys beside you are great."

This comment may be a bit of an overstatement, but on the basis of his teammates' play Saturday, you can see where his logic comes from. Oh yes, Chris also said he thought Blues blocked as well on the corners as Queen's did in its game against Mustangs. . . Too bad the scoreboard didn't record this fact.

Track title to Blues for Third year

Varsity's Rod Chintu (left) breasts the tape just inches ahead of Western's Hlke Van der Wal to win the 880-yard run in the Intercollegiate Track Meet at Varsity Stadium Saturday. Chintu also won the 440-yard event and was a member of Varsity's winning mile relay.

Ruggerites win and break Aggies' jinx

A UTRFC

Syndicated Service

Varsity Ruggers Blues buried a four-year jinx Saturday by drubbing Ontario Agricultural College Aggies 36-3. Until Saturday's rout, perennial champion Blues had been unable to buy a win on Aggies home pitch.

Blues' overwhelming win was simply a matter of power, power, and more power. Blues' scrum played flawlessly, and their backs ran circles around the Aggie forwards. Blues began timidly enough, only scoring three unconverted tries in the first half. But after the intermission they roared back for 24 points, registering six tries and three converts.

John McNeil led the way with three scores, while Bill Stow, Doug Bosomworth, Rod Sanders, Ian Sinclair, Paul Gray, and Bill Charleton carried across on single occasions.

Wilson converted twice, and Bill Stow added another. In the over-all team effort, several Blues stood out. Six-foot seven-inch Jim Humphries dominated the line-outs, while hooker Bill Stow continually won the ball in the scrum. Prop Mike Joy gave the scrum all the weight it needed, and was Blues' most effective tackler.

In London, the Intermediates rolled over Western 25-0. Bob McGee led Toronto scorers by booting ten points, while John O'Brien contributed six with a try and a penalty goal. Single tries went to Brian Hull, Keith Boughton, and Mike Treadwell.

The win put the Intermediates in a position to clinch the Intermediate championship in next weekend's home match against Mustangs.

By UNCLE HARRY

Without any disturbance of the dust long-gathered at its base, the Tait Mackenzie Trophy remains in a Hart House trophy case. But Varsity's third successive intercollegiate track and field championship was not captured without a fight.

Toronto won the meet by four points over McMaster, but it was a come-from-behind struggle all afternoon. After ten of 17 events were completed, McMaster had a nine-point lead.

The still-remaining triple jump was expected to give McMaster a slim one-point lead, as the gun started the final track event of the afternoon, the mile relay. After Blues traded positions several times in the closely-contested six-team field, anchor man Rod Chintu overcame a 20-yard deficit with a spectacular driving finish to chest the tape for the win.

With the mile-relay victory, the championship was mathematically assured. It was only anti-climatic that Mac salvaged two points, instead of the predicted five, in the triple jump.

With Chintu and Bruce Kidd each garnering two wins, Coach Fred Foot's tracksters came through as anticipated.

But the depth of Mac's trackmen nullified Blue wins on several occasions. For example, Bruce Kidd's three-mile victory and Gurston Dacks' fifth-place finish netted Toronto six points, while McMaster compiled seven points with second and third-place finishes.

Accordingly most of the credit for the win goes to Field Coach Hal Brown's athletes. A more liberal point-system (5-4-3-2-1 compared to 5-3-2-1 in former years) meant that place performances were more important than ever before.

Peter Aukis spotted his discus opponents more than 30 pounds, but had no difficulty on out-throwing them all.

And the persevering efforts of Pete Carmichael and Craig Cook in the high jump, Mat's Raudoja and Gerry Marsden in the vault, Art Bennett in the javelin, and Adrian Wood in the triple jump helped greatly to eat into Mac's early lead.

In the nine-school competition, Western placed third with 41 points, while Queen's with 33 and Windsor with 25 placed fourth and fifth respectively.

Despite ideal conditions at Varsity Stadium, only two records were lowered. McMaster's Frank Baines blasted the furlong in 21.7 to better the existing 22.1 for 220 yards. Baines also won the 100 yards in 9.9.

For the third time in as many years, Bruce Kidd bettered the mile mark. His 4:10.6 performance Saturday was 1.1 seconds faster than a year. Most exciting race of the afternoon was Chintu's narrow 88-yard win over Western's Hylke Van Der Wal. Coming out of the final bend, Van Der Wal led his Toronto opponent by five yards. But Chintu's explosive kick gobbled the gap, and at the wire he was ahead by inches.

Frank Baines edged out four other double winners for the Hec Phillips Trophy as the meet's outstanding performer. In addition to Chintu and Kidd, Queen's Bill White swept both hurdles events, while OAC's Sonny Akpaia leaped to victories in both the long-and triple-jump.

On the infield, Baines slightly pulled a hamstring while anchoring Mac to a sprint relay win, and was unable to run the mile relay. It might have been a big break for Blues... Among the officials was former Varsity star Bill Crothers... Despite summer weather, crowd was sparse.

JIM YOUNG BACK TO OLD FORM

Golden Gaels down McGill 26-19

Montreal - Queen's Golden Gaels unleashed a powerful running attack, exploiting weakness in McGill's defensive line, to down the Redmen 26-1 in Intercollegiate Senior Football action Saturday.

Jim Young led the Gaels' attack with two touchdowns, a single and a convert. Bruce Stewart and Bill Edwards also scored touchdowns for Queen's.

For McGill, Willie Lambert ran for two touchdowns and booted a convert. End Don Taylor scored the other McGill touchdown.

Queen's opened the scoring on the first play of the game and were never behind. The opening Gaels' kick-off was repeated when McGill was called offside and Young then booted deep into the Redmen's end zone, where Graeme Strathee was downed for the point.

All-star McGill halfback Willie Lambert widened his margin in the Intercollegiate scoring race, collecting 13 points to give him 38, compared with 28 for Queen's Bill Edwards. Edwards was good for only one touchdown.

Queen's made the score 7-0 when they scored an unconverted touchdown at 5:45 of the opening quarter. McGill's fullback Peter Howlett fumbled on his 36-yard line and tackle Tom Beynon recovered for the Gaels.

A reverse sent halfback Bayne Norrie 36-yards around right end for the touchdown.

McGill came back quickly when Lambert romped 28 yards on a screen pass after the kickoff. Glen St. John threw 52 yards to end Larry Cullen and Lambert ran around from the Queen's one-yard stripe for the touchdown, giving Queen's a 7-6 lead. The convert attempt was wide.

Queen's scored their second touchdown at 13:15 of the first quarter. From the McGill 11, Edwards skirted left end to score, leaving Queen's with a 13-6 lead.

Leon Abbott kicked a 35-yd. single for McGill in the third quarter and Young finished off a Queen's march with a 53-yard run for a converted touchdown.

On the second play of the fourth quarter, quarterback Cal Connor threw a 17-yard pass to Queen's end Bruce Stewart for a touchdown. Young missed the convert and Queen's led 26-7.

Suddenly the McGill offense seemed to catch fire. Lambert took St. John's screen pass and galloped 89 yards down the sideline for an unconverted touchdown.

With three minutes left, St. John tossed a 3-yard pass to wingback Don Taylor who made a spectacular catch on the Queen's one and fell over the line for a touchdown.

Rowers defeat North American champions

Varsity's senior rowing crew defeated Buffalo West Side Rowing Club this weekend in Buffalo. It was a big win for the Toronto team as Buffalo's crew is the current North American lightweight champions.

U of T was not pushed in the two-team race and won easily by 2½ lengths.

Varsity hoped that the highly regarded team from Syracuse would compete in the race but they never showed up. U of T's crew passed up a regularly scheduled Intercollegiate regatta to row against the Buffalo team but they will compete next weekend at a full Intercollegiate regatta at Western.

BLACK SATURDAY

By SHEL KRAKOFKY

Associate Sports Editor

LONDON, Ont. — A third-string quarterback and a dogged Western defensive team all but annihilated Varsity Blues from the OQAA playoff picture here Saturday.

Ted Miller, who had never played quarterback in the Senior Intercollegiate Football League, was rushed into the game at the beginning of the second quarter to replace injured Woody Deschamps.

On his first play as a quarterback, Miller hit Art Froese with a perfect pass in the end zone for an 18-yard touchdown. This was one of five touchdowns passes Miller tossed in Western Mustangs 52-15 humiliation of Blues.

Miller was the first-string quarterback for Western's Junior Colts last year and his favorite play was the rollout run. Because of his running ability and his deceptiveness, he, like Varsity's Harold Hall, was converted to a halfback where he has been playing since the season started.

Mustang coach John Metras decided not to dress first-string signal caller Bob Israel because of a pulled hamstring muscle and it wasn't until Friday that Miller worked out at the q.b. position for the first time since the season started.

Miller had a lot of opportunity to handle the ball as Western's defensive unit cramped Varsity's running and passing attacks with aggressive coverage and tackling.

On six occasions the tough Mustang defense dropped Varsity quarterback Bryce Taylor for losses when he dropped back to pass. It was Taylor's first appearance as Blues' starting quarterback in two seasons with Varsity and compared to Miller's baptism, Taylor's inauguration was a disaster.

He completed only 2 passes in 13 attempts and both these came on pass interference calls.

The Western Homecoming Weekend crowd of 10,000 had plenty to cheer about in the rout which produced seven Mustang touchdowns. The game started out as a tight defensive battle and Mustangs were only leading 3-0 at the end of the first quarter on the strength of Jim Weber's 28-yard field goal.

But in came Miller and out went Blues.

Blues were stalled on their first sequence after Froese's t.d. and Jam Israel's punt was blocked by Jim Turner. George Chris picked up the ball and ran for the touchdown.

On the ensuing kickoff, Blues' Mike Kelly fumbled and 'Stangs recovered. By this time Miller was already an experienced quarterback

—vsp czarnecki

This was one of the two completed passes that Varsity quarterback Bryce Taylor was credited with. Both completions came on pass interference calls. Here 'Stangs Rob Campbell (24) interferes with Blues' Ken Davison (29).

and on the first play from scrimmage and his second as Western's q.b., he fired his second touchdown pass in as many tries, this one going to halfback Bill Sasso.

In the space of 1½ minutes, Mustangs had scored 21 points and clinched the game.

In the second half, Miller used his speed and ran the ball himself for 55 yards in 7 tries and caught his breath long enough to throw another touchdown pass to Sasso, and two to end Pat McConnell. McConnell is also 'Stangs punter and he put his foot to the leather a total of seven times for an impressive 47.4-yard average.

Dick Suderman got Western's other t.d. when he recovered halfback Gerry Sternberg ran for Blues' turn of a missed field goal. Sternberg ran for Blues' only touchdowns, both on scampers around end. This was the first game that Sternberg started as an offensive halfback and he was the games leading ball-carrier with 108 yards in 19 carries.

Saturday marked the halfway point in the season for all teams and at this point in the schedule, it would take a foolish optimism to think Blues are still in the running for the Yates Cup. With each of the teams playing each other once more in the second half of the season, the only way Blues could force a playoff is to win their remaining three games while Western loses all of theirs.

McGill would have to lose to Toronto and Queen's and beat Western while Queen's would have to beat Western and McGill but lose to Toronto in the last game of the season. Its all wishful thinking.

QUICK KICKS: Premier John Roberts, a native of 'Stangtown but an alumnus of U of T, took in the game and stood up when the Blue and White band played Varsity's song. He was sitting in a predominantly Western section and was the only visible Toronto person off his feet . . .

Varsity quarterback, Jim Israel played defensive halfback most of the game and intercepted two passes . . . Ted Miller is the smallest player in the league, tipping the scales at 148 pounds. He's 5'8" tall . . .

Varsity's defensive tackle Ray Reynolds was sporting a cast on his arm after the game . . . middle guard Dave McCullough is still being bothered by a bad ankle . . . defensive halfback Harry Watson suffered a bruised hip . . . McConnell caught four passes for 103 yards . . . Miller completed nine of 17 passes . . . Mustang halfback Art Froese lugged the ball 85 yards in 16 carries and caught three passes for 37 yards.

Western 52 Varsity 15

FIRST QUARTER

Western—Jim Weber kicked a 28-yard field goal three plays after Mustangs gained possession on Barry Mitchelson's interception of a Bryce Taylor pass.

Varsity 0—Western 3 SECOND QUARTER

Western—Ted Miller replaced Woody Deschamps at quarterback and threw 18 yards to Art Froese in the end zone on his first play. Weber converted.

Varsity 0—Western 10

Western—On the next sequence, Jim Israel's punt was blocked by Mustangs Jim Turner and George Christ recovered to run 25 yards for the touchdown. Weber converted.

Varsity 0—Western 17

Western—Mike Kelly fumbled the following kickoff and on the first play Miller threw 24 yards for a t.d. to Bill Sasso. Weber converted.

Varsity 0—Western 24

Varsity—Israel punted into the end zone from the 33-yard line and Pete Martin conceded the single point.

Varsity 1—Western 24

Western—In the last minute of the half, Pat McConnell boomed a punt 71 yards to Varsity's dead ball line for a single.

Varsity 1—Western 25 THIRD QUARTER

Western—Miller again hit Sasso with a t.d. pass from the 25-yard line. Blues had lost the ball on downs at their own 40-yard line to give Western possession. Weber converted.

Varsity 1—Western 32

Varsity—On the last play of the quarter, Gerry Sternberg ran around left end for four yards and a touchdown. A Western fumble and two penalties had given Blues possession at the four-yard line. Taylor converted.

Varsity 8—Western 32 FOURTH QUARTER

Western—Sternberg fumbled the ball on returning a missed field-goal attempt by Weber and Dick Suderman recovered running five yards for the t.d. Weber converted on his second attempt after Blues were offside on the first try, which was missed.

Varsity 8—Western 39

Western—Miller and McConnell combined on a 65-yard pass-and-run play for a touchdown. Weber booted his sixth convert.

Varsity 8—Western 46

Western—Miller again hit McConnell for a t.d., this play covering 29 yards. Weber's convert attempt was wide.

Varsity 8—Western 52

Varsity—Sternberg carried seven yards in the last minute of the game for his second t.d. Taylor converted.

METRAS FORMULA PAYS RICH DIVIDENDS

It's obvious after three straight setbacks for Blues that people are going to pose the question — "What's wrong with our dearly beloved team that was supposed to give Queen's Golden Gaels a run for the intercollegiate football championship?" But what value is there in the wake of such a humiliating defeat as Blues suffered at Western Saturday to delve into this complicated problem — especially when there are aspects of the game that can be commended.

Mustangs displayed a grandiose exuberance of offensive power in bombing the Blue and White 52-15. But the Western offence wasn't that good. Varsity was just that bad. . . and Blues generally made so many fundamental mistakes to make the Western task all the easier.

Of the four teams on the field, the two offensive and two defensive squads, the Western defence turned the most formidable effort. And that performance was the best I have witnessed in four years of covering intercollegiate football. In fact, the work of the Western defence on Saturday rivaled anything I've ever seen in any football game.

As a quick analysis of Western's defensive play, it can be mentioned that of Mustangs' seven touchdowns, four came as a result, either directly or indirectly, of big defensive plays. And Jim Weber's field goal followed a defensive interception by Barry Mitchelson.

What Western coach Johnny Metras feeds his ball players before games is his own secret, but the formula certainly works. Rarely does a Western team, good or bad, give less than 100 per cent to the man. And Saturday was no exception, unless you say Mustangs were more fired up than they've ever been. From my vantage point behind the less-than-clear plastic window of the Little Stadium press box, Western linebackers George Chris and Jim Turner were the best players on the field.

Turner constantly bypassed the Varsity offensive line with a tremendous blitz to harass quarterbacks Bryce Taylor and Jim Israel. In all, the Mustang defence threw Taylor for a loss six times and Turner was the most prominent man in the barrage. Taylor saw Turner during the game nearly as much as he saw the football.

It was a blocked punt by this three-year veteran that led to Western's second touchdown in the second quarter. After Turner pounced on kicker Israel to deflect the ball, Chris scooped up the loose pigskin and romped 25 yards for the score.

Division looms between peace groups

The decisions reached at the Canadian Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament conference in Montreal this weekend could lead to a division between the adult and student disarmament groups, it was learned Tuesday night.

The five day CCND conference will be receiving a draft policy statement from which it will attempt to formulate a guiding policy, said Art Pape executive secretary of the CCND.

A debate within both the CCND and the Combine Universities Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament is currently centred around the differences between a radicalist and reformist group, Mr. Pape said. He is also the Federal Chairman of the CUCND.

There is a great possibility that the policy decided upon by the CCND conference will be unacceptable to the student group. If this is the case it is quite likely the CUCND conference, also being held in Montreal, in two weeks time, will take an independent and different approach to policy, Mr. Pape said.

Such an approach would constitute a basic division in Canada's two chief peace groups.

The basis of the policy conflict lies in the difference between a positive and negative approach to disarmament policy, another reliable source said.

It was reported that most CUCND members wish a more positive policy which would provide a more vigorous opposition to militarism and military alliances, while supporting a world community as opposed to nation states.

This approach would be in opposition to the present policy of a negative protest against individual events by such activities as demonstrations in front of embassies.

Earlier Tuesday the University of Toronto CUCND chairman, Terry Lee (II Vic), called for more concrete action for peace. He also asked for more discussion on the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, saying the military alliance has reached its peak and is now going downhill.

At the same meeting Mel Katz (III New) and Barry O'Neill were appointed U of T delegates to the CCND conference.

Skule blamed for 170-book Devonshire heist

About 170 books were stolen from the library at Devonshire House, the professional residence, it was learned Tuesday.

The Dean of Residence, C. S. Lennox, said that he thought it looked like a prank. "But it's a bit unusual as far as pranks go," he added. "There must have been quite a bit of work attached to it."

"However," he said, "they didn't chose the books very well. They took chiefly novels and there were some quite valuable books that weren't touched."

An anonymous phone-call to The Varsity from someone claiming to be an artsman from a college other than St. Michael's, said the prank was directed at the Engineers.

"We just felt they should be taken down a peg or two," he said. "The only ones who think the Engineers are great are the Engineers themselves."

He invited the Engineers to search for the books and "to put something into The Varsity" if unsuccessful. "Then we'll give them a few clues."

Officials of Devonshire are rather puzzled at how the feat was accomplished. "It takes quite a bit of work to take away 170 books," said Mr. Lennox.

The anonymous informer said the prank was performed about 2 a.m. Monday. "It was really ingeniously done. No one would ever think of it."

Don Munro (IV APSC), president of the Engineering Society and a resident of Devonshire, termed the prank "hardly well-located as only 33 per cent of this residence is made up of Engineers. There are more Meds here."

Don Cullen, of the Bohemian Embassy, beams when appointed Homecoming Show MC, but has second thoughts after first rehearsal.

New Democrat signs illegally using engineers' emblem

The Engineering Society Tuesday accused the campus New Democrats of using "University of Toronto trees" to associate themselves falsely with the Skulemen.

The complaint concerned green and white signs portraying a hard hat with the word "Skule" on it. They were advertising a speech by Ed Phillips concerning "the Engineer and the New Democrats."

"The Engineering Society does not in any way sanction the . . . lecture nor the implications of the topic," protested the Society.

Writers needed

. . . The Varsity will print a literary edition this year in an attempt to provide an outlet for creative writing.

The cancellation of Jargon by the Students' Administrative Council this year means that there will be no vehicle of a campus-wide nature for creative writers.

The Varsity feels there are many writers who would appreciate an opportunity to have their efforts published. This is the reason for the literary edition.

Manuscripts of poetry, short stories, plays, novels and divers items of a literary nature should be submitted to P. O. Moude at The Varsity office no later than Nov. 22, 1963.

Due to space requirements, excerpts of plays may be used if the author indicates the passages he wishes printed.

If the play is short enough it might be possible to print the full text.

Anyone interested is invited to participate but the Nov. 22 deadline must be observed.

NDP elects Brewin

The forthcoming Model Parliament elections will be a "protest against the backbiting in Ottawa, because politics can be more than just bickering back and forth," New Democrat Parliamentary Leader Mary Brewin (II Trin) said in her pre-election speech Monday.

Miss Brewin, whose father, Andrew Brewin is an NDP MP in the federal parliament, decried the present "lack of dynamic leadership on the University of Toronto campus."

Also elected at the general membership meeting were two vice-presidents: Helen Scott (II Vic) and Hillel Steiner (IV UC); a Social director: Conrad Ayasse; and four committee chairmen: Steiner, Francois Lemieux (III Law), John Cowan (III UC) and Mike McDonald (III SMC).

end, Oct. 31, is available at the Queen's and Berkeley hotels in Montreal.

The Berkeley Hotel offers a special rate to students of $9 per double room per night. No rates were quoted by the Queen's.

Reservations should be made early, not through the SAC, but directly with the hotel.

CUSO needs $$$

The Canadian University Students Overseas — the "Canadian Peace Corps" — will need $250,000 to finance its 150 volunteers next year.

The announcement was made at last weekend's CUSO conference in Ottawa, attended by representatives from 35 universities.

CUSO plans to approach the federal government for a 50 per cent contribution to the proposed figure.

The meeting voted to consign all volunteers for a two-year period of service. The West Indian volunteers will be excused from the ruling.
CUSO's summer program was discontinued.

Skating starts

The Blue and White Skating Club will sharpen its skates for another season at an introductory meeting at 5 p.m. in Rm. 135 of University College.

The three-year-old club provides skating instruction for interested students in dancing and free skating. It also produces the annual Winter Carnival skating show, the Ice Follies.

Last winter lessons were given outdoors. This year, however, the club moves indoors to Varsity Arena. It is hoped the new arrangement will attract more foreign students.

The club is also associated with the program of the Women's Athletic Association which gives physical education credits for skating.

The club has regular examinations in dancing and figures given by the Canadian

Treasure Van

A wife-catcher is the perfect Christmas gift for the man who has almost everything.

That unique item from Africa, opium pipes from China and an unlimited variety of handicrafts from many countries are available this year at Treasure Van.

Treasure Van is a project sponsored by the World University Service in Canada to help students in 30 other countries. In each of these countries handicrafts, often one of a kind, and all made of local products, are sold in similar sales.

At the University of Toronto, Treasure Van will be held in the U of T drill hall, 119 St. George St., Nov. 4-8, from 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m., and from 7 to 9:30 p.m.

And the wife-catcher? It's ception that Devonshire is an Engineering residence," he said. But it's really a profes-shire.

Mr. Lennox said officials had these have been unsuccessful.

The library committee is rather worried about the in-

Call engineers 'dregs of U of T society'

tion. Huzel said a failure of this university is that the professional faculties fail to turn out "well-rounded men."

He said the primary purpose of a university is to produce individuals — "to rid ourselves of the herd instinct."

Individual thought is stunted at the University of Toronto because, Huzel said, "not enough critical hell is being raised."

Regarding professors as "ivory-tower gods" stifles any attempt to establish the intellectual community which Toronto strives for, he added.

Alex Gray (III Vic), also speaking for the government, deplored the lack of intellectual atmosphere in what is supposed to be a liberal arts college.

Over-enrolment and the lack of residences destroy the desired atmosphere, he said.

"U of T has a good reputation, but its purpose is not being fulfilled."

One of the major reasons is that the typical arts student is a "street-car student" who must spend about two hours a day travelling.

The opposition, supported by speaker John McKay

Engineers are the "dregs of U of T society," a debate audience at Victoria College was told Tuesday night.

"The bridge-builders of tomorrow are the egg-throwers of today," said Jim Huzel (III Vic) during a Vic-St. Michael's debate on the resolution that the U of T is not fulfilling its purpose. The resolution passed 20 to 10.

South Africa may crush student movement

PHILADELPHIA (Special)

— The National Union of South African Students — a predominantly white, anti-apartheid movement — is expected to be dealt a death-blow by the government next month, informed sources say.

The prediction follows increased government criticism of NUSAS opposition to segregation measures. The government particularly complained about NUSAS protests at the current trial of leaders of the African National Congress.

Such verbal attacks have customarily preceded government bans on organizations.

During August, Justice Minister B. J. Vorster threatened NUSAS and warned parents of participants to investigate their activities.

"It is high time this warning was given," he said, "in the light of certain developments which will probably be disclosed in the course of this year."

Calls Arbor Room home after 30 years

Looking back on 30 years of service in Hart House, Dorothy Padget said "its like home to me."

Miss Padget, supervisor of the Arbor Room, said: "Hart House is a nice place to work. Everybody is very good to you."

Last week the chef and the kitchen staff presented her with a large cake which she shared with her co-workers.

Miss Padget began as the Hart House laundry clerk and then went to work in the Grad Hall.

She worked for a while in the Great Hall and then went to the Faculty Union. During the Second World War she returned to the Great Hall in charge of the servery, dining hall and dish room. She has been in the Arbor Room since it opened in 1954.

Speaking of the many students that she got to know, she said: "Its like looking after your own family."

UC Lit bosses will defend their existence

The top officials of the University College Literary and Athletic Society will defend their own existence today.

In a debate to be held in the Junior Common Room at 4 p.m., President Philip Epstein (III UC) and Treasurer David Greenspan (II UC) will debate the negative of: "Resolved that the literary and athletic society of UC should be abolished."

Pressing the attack will be Bruce Lewis (II UC) and Gary Perly (II UC).

Debate director John Cowan (III UC) said the losing team has an alternative — "resign or be shot."

The debate, held in parliamentary style, will be open for speakers from the floor, and all members of UC will be eligible for the vote.

United Appeal asks for help from U of T

The Metropolitan Toronto United Appeal is three weeks old. Today it comes to present its case and ask for consideration at the University of Toronto.

The appeal comes proudly. Last year, just as in most years, this university community found a place for the appeal among a long list of other charitable campaigns. Varsity gave $1600 last year.

In return, Varsity's Settlement for children and troubled or new citizens — in Grange Park got back $97,000 to work with.

In the past, donations have been accepted at the SAC office in sealed envelopes. A receipt for the amount noted on the envelope is given. The campus campaign has become no more spectacular than that.

The Settlement and its student helpers continue strongly. The United Appeal will continue to help the area south of the university — with our continued support.

the Tarheel weekend

The rejection of the only Negro applicant for membership on the SAC weekend exchange to the University of North Carolina has resulted in criticism. Unfortunately, most of this criticism has been misdirected.

Diana Bennett, SAC chairman of weekend exchanges, has suffered most and least deserves it.

Persons superficially reading the report of the incident in The Varsity Monday were quick to yell "discrimination". The hunt was on for somebody to blame. Miss Bennett unhappily got caught in crossfire.

Miss Bennett actually tried to give Miss Yearwood every possible consideration. As the report stated, Miss Bennett encouraged Miss Yearwood to apply for the Tarheel exchange. There was no discrimination against Miss Yearwood because she is a Negro. The point is this:

Certain SAC members, aware of the racial situation in North Carolina, declined to take advantage of an opportunity to present the Tarheelers with a unique point of view.

Instead of following Miss Bennett's example of courageous leadership, these other members cautiously sought refuge in fluffy-minded attitudes all too common among SAC representatives.

These attitudes involve a fear of involvement in basic issues of society. They involve a search for bubbly "enthusiasm" — that sort of harmless but nauseating noisiness that characterizes what we may call the "SAC type".

These attitudes are the ones that cause students of this university to lose confidence in the very concept of student government.

the art of politics

Politics deals with analyzing and directing power, the social power produced by the accumulated energies and wills of individuals. Politics is, therefore, concerned with understanding and controlling people.

Does this imply that politics is the realm of the unscrupulous, the Manhattan hustlers of mass persuasion? Does this mean that politics must be left to the pimps of "personalities"?

This would appear to be true from our observations of politics on this campus in recent years, and of the recent provincial election.

Why is this so? Does politics inherently entail the use of such methods, or are such methods dependent not on the nature of politics, but on the goals toward which it is directed?

We believe that the goal to which politics is directed is the key to the methods used. If politics is the sphere of understanding and controlling people for the purpose of enhancing personal power, then mass persuasion is the key. If personal power is identified with accumulating wealth, then corruption is the logical outcome of mass persuasion.

But it is possible to control and direct the energies of individuals not by the use of powers of persuasion in its advertising or monetary dress, but with the power of ethical convictions produced by an informal intelligence and expressed in a clear and positive program.

The problem is not that all politics is power politics. This is true. The problem is what those powers are directed towards, and what powers are used to push in the designated direction.

We vote for Aristotle's definition. Politics is the master art in the service of ethics.

Statement on Tarheel exchange

The following is a statement issued by the Students' Administrative Council on weekend exchanges.

The weekend exchanges sponsored by the SAC are open to all full-time University of Toronto students. Selection of participants is made on the basis of written application and oral interview, under the direction of the weekend committee of council. In the case of the present exchange with the University of North Carolina, there were 25 positions to be filled from among 100 applicants. There is no fool-proof selection procedure which can assure that the 25 chosen are exactly those who will best represent this university and who will most benefit from such an encounter: however, it is upon these criteria that the committee makes its selection.

The exchanges were widely publicized by means of posters and Varsity advertisements, and there was a heavy response. This year for the first time, posters were placed in FROS house, for the express purpose of attracting overseas students. Council has full confidence in the results of the selections by the Week-ends Committee. The SAC has received no communication from the University of North Carolina suggesting that we should impose racial limitations upon our selection of participants. If such pressures were either expressed or implied, council would probably refuse to sponsor the weekend on the grounds that SAC activities must be open to all Toronto students.

On the other hand, council would not choose an applicant on the basis of race rather than merit for this denies the right of equal opportunity in student affairs. Furthermore, such consideration can imply a form of paternalism which, in fact, is inverse discrimination.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Negro representation

It has been with the greatest of interest that I have been following the latest developments in the case of The People vs. The Week-ends Committee.

I certainly would not suggest that Miss Yvonne Yearwood's application for the Tarheel exchange was rejected because she was a Negro, but I do wonder about the actual reasons for her rejection. One of the interviewers is quoted as saying that Miss Yearwood "did not carry herself well," a statement which I feel is a slur upon a very fine young lady.

The Weekends Committee has informed me that one of their aims was to make the group as representative as possible of the campus. Who now, I wonder, will represent the Negro students here?

According to the Week-ends Committee's own publicity, the primary topic of discussion on Tarheel is to be segregation. It seems incomprehensible to me that they can plan seriously to discuss such a topic with no Negroes present.

Not only are there to be no Negroes on the exchange, but no white activists either.

There has been more than one such rejection in the past two years.

Why, I wonder, are these people not to be represented? Surely, I hope, not because they might generate the type of controversy which any intelligent discussion of this problem so badly needs.

I do not lay the blame for this situation at the feet of any one individual, but do feel that all who partake in continuing such a situation must share in such blame.

These exchange weekends, it appears, are nice, quiet social affairs and not the intelligent interchange of ideas that University of Toronto students expect them to be.

I, for one, strenuously object to the fact that my SAC fees are used to pay for other people's party-going.

Gary H. Perly (II U.C.)

Comments on rejection

Sir:

Miss Yearwood's unfortunate rejection as an applicant for the Tarheel weekend (which, I confess, has jarred me considerably) occasions also and not in the least an apprehensive regard for the situation of her interviewers — in whose chair we onlookers might well be called to sit!

The real tragedy, of course, ought not to stem merely from the fact as such that a dark-skinned girl was not accepted on a weekend to a predominantly white Southern university. For, on the one hand, there were (apparently) many other girls who did not pass into the favourable judgment of Misses Charles and Bennett; while on the other hand, I feel certain (from her own quoted remarks) that Miss Yearwood's prime interest was not to travel to Carolina as a living symbol of Northern moral superiority or of righteous defiance or the like.

Rather Miss Yearwood sought in her own way (or at least ought to have) as did each of the other applicants, to encounter first-hand the situation of the Southern student, with all its attendant social complexities. And it was on her own ability, as a U. of T. student, to meet and discuss these situations that her acceptance or rejection should have hung.

And the real tragedy lies here: The tragedy is that Miss Yearwood has indeed a strong case for believing that her acceptance or rejection did not hang from this last category of things alone. And her interviewers — whatever their criteria for judging in "normal" cases, and moreover whether their judgment were favourable or unfavourable as regards Miss Yearwood's own expectations — knew this too!

The core of the tragedy is, then, that, given all the tub-thumping and flag-waving and symbol-juggling pro or con in the fight for racial equality, we have become greatly confused in the matter of face-to-face personal decision. Where the situation calls for judgment on a person, we become entangled in a web of ethical or quasi-ethical pro's and con's. Where a decision ought to be accepted solely as an evaluation of one's qualifications as an individual, the interviewee has all too good reason to suspect infiltration of other, topical but still in the end irrelevant, matters.

As onlookers, we cannot determine whether, in the final decision, Miss Yearwood's racial qualifications in fact swung her case. It is, our business, however, to ensure by our own daily strivings and decisions, that the tension — that is the tension between the truly personal and the merely symbolic — be resolved quite definitely in favour of the personal.

Might I ask: "Did we evaluate Miss Yearwood solely as a token in the current racial situation, or was the in fact an honest-to-goodness, personal applicant for the Tarheel Weekend?"

M. Yaffe (SGS).

Sir:

Miss Yearwood's exclusion from the Tarheel exchange, reported in The Varsity Oct. 21, 1963, is a shameful example of the exchange program's discrimination. Discrimination not just of someone because they are of another culture but also because they do not conform to the stereotyped ideals the 'selection' committee reflect. Perhaps Miss Yearwood and many of the other 75 did not have the required "personality," "social grace," "connections" or "$30."

Well, if this is so I say, "they must have other qualities and interests which are much more important both in our society in general and to the university community in particular." I suspect that the committee's approval of the right ones has again doomed the various exchanges to be social gatherings of like-minded people and will eventually subject these projects to scornful ridicule, if this is not already the case.

By the way U of T has again given up a chance for real campus involvement in basic issues. All of this because "she didn't carry herself as well." As well as who? — her interviewers?

Naomi Jolliffe (II Vic).

Opposes Model Parliament Reform

By LEN SHIFRIN

Never again need you search from room to room trying to remember where you left your plug-in portable telephone.

No more will you need to hold down your feather-light princess phone with one hand, to keep it from tipping over, while you dial with the other.

The brand-new, ultra modern Stand-Up Wall Phone ends these frustrations forever.

Fumbling with receivers while trying to figure which end belongs at the ear and which at the mouth is a thing of the past. The new Stand-Up Wall Phone has a special built-right-on adjustable mouthpiece, while the new smaller receiver is especially fitted for the ear alone.

Perhaps the game "un-inventions" demonstrated above will never achieve the mercurial popularity of the recent Swifties fad, but it's an interesting reminder of how what we improved upon and discarded yesterday can often be made to sound like the promised land of the future.

This came to mind as I read the Model Parliament un-reforms proposed by R. G. Evans, writing in this space last week.

When The Varsity raised its editorial voice in support of the "new" concept in Model Parliaments, my amusement turned to amazement.

Few institutions match the turnover rate of a university. Student memories go back four, five, at most six years.

There is a great tendency to imagine things to have always been as they are now. When a change is proposed it must be new.

In the case of the proposed changes in Model Parliament, this is far from being so.

For many years the U of T Model Parliament was a chaotic, free-for-all. Any group which could garner a few votes was a party, and the Parliaments were regarded, and rightly so, as Mock, rather than Model Parliaments. Typical of the entrants was the George III Loyalist Party. Its platform: the recovery and annexation of the lost Thirteen Colonies of the Atlantic.

Gag party vied with gag party for the support of an increasingly disgusted student electorate which soon lost interest entirely and left the parliamentary jokers to their own amusement.

It was from this background that a small group of students, interested in promoting serious political discussion on campus, succeeded in evolving the present Model Parliament system.

In order to eliminate the gag parties it was determined that only groups representing parties which had contested in the previous federal election would be eligible.

In order to avoid the constant overturning of one minority government after another, with no party having the opportunity to present or debate its program, it was decided that the winning party would receive an automatic three-seat majority.

Contesting election armed for the first time with serious programs, the parties ran on platforms consisting of only three or four planks apiece.

It was not until 1960 that a campus political club first undertook to prepare an entire political platform for the campus vote.

That was the old CCF club and its efforts were rewarded by an impressed student body which elected it to form the government of Model Parliament for the first (and only) time.

Since then, every political club has each year formulated a complete election manifesto, outlining its position on all national issues. Early in the year each club sets up a series of policy committees, sub-committees and seminar groups, each responsible for a different area of policy.

These committees usually invite experts in their field to meet with them, delegate research responsibility to each of their members, and after about two months of study, report back to the entire club on their findings.

Thus are the party programs drawn up.

Three to four hundred students are involved annually in this process.

It should be pointed out that the campus clubs are in no way bound in the drawing up of these programs by the policies of their national parties.

In fact, the campus clubs have always taken pride in their claim of being "way ahead" of their senior parties in embracing new ideas and concepts.

In 1960 voters in the Model Parliament elections numbered 1,700.

This number has grown steadily in every year since. Last year student voters totalled almost 5,000.

Model parliamentarians point to this with pride.

As students keenly interested in political affairs and concerned with the disinterest with which many of their fellow students view public affairs, this three-fold increase represents a considerable success for their efforts. The energetic distribution of party programs and extensive debate and discussion of issues during the campaign, the people-to-people approach of seeking out students in coffee shops and foyers, handing out literature and "talking up their programs" has resulted in tripling the number of politically interested students in just three years.

Not so, reply their critics. The additional voters are voting for the razzmatazz and campaign gimmicks, not the issues.

Can such a charge be answered?

Surprisingly enough, it can. The facts refute it decisively.

For years the surest results of any year's vote were those at St. Michael's and Trinity. Whatever the campus-wide trend, St. Mike's could be relied upon to vote Liberal by a margin of at least 3 to 1, and Trinity to vote Tory by the same margin.

Last year the Liberals carried Trinity while the Conservatives piled up their heaviest vote ever at St. Mike's.

No longer are students automatically voting for the party their families traditionally have supported. The people to people campaigns have brought the issues to the voters and made them compare the party programs for themselves.

Sons of Tory families are voting Liberal and sons of Liberal families are voting Tory for the first time ever — because they are being confronted with the issues and are casting their votes on the basis of these issues for the first time.

No longer can it be said that St. Michael's types are born Liberal and Trinity types Tory. Lest it appears that all the credit for awakened political consciousness on the part of student voters is being given to the campus politicians, it should be added that a large measure of the credit for last year's record vote belongs to a most enlightened policy adopted by last year's SAC.

Last year the SAC for the first time took on the responsibility for running the actual vote. The number of polling booths was increased and a week-long campaign by bulletin board signs and Varsity ads urged students to use their vote on election day.

The 5,000 students who voted last year represent 30 per cent of the eligible student body. A vast improvement over the 10 per cent who voted three years earlier, but still a far cry from the 75—80 per cent turn-outs averaged in federal elections or the 60—65 per cent votes recorded in provincial elections.

Thus the level of serious student interest in the political issues of the day is still far from giving anyone cause for too great elation. But the present Model Parliament system is obviously proving an increasing success.

It would be a shame to scrap it for a return to the days of the George III Loyalist party.

Hungarian Revolution not in vain

by NANDOR DREISZIGER

Today is the seventh anniversary of the Hungarian Revolution.

On this day in 1956, students of Budapest set out in orderly and disciplined demonstrations to rally support for their program of reforms and to express their sympathy and solidarity with the youth of Poland.

By nightfall the red blood of unarmed demonstrators stained the pavements of the streets.

It is not possible to recapture this long tale of youthful enthusiasm, limitless expectations, heroic sacrifice, suspense, frustrations, disillusionment, bottomless grief, bitterness and desperation in a few lines.

It must suffice to say that within less than a fortnight the entire edifice of the Communist state machinery, erected with meticulous care and overbearing zealotry during the Stalinist era, completely disintegrated.

Hungary was free. She was an independent state with a coalition government, free press, freedom of religion, free unions, free peasantry, and no secret police.

But this newly-born liberty, christened in the blood of martyrs, was not to last.

Through the brutal military intervention of a foreign power, totalitarian rule was reinstated.

On the surface it might appear the revolution had failed, for it brought only suffering, death, destruction and an increased repression. But it had deeper consequences. The triumph of the naked military forces of the Kremlin was a Pyrrhic victory. The march of world communism suffered a decisive setback.

The Communist parties of the non-Soviet world received a serious blow through the break-off of splinter parties and desertion by disillusioned members.

Many citizens of the Soviet Union itself began to doubt the moral righteousness of their government's actions. People of many nations took another look at Soviet policies and discovered hiding behind the mask of friendly overtures and incessant peace pretensions the ugly face of Soviet Russian imperialism.

The revolution was the first national uprising against a Communist state. Such a development is inexplicable by the doctrines of Marxism and Leninism.

The events of October, 1956, constitute another chapter in the book of Marxist disillusionment.

But this is not all. Over the years it became evident that the revolution had other consequences also. These are particularly manifest in the domestic development of the eastern European satellites. The Kremlin was forced to re-examine its policies toward these countries and to adopt minor but significant changes.

Considerable concessions had to be made in the fields of state control of cultural activity, travel, and standards of living.

Although Soviet troops still remain in Hungary and there is still no toleration of deviation from the Marxist-Leninist dogma, this mild liberalization initiated gradually in the wake of the revolution has significant implications not only in regard to the everyday life of the people of Hungary and the other satellites but also in the world situation.

The efforts and sacrifices of the students and workers of Hungary in the face of overwhelming odds were not without definite accomplishments.

The revolution was not in vain.

The SAC inaction

By JOHN COOK

"The SAC also set up a Canadian-Canadian relations committee to promote understanding and knowledge of the bi-national reality of Canada". — The Varsity, Sept. 27, 1963.

The SAC French committee, as it became known, was grandly conceived. Among its purposes were the writing of a submission to the Royal Commission on Bi-Culturalism, an information service for French Canadian students, and the promotion of exchanges with French Canadian students.

But the committee could do nothing without a chairman. Doug Ward, council president, had, he thought, the man for the job.

"As chairman of this committee," Ward said, "I would like to nominate Richard Pope. Mr. Pope is a fourth-year Trinity student. He spent last summer in France and the previous summer in Quebec. He is co-chairman of the Carabin exchange."

"I was keen," said Pope, "and I knew four or five other people that wanted to work on the committee, who were just as keen as I was."

Then Dave Sefton, a representative from Engineering, moved to block the appointment. "This is an official council position," said Sefton. "We should have open nominations, and print an ad in The Varsity asking for applications for the position."

So the nomination was withdrawn and Pope was appointed temporary chairman of the committee. But the motion setting up the committee is such that Pope could do nothing himself, and could not form a committee.

"My hands were tied," said Pope. "I couldn't do anything until Council gave me the go-ahead."

During the next two weeks, no ad appeared in The Varsity. At the next meeting of council Oct. 10, the chairmanship of the French committee was left tabled because no one had applied for the post.

"I bugged them for three weeks to put in an ad," said Pope. "I wanted people to hear about the committee."

On Wednesday, Oct. 16, an ad finally appeared in The Varsity, asking for applications for the chairman of the French committee of the SAC, giving the deadline as 5 p.m. the same day. Three applications were received, one of them from Pope — irritated but not quite defeated by the delay.

Council met the same night. They held a 1½ hour meeting, the shortest in many years. They had very little business to discuss. One of the shortest discussions was with reference to the chairmanship of the French committee. The election was put forward to the next meeting, Oct. 31, to give the executive commission time to discuss the applications.

"I guess they didn't want me to take the job," said Pope.

Oddly enough, Pope's appointment as temporary chairman did not appear in the minutes of the Sept. 26 meeting. The minutes were adopted without objection at the next meeting.

Non-violence and the Negro revolution

by IAN GENTLES

Non-violence is not a new phenomenon in theory or in practice. Its exponents have been personalities as various as Tolstoy, Jesus and Thoreau.

After the early Christians stopped being fed to the lions, non-violence was nowhere practised on a politically significant scale until this century. It was practised in South Africa in the twenties, and in India in the thirties and forties by the followers of Mahatma Gandhi.

A little-known but dramatic case of massive non-violence occurred in Denmark during the Second World War. When the Nazis invaded that country they decreed that all Danish Jews were to wear yellow arm bands. When this happened the King of Denmark announced that he too would wear a yellow arm band. The next day hundreds of thousands of his countrymen wore them as well and the Nazis were powerless. One wonders what the result might have been had Pope Pius XII set a similar example.

The most recent and striking application of non-violence has been among the American Negroes. Leaders have been carefully trained in the discipline of enduring personal humiliation, abuse and violence without retaliating. They have then been sent into explosive situations to lead bus boycotts, sit-ins, wage-ins, pray-ins, and every other kind of -ins.

The movement mushroomed in political importance with the Freedom Bus rides during the summer of 1962. Since then, and despite Kennedy's advice to get out of the streets and into the courts, the organization of direct non-violent action has continued to grow. With the motto of "Jobs and Freedom" the Negroes are demanding the economic and political equality which they have been unable to obtain by due process of law. In seeking to transform the status quo they represent a revolutionary challenge to American society.

Yet the challenge has been, so far, principally a non-violent one. If the Negroes start using bullets against their opponents they can be crushed with impunity by the military power of the state. This fact is the key to understanding the growth of non-violence as a political force in the 20th century.

The modern state possesses overwhelming power over its citizens by virtue of the shattering technological developments in the fields of communications, transportation, and the military. Any modern state has this power, whether it is frankly totalitarian, or nominally democratic like the United States. For this reason a revolutionary social movement can no longer hope to succeed by violent means. However, the modern state has not yet found a weapon to defeat a non-violent revolution. It is still baffled. This is why the "second American revolution" (as some people refer to it) is having such far-reaching effects.

Non-violence represents a serious political tactic in the struggle against the modern state. But there is still the question whether this disposes of the principled view that, to have any enduring achievement, non-violence must be a total way of life, permeating all of a person's attitudes both public and private. It is interesting and paradoxical that leaders like Gandhi, Martin Luther King, and Bayard Rustin, who have had the greatest tactical success, are also those who have made a total commitment to pacifism regardless of the practical consequences.

What is the answer? This question is being discussed at a seminar on non-violence being sponsored by the Student Christian Movement and the Combined University Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament. The seminar will first study the philosophical basis of non-violence and then move on to deal with the concrete problem of resolving real conflict situations.

This may strike some as an obscene picture, but this really is the way cheerleaders appear in public.

Theologian flays modern forms of defence policy

Modern concepts of government defence policy were scorned by a Mennonite theologian Monday in a speech which made a strong appeal for pacifism.

Speaking in the Combined Universities' Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament lecture series "Arms and the Man" Professor John Yoder of Goshen College, Goshen, Ind., used the Bible to refute justified wars, defence against aggressors and wars contemplated for their results.

"The function of civil government is the maintenance of an internal peace and order," said Prof. Yoder. "There is no justification for war between states provided in the New Testament."

The internationally-active theologian said defence policies directed to preserve internal peace are illicit. "This assumption cannot be demonstrated on Biblical, historical or logical grounds."

Prof. Yoder felt contrived wars in history never worked and that passive resistance ultimately produces a morally integral nation.

He used the abortive Hungarian Revolt of 1956 as a sad contrast to a spontaneous revolt two weeks later which stalemated the Russians for a month. And he felt the long Indian assimilation of British rule ultimately helped the country regain its sovereignty while maintaining its moral integrity.

The speaker felt that states should act "for conscience's sake," not out of selfish, fearful or conforming service.

Conformity should be limited, he added, to act as "the loyal opposition of the state." Constructive criticism should be a replacement for fighting tyranny, said Prof. Yoder.

"The state is most properly served when held to its proper function — not to effect a better world but to maintain internal peace and order," he said.

Slums close to wealthy U of T campus

During his years at the university, every student sooner or later takes a walk through the neighborhoods near the campus.

Two blocks from Sidney Smith the row-houses start. They have been home for countless racial generations. The original tenants, British folk of "Toronto the Good", were replaced by a concentration of city Jewish families in the early part of the century. In both these periods, the areas were "respectable".

Now the row houses have come to represent all their Glasgow or Manchester counterparts call to the mind. To the West, the new Canadians from Italy are the latest wave to set down roots along Robert, Major, Brunswick and Borden Streets.

To the South, Orientals coming from church meet Greeks going to their church. These latest tenants have added the latest coat of cerise paint to the aged faces of the old brick ladies along Beverly, Henry, Grange, Elizabeth and McCaul Streets. They have also created — undoubtedly unwittingly — a new situation in the area: the run-down breeding place for juvenile delinquency.

And it only takes a pensive walk through the neighborhoods to make the student want to do something about the situation other than running away from it. His most cogent persuader is himself. He has come from an environment which, either because of or in spite of its flavor, has led him to university.

Will the scrawny and grubby kids from Alexandra Park or Kensington Market get the same chance?

The average sympathetic student will hope that the kids won't have to be parents of another gang of "dead end kids". Or the sincere student will do something actively.

He could help fellow students man the University Settlement recreation centre at 23 Grange Road. Or he could simply reach into his pocket and give a donation to the Metro United Appeal, which last year gave $97,000,000 to the Settlement.

Either way, he is giving hope to a poor people not in another world like students helped by SHARE. These people are only three blocks away.

Almost too close for comfort.

SMC professor appointed to Trent university

Professor E. J. Schonleber of St. Michael's College has been appointed assistant professor of Philosophy at the new Trent University at Peterborough.

Prof. Schonleber will join two other new appointees who have been affiliated with the University of Toronto. All will join Trent when it opens next fall.

Miss Helen Kelley, a U of T graduate in Library Science (3T2), will leave her present post of senior assistant in the catalogue department of the National Research Council Library to become principal cataloguer of the Trent library.

Dr. J. A. MacFarlane, Dean of the U of T Faculty of Medicine from 1946 to 1961, will relinquish his present duties as special advisor to the Royal Commission on Health Services to become visiting professor and member of the Senate at the newest Ontario university.

Prof. Schonleber and his wife are both Americans by birth and graduates of St. Michael's.

CUP COMMENT

By BRUCE KIDD

Several weeks ago the Ubysey reported that indecent advances were made to seven University of British Columbia coeds walking across the campus late at night. Now it notes the plight of the courageous undergraduate who offered escort service to girls needing protection.

Ostensibly for a joke this gallant chap placed a classified ad in The Ubysey pledging aid. But to his amazement, the 30 telephone calls he received were from male students all asking him to fix them up on dates. Said the ad man innocently: "There's obviously a latent demand for this kind of service".

A par - 500 hole

A team of golfers from the Ontario Agricultural College claims to have captured the world's long-distance golfing championship. To earn themselves this self-instituted honor, the Aggies' duffers completed a 24-mile par-500 hole in a mere 413 strokes.

Fairway was west along Highway 5, a dogleg north along Highway 6, then into the college. The only major obstacle they encountered (and overcame) was the Ontario Provincial Police. The foursome reached the green only eight hours and 20 golfballs after teeing off.

Now OAC challenges any other university to wrest away its title.

* * * * *

Latest variation to the college sweatshirt fad: the University of Alberta at Calgary is promoting an "Autonomy Sweat-shirt" to attract support for its drive to break away from the University of Alberta at Edmonton.

* * * * *

The University of Toronto may be opposed to the idea of a co-educational graduate college, but the University of Cambridge, England, is certainly not. The Cambridge Varsity recently reported plans for a "University College" intended "for graduate members of the University Staff of an agreed status". If the idea is adopted, it will be Cambridge's first college for both men and women. Dr. Robertson Davies take note.

Dief kidnapped

The research-minded University of Saskatchewan newspaper The Sheaf has uncovered a kidnapping which happened to former prime minister Diefenbaker. According to The Sheaf, the incident occurred in 1915 when the prairie whiz-kid was an over-zealous undergraduate at Saskatchewan.

Diefenbaker continually aroused the animosity of his classmates by his "clever punctuality". So in order to prevent him from reaching a lecture on time, a few of his classmates waylaid Honest John and locked him in the basement locker of the administration building.

Diefenbaker was freed, the story continues, when the class was half over. Upon entry to class, undergrad Diefenbaker was reprimanded for his tardiness.

Surely basement lockers haven't lost their usefulness?

Engineers wreck statues

Varsity's Skulemen have been suspiciously tame this fall, but elsewhere Canadian engineers are making headlines for their hi-jinks. Before hundreds of shocked UBC students and faculty members, a group of engineers recently smashed five campus statues to bits.

Manning sledge hammers, crowbars, and links of chain, the engineers reduced the statues to rubble in a few minutes. The five pieces of art had graced the campus from the beginning of term.

Sounds fishy? You bet.

Unknown to the dumbfounded crowd, the statues were all fake. The engineers had placed them on the campus to prove that nobody at UBC can distinguish art from junk.

* * * * *

But engineers at the University of Manitoba were recently the butt of a practical joke. Somebody had liberally applied axle-grease to all the toilet-seats in all the washrooms of the Engineering Building.

The unknown culprits, rumored to be the U of M's pharmacists, added insult to injury. They left behind signs with the question: still using that greasy kid stuff?

Other soccer action saw Law move into a four-point lead in Group III, after a 4-0 win over Emmanuel, while Forestry outscored Wycliffe 3-1. Trin. B defeated U.C. H 4-1 in a Group II contest.

RUGGER

Meds B moved to within one point of Vic I and Trinity A by upsetting previously unbeaten Trinity 8-0. Bob McGee with a converted try and Ken Boughton accounted for Meds' points.

U.C. is at the bottom of the league, losing 21-0 to Meds A. Ron Peroff with three tries led the doctors.

Law beat Knox 10-0 in further action, while Wycliffe made it two straight in a 24-3 win over Architecture. Emmanuel got past Pharmacy 3-0, St. Mike's B defeated PHE B 14-8 and Vic IV beat Vic III 12-3.

Mustangs aren't that good--White

Blues' errors flatter 'Stangs

By SHEL KRAKOFKY
Associate Sports Editor

QUICK KICKS: Despite his team's humiliating defeat last Saturday, Varsity coach Dalt White still maintains Western Mustangs aren't as good as the 52-15 score indicated. White points out that Blues were guilty of some almost unbelievable mistakes which made the Western team seem so much better. . . For example, White says, on 'Stangs' first touchdown Blues had quarterback Ted Miller at their mercy and were about to throw him for a loss when two Varsity player tripped over each other enabling Miller to throw the t.d. pass. . .

White also pointed out that touchdown passes to Mustang's Art Froese and Bill Sasso, coming on an option to the right side with the halfback flanked outside the end, hadn't worked against Varsity since 1959 when John Wydarney was the receiver. . .

Queen's all-star fullback Jim Young returned to his old form against McGill Saturday and rushed for 171 yards in 17 carries for a 10-yard average. Young missed the first game of the season with a hip injury and wasn't impressive against Western two weeks ago. . .

McGill's all-star end Don Taylor played flanker against Golden Gaes. . . Redmen quarterback Glen St. John completed 11 out of 25 passes for 319 yards but McGill's ground attack netted only 27 yards. . .

A typographical error in Monday's Varsity had Blues' Jim Israel punting for a 24-yard average against Mustangs. It should have read 34 yards. . .

For all those who have a spare tank of faith, here is the rule concerning the Yates Cup. The team, which at the end of the regular schedule of six games ends up first, wins the silverware unless the second-place team is clearly in second and has previously defeated the first-place finishers. There is then a playoff between the two teams. . .

The Blue and White Band had as much success at Western as did the Football Blues. The band tried to add some variety to its half-time show by having a group of folksingers. But unfortunately there was not a microphone at centre field and the group performed the world's only silent Hootenanny. . .

Western's marching band and majorettes are still the best in the league. It's worth the price of admission just to see their precision and hear their repertoire of songs. . .

Varsity Blues suffered an array of minor injuries in Saturday's game. Halfback Mike Kelly is on the limp with a sore ankle, guard Noel Bates has a charley horse, tackle Ray Reynolds a sprained wrist, halfback Harry Watson a bruised hip and Dave McCullough a bad ankle. . . Halfback Harold Hall is still hurting from broken ribs suffered in the McGill game. . .

McGill's fleet halfback Wille Lambert leads the league in scoring at the half-way point in the schedule with 37 points. Varsity's Gerry Sternberg is in second place with 30 points on the strength of five t.d.'s in the last two games. Sternberg has Varsity's only touchdown in the last 120 minutes of football. . .

Western rookie end and punter Pat McConnell is in third spot with 29 points followed closely by Queen's halfback Bill Edwards with 28.

INTERFACULTY ROUNDUP

Loss of games, q.b. kill Dents' chances

By AL SCHOENBORN

Dentistry's hopes for a Mulock Cup were dealt a dashing blow as Dents lost two games in five days and, worse than that, lost regular quarterback Jim Biggar through an injury.

In the Dents-St. Mike's game last Friday, Dents' coach Jack Zosky was forced into action in the final quarter when Biggar suffered a concussion. The injury will sideline Biggar for the rest of the season.

SMC won the game 14-0 on touchdowns by Joe Soltis and Pat Hennessey. Hennessey also added a pair of converts.

Yesterday, Victoria completely stymied the tooth-pullers' depleted attack, 13-1. Phil Rimmington and Dave Payne led Vic with a t.d. each, Rimmington added a convert. Jim Kelly spoiled Vic's shutout bid with an early single.

New College continues to have trouble hitting paydirt in its first year in interfac football. The Newmen were whitewashed by Meds 27-0 Monday and have yet to score a point in two games.

John Mueller led the doctors with two t.d.s. and Dave Fear and John Smialek added one each. Jim Boyce booted two extra points, Al Connolly kicked a single.

LACROSSE
In the battle of the giants, St. Mike's A defeated PHE A 7-4 Monday to move into sole possession of first place in Group I with three straight wins.

SMC was paced by George

Olah, who scored four goals and played a strong game on defence. Three goals by Don Arthurs and one by Jerry McElroy gave PHE a 4-1 lead at halftime but the Irish came back in the second half.

Jim Smith, Vern McCreary and Barry Fleming scored the other SMC goals.

It took over a year, but U.C. finally won a game as a separate entry from PHE. Redmen, paced by rookie Les Cappe's half-dozen counters and four more by Al Schoenborn, defeated a shakey Pharmacy squad 10-4.

In Group III action Pre-Med II edged PHE 2-1 on goals by Dave Geale and Sus Yoshida. A Group IV contest saw St. Mike's B beat Meds III 4-1.

There has been a lot of action in the intramural ofice as a result of dissatisfaction with original groupings. The final result of all the discussions is that Meds A and B will combine to play in Group I, leaving SPS I, Pharmacy and U.C. to make up Group II.

SOCCER

Sr. SPS retains a slight one-point lead over U.C. I in Group I as both teams registered shutout victories in recent action. Skule Seniors took Jr. SPS 3-0 on goals by Helmut Brosz, Parotta and Eric Sereda, while U.C. I overpowered PHE 4-0 on Peter Boeckle's two-goal performance.

Trinity A edged St. Mike's A 1-0 to move into a third-place tie.

THE SO-CALLED EXPERTS ARE JUST SO-CALLED

At the half-way mark in the Senior Intercollegiate Football League schedule, the picture is far from what it was expected to be before the action unfolded some three weeks back. Except for the facts that Queen's Golden Gaels are undefeated in first place and McGill Redmen have dropped from the position of Yates Cup contenders, the picture has defied the prognostication of the so-called experts.

Even though Queen's Golden Gaels haven't been beaten, they too have not lived up to expectations. In three victories Gaels have not been able to win by more than a converted touchdown. And at Western, only a poor third-down snap by John Metras Jr. prevented Mustangs from posting a big upset.

Some observers feel Gaels are not as good as they were made out to be. But most are of the theory that the Tricolor is relying on its press clippings and is not putting all out on the gridiron. In other words, Gaels are overconfident.

The loss of all-star fullback Jimmy Young for the first game and his off-color effort in the second game against Western hurt Gaels. But Young returned to his old form against McGill last Saturday, gaining 171 yards in only 17 carries, and still Gaels were only one touchdown better than Redmen.

Another theory is that Gaels have too many old veterans who are not as eager as they once were. Only two new faces have been prominent in Queen's starting lineup, linebacker Tom Beynon and defensive back Marshall Nicholson, the rest being of the "veteran" class.

The return of back Bill Edwards, injured last season, has helped Gaels but no one else on the squad is really making big news, not even quarterback Cal Connor.

Western Mustangs, as usual, are making the experts eat their words, winning two of three games and just missing a win over Queen's. With more than half of their 1962 team gone, 'Stangs were not expected to show much beyond desire. But the Metras fire and a crop of good rookies have made Mustangs a threat for the Yates Cup.

Bob Israel has given Mustangs better quarterbacking than they've had in three years and puny Ted Miller showed against Varsity Blues Saturday that even when Israel is unable to play Western has a q.b. that can do the job. End Pat McConnell, a freshman from Montreal, has been the most impressive rookie in the league with 29 points in three games and a punting average around 40 yards.

Halfback Art Froese, tackle Ross Nicholson, and linebacker George Chris from McMaster have also been helpful additions to the Mustang cause. And on top of it all, the Western veterans haven't slowed up a bit.

BEWLEY HAS PROBLEMS BUT BLUES HAVE MORE

Bill Bewley has problems at McGill with most of his big stars gone but Redmen have been surprisingly successful so far. They edged Varsity 25-24 and only lost to Western and Queen's by three and seven points respectively.

Six-year veteran Willie Lambert is McGill's chief threat and Bewley has certainly used Willie to the utmost. He has scored five of McGill's eight t.d.s plus three converts, a field goal, and a single to lead the league with 37 points.

McGill's rushing game has been practically non-existent, although newcomer Pete Howlett can do some damage from the fullback spot. With the lack of talent on the line, Redmen have been forced to depend on a passing attack with Lambert, all-star end Taylor (who played flanker against Queen's), and end Larry Cullen the primary receivers.

McGill's new quarterback, Glen St. John, missed the first game with the flu and hasn't had much chance to show what he can do. But it seems evident at this point that his only forte is passing, and even here he is not consistent.

Varsity Blues have been the most surprising team in the first half of the schedule. Blues were expected to be a strong contender behind Queen's for the Yates but at this point they've yet to win a game.

Why Blues haven't been able to win is the most popular question in Hogtown and also the most answered question — all the answers, of course, have been different. If I knew the answer why Blues haven't been able to win, I'd be the coach of the team.

The only thing we can go with any assurance of verity are the facts. And these show that Blues have been making an unbelievable amount of mistakes which are costing them games.

Whether these mistakes have been the result of indifferent play or are just the work of fate isn't easily discernible, but you can't get away from the fact that fumbles, interceptions, missed tackles, poor pass coverage and dropped passes hurt a team.

Blues have the talent to do better than they've done so far this season. They even have a slim mathematical chance to win the title. But they will have to make less mistakes in the final half of the season if they expect to win even one game.

"BULLYING AND STICKS AND STUFF"

U of T women take to field hockey

By SHEILA LITHWICK

The field hockey fiends are now in business.

Field hockey, the new women's interfaculty sports replacing touch football, is making its major debut on campus this week.

With the autumn season comes the emergence of small wooden hockey sticks, hard white balls and a team of eleven enthusiastic divot-makers and shin-skinners.

The newness of the game in Canada has made it a major drawing card in interfaculty participation.

For the first year teams from Physical and Health Education, Victoria, University College, St. Hilda's, St. Mikes, and Medicine are playing in a regular schedule every noon hour at Varsity Stadium and Trinity.

Although most Canadians (in the East especially) have neither played the game nor seen it played field hockey is a major women's sport in both England and the United States.

The sport infiltrated North America mainly from England, Pakistan, and India.

At U of T field hockey was introduced by Miss Rose Hill, an English coach who is now encouraging the sport at McMaster.

At present, Miss Marina van der Merwe is helping to keep it alive by her coaching and tuteledge of an almost complete beginners group of women.

The interfaculty teams, although well-equipped, still suffer from a lack of proper playing fields (the grass must be extremely short with very level turf) as well as the usual organizational snags that crop up when a new sport is introduced.

There is no intercollegiate schedule as yet, but two teams are picked every week to play Saturday morning games against several Toronto Ladies Hockey Teams as well as York and McMaster.

You might be interested in seeing a live game. It is challenging, for its emphasis on team play and positioning.

I overheard a comment yesterday by an admiring male onlooker.

"What's all this business with bullying, and sticks and stuff. . . You know, they're not too bad for women." He also mentioned that it looked pretty rough. After trying his hand at hitting a ball he and his fellow critics decided to challenge the girls to a male-female match to be decided on the Trinity battlefield.

The game is obviously catching. Here's hoping we see great heights reached in this sport.

BABY BLUES FACE TOUGH WESTERN COLTS

Seek revenge to break first-place tie

By GORD BELLMORE

Varsity Blues aren't the only team which faces a foreboding weekend. Baby Blues will also have visitors from London — Western Colts.

The two intermediate teams will have their rematch in the first half of this weekend's football doubleheader Friday night at Varsity Stadium. In their first encounter Colts gave Baby Blues a physical beating as well as on the scoreboard, 21-14.

Since meeting Western, however, Baby Blues have improved their record by winning over Ryerson Rams 15-0. Rinkies evened their record at 1-1 in impressive fashion last Thursday. They were really up for the game after Ryerson had dumped Western 22-15 the week before.

The exchange of victories leaves the intermediate league with a three-way tie for first place, each team having two games to play.

Despite last week's showing by Baby Blues, however, the outlook is still uncertain. Colts were tough before and are still smarting from the embarrassing loss to Ryerson.

Word has it that Colts have added fullback Gary Cranmer as a running mate for Jim Reilly, who ran rough-shod over Baby Blues in London.

Cranmer was a senior intercollegiate all-star two years ago but was ineligible last season. He was recently cut by Western Mustangs, apparently over a spiff with 'Stang coach Johnny Metras.

In addition, Baby Blues still face the same problem they have been contending with all season — they can't stay together long enough to build a strong unit. With the Senior Blues in trouble, several key Rinkies are not committed to either team and won't be until late in the week.

The one real bright spot, among several for Baby Blues has been the return to top form of fullback Ron Peroff. Small for a fullback at 160 pounds, Peroff makes up for his lack of size with a shifty style of running and the ability to use his blockers effectively.

HOME COMING '63

Blues sport new look for rematch with 'Stangs

Homecoming schedule

Today, 8 p.m. Varsity Arena: Homecoming Show and dance. Admission 75c.

Today, 8 p.m. Varsity Stadium: Intermediate Inter-collegiate Football — Varsity Baby Blues and Western Colts.

Saturday, 10 a.m. Float Parade.

Saturday, 2 p.m. Football game — Varsity vs Western. Tea dance after the game: Varsity Arena.

Saturday, 9 p.m. Blue and White dance, Hart House.

The new-look Varsity Blues, complete with new sweaters, new confidence and new spirit, take the field Saturday at Varsity Stadium against Western Mustangs in U of T's annual Homecoming football game.

The Varsity players and coaches are determined to avenge last week's 52-15 defeat at London against these same Mustangs. And indications are they just might.

At last night's practice, the Varsity players were fired up. They even applauded at the end of every offensive play by their teammates.

Blues are aware of their anaemic play so far this season and they're optimistic about emerging from the doldrums.

Varsity head coach Dalt White gives his team an excellent chance of defeating the high-riding Mustangs.

"Sure they beat us by a bad score last week", reflected White, "but don't forget we've beaten them once this year." (Blues dumped Western 13-7 at Varsity Stadium in a pre-season exhibition game.)

"Granted it was an exhibition game," said White, "but our players showed enough then to assure themselves they can beat Western."

White doesn't plan any major lineup changes for this game. He points out the offensive unit didn't play as poorly last week as many observers believe.

White may shift Ross Dainty to offensive end and Bill Jackson to defensive tackle. Other than that, the only lineup changes are due to injuries.

Halfback Harold Hall, who suffered broken ribs two weeks ago against McGill, is still not fit. Defensive halfbacks Mike Kelly and Riivo Ilves will also not dress due to injuries suffered in last week's game.

Ilves reinjured the shoulder that shelved him for four weeks prior to the Mustang encounter and Kelly sustained a badly sprained foot.

TORONTO VOL. 83 — No. 13 — October 25, 1963

Fifty nabbed wrecking fence

The Metropolitan Toronto police Tuesday night caught a group of about 50 students, predominantly Engineers, demolishing a fence on Huron Street.

A member of the executive committee of the Engineering Society was one of four persons detained by police. He submitted his resignation to the society.

After an emergency meeting Thursday the society rejected his resignation and accepted full responsibility for the incident.

Shortly before midnight Tuesday the group began tearing down the fence to obtain materials for the Engineers' Homecoming parade float.

Police arrived on the scene to find the group loading the materials into a truck.

All but four of the group fled, two of them being Engineers. The four were turned over to the University of Toronto police with the condition that the fence be rebuilt.

In a statement supporting the society member who submitted the resignation, Don Monro (IV APSC), society president, said a great deal of personal pressure had been brought to bear on the executive member by the various levels of university administration.

"It is the feeling of the executive committee that this assignment of blame was not proper," Monro said.

"While realizing that he should not have been involved, it is recognized that this individual returned to accept responsibility while 50 others fled, and that he supervised the reconstruction of the fence the same night," Monro stated.

Split not between age groups

The threatened split involving Canada's two peace groups is not a split between students and adults in the two groups, Art Pape, executive secretary of the Canadian Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament, said Wednesday.

There are groups within both the CCND and the Combined Universities Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament which are debating the merits of a radicalist versus a reformist general policy, Mr. Pape said.

"There is yet no definite alignment of forces behind either approach," he stated.

Wednesday The Varsity reported that the results of policy statement discussions at the CCND conference in Montreal this weekend might mean that the CUCND would later embark on an independent and different policy.

Wednesday Mr. Pape said the differences between the two groups were not entirely the differences between a negative and positive approach to the methods for achieving peace.

Devonshire House books recovered

Books stolen from Devonshire House last Monday have been found and returned.

They were discovered in the stacks of the central library by a member of the staff Wednesday evening.

R. H. Blackburn, chief librarian, believes that they were transported into the stacks in briefcases. "It certainly proves that there was a large number of people involved," he said.

The approximately 170 books constitute the entire fiction section of the Devonshire House library.

It is believed the theft was done by Artsmen to "show up the Engineers."

The books were returned Thursday afternoon.

The Varsity apologizes to the Engineers for the erroneous headline in the Wednesday edition. Skule was not blamed for the theft.

Floats threatened

It was learned Thursday that a group of students intend to damage the Homecoming floats built by the various colleges and faculties.

It was reported that the damage will be inflicted late Friday or early Saturday, leaving insufficient time for repairing the floats before the parade starts.

When asked if these reports could apply to Engineers or the Brute Force Committee, Don Monro (IV APSC), president of the Engineering Society, investigated and said he could find no evidence for such a plan.

"The way to win in a float parade is to create something which succeeds because it deserves to, not to fall heir to a prize by default as a result of what can only be termed dirty tactics," Monro said.

"If any individual from any faculty has anything to do with such an activity, he deserves to be dealt with most severely," he stated.

Demand policy statement

In a letter to Justice Minister Lionel Chevrier, David Jenkins, president of the Canadian Union of Students, demands a statement of the federal government's policy on the activities of the RCMP on university campuses to comply with a resolution passed by the CUS at the recent national congress in Edmonton.

The resolution, supported by 36 of the 41 attending universities and institutes, resulted from last year's disclosure that RCMP officers were conducting security investigations on campus on the political activities of registered students.

A copy of the letter and resolution was also sent to the prime minister and to RCMP Commissioner C. W. Harvison, who said in an interview last March that the RCMP was interested because Communists, who are also interested, consider the university campus a "training ground for bourgeois leadership."

If no declaration is delivered by Nov. 15, the CUS resolution calls for a "suitable manifestation" to be organized in Ottawa, probably in the form of a mass-multi-college rally in front of the national war monument or the Parliament buildings.

SHARE returns smash record

Late contributions to the SHARE campaign have brought the tally to $9,180 — a 50-per-cent increase over the previous record collection.

The staff has pushed its donation to $399—$200 more than their tally last Friday, at the end of the drive.

Ivey speaks at Skule dinner

Science is an activity of man, not of nature, Dr. Donald G. Ivey told about 200
Engineers Wednesday night at the 74th annual Skule dinner.

Dr. Ivey, the guest of honor, was speaking on New College, the laws of nature and the noise of science.

This noise, he explained, referred to the ever-increasing number of published reports of experiments "which should never have been written in the first place".

With regard to New College, Dr. Ivey said multi-faculty colleges are beneficial "to those who are able to derive benefit from membership in such colleges."

Awards were presented to scholarship winners by faculty secretary J. A. Gow and
Col. W. S. Wilson.

The Varsity needs writers

The Varsity will print a literary edition this year in an attempt to provide an outlet for creative writing.

Manuscripts of poetry, short stories, plays, novels and divers items of a literary nature should be submitted to P.O. Maude at the Varsity office no later than Nov. 22, 1963.

Due to space requirements, excerpts of plays may be used if the author indicates the passages he wishes printed.

If the play is short enough it might be possible to print the full text.

Anyone interested is invited to participate, but the Nov. 22 dead-line must be observed.

All manuscripts should be typed in double-space with the author's name, address and phone number attached.

Route for homecoming parade. Judging will take place in front of UC at 11 a.m., Saturday.

UC lit defends existence

Roars of anger and laughter rang through University College's Junior Common Room, as the administration of the college argued for its life Wednesday.

President Philip Epstein (III UC) and Treasurer David Greenspan (II UC) were debating against Bruce Lewis (II UC) and Gary Perly (II UC), and were opposing the resolution that the UC Literary and Athletic Society should be abolished.

As the first movement of the debate, Bruce Lewis made the motion of abolishment, attacking the lack of control exercised by the Lit over the college as a whole.

He said the Lit's only authority is their financial control of the fees collected for extra-curricular activities from each individual student, "and even then they have no control because of the structure of the society."

Lewis accused the Lit of drawing up the budget in some secret manner and then presenting it to "the strange society in an open meeting of the college's four factions:

the athletic, residence, egghead, and the people."

"If athletic grants are threatened, the athletes show up in boots and tackle, and tromp in to oppose and defeat the resolution. Otherwise they never come to a meeting. The eggheads have one function: to amend the constitution, and they can't even do that, because a quorum is never present except when such a grant is threatened and the whole organization involved appears to oppose," Lewis said.

Greenspan replied that the function of the Lit was to control and supervise student affairs, but only when the students wanted it. He went on with an appeal to the 110 years of historical tradition behind the Lit.

"It's not that I am arguing on the basis of tradition," he said, "but how can we leave?"

He said the Lit controlled financial affairs, athletic awards and graduate banquets. "Without it, we have anarchy, and anarchy means chaos."

Gary Perly replied that anarchy was already reigning. He said: "Why should we give out prizes when we don't have any school spirit. The Lit hasn't encouraged school spirit for years, and that is one of their main functions."

"Why should we pay out student fees to subsidize clubs that we don't even belong to?" He said such clubs should "do a little work, and not be parasites off the rest of us."

In reply, Epstein read the first part of his speech off the back of a ragged old envelope, ending with the hope that "the Lit will not die in vain."

He was interrupted with cries from the floor of: "what kind of envelopes do you use," and "is this one of those religious colleges?"

He demanded how, without Lit subsidies, could The UC show, the Gargoyle, the Undergrad, and the Current be run.

In final rebuttal, Lewis said: "We have pointed out the defects of the society, the undeniable fact that factions do exist."

Final results of the debate were 14 for, 25 against abolishment. The Lit keeps its scalp.

Donates uranium worth $100,000

Expanded opportunities for training engineers in the nuclear field appeared this week when Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited donated $100,000 worth of uranium metal to the University of Toronto.

The metal is used in operating a sub-critical reactor in the basement of the Wallberg Building operated by the faculty of Applied Science and Engineering.

"Eldorado's gift," said Professor Douglas Andrews, professor of nuclear engineering, "will highlight the future of nuclear engineering in our faculty."

The reactor, he said, is used both for research and to train students in the design, construction, and operation of nuclear reactors.

Since it was constructed in 1957, 40 students have been trained in nuclear engineering, through the Engineering Science, nuclear option, course, and another 160 in other engineering courses introduced to the reactor and given instruction in reactor design.

Until this time all metal used in the reactor had been loaned by Eldorado.

The department is small, as is the number of students enrolling in the course. All teaching duties are handled by Prof. Andrews and his assistant, Harold Greenway, while research is handled by Dr. R. E. Jervis.

An average of 10 to 15 students enrol in the Engineering Science, Nuclear option course, but last year this dropped to two, and neither passed. This year the enrolment is up to five students, but Prof. Andrews is still concerned about the lack of sufficient student interest.

responsibility

In the wake of a report Monday that a Negro girl, Yvonne Yearwood, had not been selected to go on the University of North Carolina weekend exchange have come charges of discrimination, and criticism of the Students' Administrative Council.

An editorial in The Varsity Wednesday explained that the issue was not one of discrimination, but of the basis upon it was pointed out that the SAC weekends exchange weekends.

It was pointed out that the SAC weekends exchange chairman, Diana Bennett, was in no way to blame for what had taken place. Rather, the blame was placed at the feet of the Council in general, and some of its "fluffy-minded" members in particular.

It is now necessary to explain more fully the SAC's position.

The selection of persons for the weekend exchanges is not made by council members themselves, but rather by co-chairmen appointed by last year's council.

In the case of the Tarheel exchange the interviews were conducted and the selections made by Johanne Bennett and Mary Charles.

Although the selections were not made by council, or the weekends chairman, both the council and the chairman bear the responsibility for the selections.

This year — thanks mainly to Diana Bennett and SAC president Doug Ward — an attempt was made to secure persons for the exchange weekends who would be more than good drinking partners for the students they were to visit.

There has been much criticism of exchange weekends in the past, but from all indications it appeared there would be improvements made this year.

During last year's North Carolina visit less than 10 hours of discussion groups were scheduled for the three days of activities.

According to all reports, both Le Carabin and Harvard exchanges have been established on a foundation of candidates who will be able to make the weekends intellectually stimulating excursions.

But the Tarheel weekend has not been changed. It appears that this year's candidates for the trip to North Carolina were selected on the basis of their interest in football games, fraternity parties and other social activities.

In explaining the reasons for Miss Yearwood's rejection, Miss Charles said that although the applicant was intelligent and had a lot of good ideas, she "didn't seem as enthusiastic as other people."

And therein lies the only legitimate criticism.

First, the two interviewers stand condemned because they took it upon themselves to select candidates who would help make a socially successful weekend. They rejected intelligence in favor of "enthusiasm."

Second, the council is to blame for failing to fulfil its position of responsibility. Council should have ensured that its delegated bodies were staffed with the type of persons who would carry out the desired policies.

More than $1,000 in SAC funds have been budgeted for this year's Tarheel exchange. This is too much money to pay for a social weekend.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Unfair to Liberals

It is with increasing dismay that I observe the continued abuse poured upon the U of T Liberal Club by our student newspaper, The Varsity. But such is your right and your duty in a free society if it reflects what you sincerely believe to be true. In the same light, I feel that it is my right and my duty to reply.

To accuse some of our accusers of pettiness and personal grudges would be childish and, perhaps, inaccurate. Rather I would attempt to refute some of the points which have been made. At the outset may I stress my fundamental agreement with at least two of Mr. Evan's suggestions — freer discussion and freer votes on private members' bills as well as wider dissemination of political ideas and ideals to the university community at large.

However, the third suggestion (namely that a system of proportional representation be adopted for our Model Parliament) is, I believe, impractical. It is not with the view of clinging to power that I oppose this idea. Rather, it is because I truly believe that it will destroy any value which Model Parliament can now offer. The discussion of issues will decline in importance. The game of politics will be in the transcendence. There would be no greater "depth of research" into the issues involved. On the contrary, I believe that most people would be less concerned with debate and more concerned with overthrowing the government and installing their party in power, no matter what the issue. They would feel no responsibility to the student body at large since they would not have to face the electorate again. Proof of this thesis can be found in the universities, who have adopted this practice across Canada. In one extreme example, four governments served in one short Model Parliament. Can this possibly allow time for intelligent discussion of anything? Can bills be adequately drafted? Can argument be intelligently prepared? I think not!

I also feel that Monday's editorial deserves some criticism. Its attack on the Liberal "people to people" campaign in the light of its subsequent glorification of the visits of leaders of other political parties is most unwarranted. These men, including Prime Minister Pearson and the Hon. Mitchell Sharp, the minister of Trade and Commerce, spent a full day circulating through the university, handing out literature and talking to the students. Impromptu question sessions occurred at various points on campus. Rather than spending an hour or so speaking to a small group of party partisans, they attempted to reach a greater cross-section of the student body. Such a program should not be condemned but emulated. Students should welcome the opportunity of meeting the political leaders of their land.

But the Liberal Club is not opposed to speakers. On the contrary, we are now in the midst of a lecture series based upon the theme "In Search of Canadian Liberalism". Dr. Mark MacGuigan honored us by being our first speaker. Future speakers include Senator David A. Croll, Prof. Paul Fox, Dr. Careless, Prof. Forster and members of the federal and provincial houses still to be announced. Had adequate coverage been given by the Varsity to our club activities this year, such editorial inaccuracies would not have occurred.

Our aims are didactic — to teach politics and Liberalism. These dual purposes go hand in hand. But we are not the pawns of our Federal Party. Our platform is arrived at through deliberation and discussion of all members of the club. (Any member of the student body may become a club member.) Proof of our independent status can be found in our opposition to the government's stand on nuclear arms. Is this "useless behaviour"? Is this indicative of an attitude which has "contributed least to the intelligent discussion of important issues"?

We welcome all suggestions for reform and change. But we appeal for fairness. We ask not to be judged by the sins of our ancestors. What your editor criticizes is history, not the events of today. Find out what we are doing, then judge. Sensationalism and honesty are impossible partners.

Trusting your future good faith,

Michael Levine (III Vic)

Image ruined

Dear Editor,

The purpose of this letter is to rectify your tabloid's negligence concerning the complement of Devonshire House.

You, sirs?, are ruining our image. Devonshire is a professional residence consisting not only of engineers but also of men from the other great professions — Dentistry, Medicine, Pharmacy, and Law. We are forced to admit that the odd artsman worms his way in as a post-graduate type.

Your consistent inaccuracies in considering Devonshire House juxtaposed with engineers irritate us in a two-fold manner: — the SPS men are embarrassed at being blamed exclusively for everything the Devonshire residents do, while the other men miss out on the glory accruing from these feats.

To illustrate, your image of us has forced these other men to suffer the indignity of watching ill-clad Trinity boys prancing around our sylvan quadrangle with a nude lewd mannequin of Lady Godiva.

To conclude this poorly composed epistle, we ask you to inform the student body of your literal iconoclasm and that Godiva, Hippocrates, Apollonia, and Aspirin coexist in perfect harmony within these purplish walls.

Expresses thanks

I would like to take this opportunity to thank everyone on campus who contributed so generously, both in time and money, to the recent SHARE campaign.

It is most heartwarming to see such a tremendous response to an appeal of this nature and I am only sorry that I cannot thank each and every one of you personally.

I would like also at this time to invite you to criticize this campaign in whatever manner you feel it should be criticized so that in the future, we will know where our weaknesses lie.

Once again, on behalf of the many who will benefit from your aid my most sincere thanks to all of you for your most thoughtful and genuine contribution in a time when good causes are increasing but resources are not.

THIS IS THE WEEK THAT WILL BE

By PAUL ENNIS

THEATRE

● Central Library/The Fantasticks—The Red Barn Theatre's first production opens Oct. 29. Bruno Gerussi stars in this adaptation of off-Broadway's longest running musical.
 ● Crest/Repertory Company—Garson Kanin's Born Yesterday opens tonight. Juno and the Paycock and Of Mice and Men complete the Crest's fare.
 ● O'Keefe Centre/The Girl Who Came to Supper—And the memories linger on . . . but this is an unreasonable facsimile.
 ● Dell Tavern/The Zoo Story and Summer in the Country — Albeeit Jack Creley can't cough. If he could, would he scoff at Chekov?
 ● Hart House Theatre/The Three Sisters—Herbert Whittaker is the director of Chekov's version of family togetherness.
 ● Coach House Theatre/Major Barbara — Til Saturday. Shaw's tour de force is a major satirical vehicle. Unfortunately the University Alumnae took the wrong bus.
 ● Royal Alex/An Evening at the Royal — Billy Daniels weaves little magic at the ED. Gangster comedy A Thousand Clowns begins Monday.
 Robert Stack et al make this movie a borderline case.

MOVIES

● Odeon Carlton/The Caretakers—Polly Bergen.
 ● Odeon Hyland/Heavens Above—This too-divine comedy gets lost in the clouds.
 ● Odeon Fairlawn/Lawrence of Arabia — Where have all the young girls gone?
 ● Savoy etc./Doctor in Distress and A Pair Of Briefs — A new and an old version for connoisseurs of British body comedy.

● Loew's/For Love or Money—Leslie Parrish plus passable plot may please, but miscasting mars end result.
 ● Loew's Uptown/The VIPs — An abominable snowman of a film. Only fog-lovers could enjoy this travesty of movie making.
 ● Towne/Women of The World—Mondo Cane has gone but the dog's scraps are still in view.
 ● International/This Sporting Life—Richard Harris is the main attraction in this brutal view of materialistic society. By all reports this is an excellent flick.
 ● Little Cinema/Dreams—Studio 1; Gold of Naples and Quiet Flows the Don Part 2 — Studio 2 — One Don and one to go.
 ● Imperial/Rampage—Playboy was never like this. Only for the very tired.
 ● Tivoli/Fantasia—See Stokowski lead Stravinsky through a myriad of technicolor calisthenics.
 ● Northern/20,000 Leagues Under The Sea—A poor man's Mondo Cane. Walt takes you on a dizzy tour of a submarine.
 ● Hollywood/A New Kind Of Love — Paul Newman dances about sans Hud . . . a brainless swoon.
 ● Eglinton/How The West Was Won—Still shooting, chopping, climbing, paddling, and singing on the northern frontier.
 ● University/Cleopatra—If you're that curious sneak in at intermission.
 ● New Yorker/Zazie—Comi-tragedy about a Parisian enfant terrible.
 ● Huey Philistine's best of the weak/Midtown etc. Academy award winning films Two Women and Room at the Top take some sting out of a mediocre week.

MUSIC

● Toronto Chamber Orchestra/Royal Alex — Jacob Groob and 14 strings play for artistic satisfaction Sunday at 8:30.
 ● TSO/Massey Hall—All Beethoven program featuring the seventh symphony and the seldom performed triple concerto. Tuesday and Wednesday at 8:25.
 ● Sunday Evening Concert/Hart House—Pianist John McIntyre in a solo recital.
 ● Jeunesses musicales/Edward Johnson Building—Brussels Wind Quintet Monday Oct. 28.
 ● Old and new jazz—Gene Krupa Quartet recreates the past at the Savarin. Chico Hamilton til Saturday at the Friar's.

ART

● The Art Gallery of Toronto—Women's Committee sale of Contemporary Canadian Art.
 ● Roberts Gallery—William Roberts until Oct. 26.
 ● The Pollock Gallery—Ethel Raicus.
 ● Jerrold Morris International Gallery—The Art of Things.
 ● Gallery Pascal—Recent drawings by Aba Bayefsky.
 ● Dorothy Cameron Gallery—Leon Bellefleur. Ger-shon Iskowitz, through Oct. 31.
 ● David Mirvish Gallery—Pop art.
 ● Gallery Moos—Paul Jenkins, to Oct. 30.
 ● Prints International—Luba Genush, to Oct. 30.
 ● Tygesen Gallery—Bronka Michalowska. An exhibition of enamels.

Burnshaw gets worse with age

By John Murray

Caged in an Animal's Mind, by Stanley Burnshaw; Holt, Rinehart and Winston; 55 pp. and notes, $4.60.

Despite the ecstatic critical quotes on front and back cover, this book is curiously disappointing. It contains almost 100 pages of the poet's latest work, twelve excellent translations of foreign poetry, and poems from an earlier book by the author (Early and Late Testament, 1952). Unfortunately, Mr. Burnshaw's latest work is also his worst.

Though occasionally shot through with brilliant lines, the body of Burnshaw's later work lacks either the substance to support the voice of authority which the poet assumes, or the technique to treat the subjects which he chooses. There appears to be a dichotomy between form and content, if such can actually be separated.

Mr. Burnshaw needs severe self-regulation in his work. For instance, the images which the poet chooses are often too tightly clustered together to enhance the experience which they seek to illuminate. The following lines from "The Axe of Eden" show this effect:

Likeness

Is only a mask of thought, no touching fingers to taunt you to hopefulness, madness, emptiness, sleeplessness.

Here, the repetition of similar words gives them all an equally blank value. The lines need expansion before they can exist as a positive value to the reader. In contrast, other images are diffuse and need tightening before they can assume the glow with which the poet obviously intends to surround them. Both these defects point to the need for clarity.

At the same time, Mr. Burnshaw is unfortunately attracted to rhyme schemes that I can only call perverse. "Seedlings Air" has an unnecessary extra line acting as an affirmation to a closed stanza which un-balances the structure. In some poems with full and traditional rhymes, painful half rhymes (search: scorch) disturb the reader.

Because form and content are truly only one unity in poetry, Mr. Burnshaw's content suffers with his technique. At times, however, the content itself destroys the poem. For instance, "Petitioner Dogs" relates men to dogs:

...we vainly sniff at the air,
Let us vainly paw at the ground
Till we slobber in your despair.

In striking contrast to this despairing poetic slobbering, Mr. Burnshaw's earlier poetry is excellent. Placed as it is — at the end of the book — it is astonishing to read it after the unfinished later work. Tone and technique are fused in the earlier work to a unity larger than the original components. "Poetry: The Art" is textured with profoundly brilliant lines, such as the following:

...A poet's words
Are signatures of self — the many selves
Subsumed in one profound sense that knows
An all-according truth: a single eye Uncovering the countless constellations
Of heart and mind.

The poet speaks here with noticeable authority and ease.

Brilliant too is the delicately lyric poem "To a Young Girl Sleeping" which immediately involves the reader in a gentle unfolding of images: Into this room of sleep let fall

The moon's dimmest bars — Glitter might rouse her still hands lying Paler than water-stars.

There is no hesitation here; the poem is a finished piece of art.

Perhaps if these finely realized early poems were not included in the volume, the reader would be inclined to offer more respect to the later work. But in comparison, the later work seems unfinished and diffuse as though the poet had been rushed into publication without giving proper concentration to the sculpting of his new work, or to its revision.

Another hypothesis affixes itself with ease upon the later work: the poet cannot continue writing in his earlier vein, and is sifting himself for new pathways. The lack of clarity would attest to this, as would the lack of control over imagery.

Understanding the novel

By John Sewell

RHYTHM IN THE NOVEL, by E. K. Brown, U of T Press, 118 pp.; $1.75.

The publication in the Canadian University Paperback series of E. K. Brown's Alexander Lectures given at U of T in 1950 provides a chance for a reconsideration of a rather neglected realm of criticism.

While Northrop Frye advocates a scientific study of literary works as species and subspecies, and Colin Wilson advocates an existential value-judgement of literature, this excellent little book confronts us with the whole concept of aesthetic experience — why is one particular novel more enjoyable than another.

Brown, a one time professor at U of T, looks at literature from the inside: he asks, and answers to some extent, what makes a particular novel of itself enjoyable.

He claims it is the rhythm in the novel, the repetition with variation, which determines its greatness. Basically, there are three rhythms to be considered: combinations of word and phrase, and sequence of incident; symbols which accrete meaning from a succession of contexts, and an interweaving of themes.

For elucidation of this theory, Brown draws heavily on some twenty novels: Middlemarch, To the Lighthouse, A la recherche du temps perdu, War and Peace, to name a few. Much of the book is built on statements made by E. M. Forster and Brown looks into Forster's novels — especially A Passage to India — quite thoroughly.

The rhythm, he claims, imposes a unifying order to life, enforcing the idea or feeling presented, making it more emphatic in its resonance. It implies that 'beyond what the novelist has been able to set forth there is another area, only glimpsed, not surveyed, a mystery but not a muddle.' Using this type of thinking, Brown gives a lengthy and profound interpretation of A Passage to India.

It cannot be doubted that Brown has provided a very valuable key to aesthetic appreciation of the novel as an art form, and it is regrettable that he died before having a chance to further expand the idea presented in this book. However, as it stands, the book is a fertile springboard from which one can further understand the novel, and English students, particularly those considering the work of E. M. Forster, would be well advised to read this valuable little book.

One must understand to be of any use

By Sally Bambridge

Sally Bambridge, now in the School of Social Work, was a member of the Canadian University Service Overseas from 1961 to 1963. She taught school and worked in a hospital in Varanasi, India for one year. During her second year Miss Bambridge taught village children in a tribal area of Orissa.

Drums, crowds, smells—in-cense, animals, flowers and food—we pushed through it all, up a narrow, congested lane in the back-streets of Varanasi, a holy city of India.

The sign outside the Vishwanath temple proclaimed in three languages: "only gentlemen of the Hindu religion are allowed inside this temple."

I looked away from the accusing sign, and kept my eyes on the bobbing bald head of a saffron-robed priest who was determined that I should get inside and see this famous stronghold of Hindu faith.

After a whispered consultation with the guard at the door, he indicated that I should put my sari up over my head to cover the light hair. We kicked off our sandals outside the door, and were quickly caught in the crush of singing, chanting, devotees.

In the holiest part of the temple was a small, square depression in the floor. It was filled with about two inches of muddy, but nonetheless holy, Ganges river water.

A black, bullet-shaped object rose out of a circular container in the petal-strewn water—it was a representation of the god Shiva, and seemed to be a symbol of fertility. Prompted by my friend, I gave a lei of orange flowers to the priest in charge, was allowed to touch the deity, and was given a handful of sacred Ganges water to drink, and sprinkle over my head. My flowers were placed about the god, and the priest gave me another lei which had already been blessed.

We pushed our way outside, across the slippery tiled floor. The priest gently shoved a scrawny white sacred cow aside as we stepped through the temple's ornate silver doors.

A basic aspect

This was the first of many contacts with my new country's religion during two years as a Canadian University Service Overseas volunteer. These manifestations of religion may at first be difficult for the newcomer to understand. In time and with experience, however, he learns to accept them as a virtually unchangeable, basic part of life in India.

Later, it seemed just as hard to understand the lavish spending of a villager for his daughter's marriage—or the unbelievable expense of a wealthy westernized businessman's party with its bottles of costly, imported liquor—while those present talked glibly about the lot of India's millions of poor.

It is equally difficult to understand the peculiar social structure of Hindu society which puts each person into certain social categories according to the family into which he is born. Even in these times of change in India, the rigidity of the structure is such that marriages between castes are not generally socially acceptable.

An outsider sometimes cannot step inside an orthodox person's kitchen, nor can a low-caste person handle the food and water of others.

One puzzle why ragged dirty mothers from poor villages bring unwashed, diseased babies to hospitals, wondering why they are sick—and why untrained village midwives sometimes cut the umbilical cords of newborn infants with a rusty kitchen knife.

Must face facts

It is hard to see, and hard to understand, many things in India. To Canadians, as products of a Judeo-Christian tradition, and an affluent society, some aspects of life in India may seem barbaric—or even inhuman. However, these things must be seen in the context of the East to be understood—and must be faced by anyone dealing with India as basic facts of life.

Out of context, we see India's main problem as one of overpopulation, and from our comfortable perches in a land of plenty, suggest the obvious solution. However, just talk to a simple village man—he will tell you that his children are his jewels—his youth—they make up for deprivation and want—for the dreariness of hard labour. They will provide him with his only health insurance, and his only social security when he and his wife become old.

He cannot be made to see that, if he has fewer children, he will be better able to care for the ones he has. This is the refined reasoning of a man who has wealth and education—it does not, he thinks, apply to him.

Everyone speaks and writes about India as "the land of contrasts". It is one of the most common clichés, and one of the most applicable. Gaps between the rich and poor, educated and illiterate, north and south, are very great.

A tradition requiring many Hindu and Muslim women of northern India to cover their heads and faces with large cloths, or "Burkas" in the case of the Muslims, still persists in many places. One of my students in Varansi would ride home on the school bus about their hips, and a few brightly coloured beads around their necks.

Progress vs tradition

Progress frequently clashes with tradition. A newspaper article in a city paper tells of nine people travelling on the footboard of an Indian passenger train who were seriously injured when they were knocked down by a bullock cart travelling too close to the tracks.

More than one hundred Canadians from across the country are now serving overseas in various parts of South East Asia, Africa, and the West Indies. Next year, it is hoped there will be more than two hundred.

They are volunteers with Canadian University Service Overseas—serving in cities and towns, in schools or camps, in small rural villages. Some are nurses and doctors, others are in the teaching, engineering, or agricultural fields.

None of these people have gone overseas for the money—most are paid at the local level or less, and must cope with indigenous food and lodging situations.

A willingness to serve, and equal willingness to learn, and an ability to adapt easily to an entirely different culture are qualities looked for in prospective volunteers.

In order to acquaint those interested with the CUSO program, and with the peculiar problems and cultural traditions of the countries of service, a series of pre-selection orientation programmes have been planned.

These orientation sessions, are open to any interested persons, and will continue over the next two months. Many of the returned volunteers will be present at these sessions to answer questions and assist in discussion.

The first meeting is Saturday, October 26, at 10 p.m. in the Debates Room, Hart House.

with her "burka" folded on her lap—and, at her stop, she would tie it over her head, wave goodbye to her school mates, and dropping the face cover, disappear into the crowd like a formless black Halloween ghost.

About 500 miles south in the hills, live India's most backward tribes whose women, far from covering their faces, wear nothing at all but an eight-inch woven "skirt"

Often, it is possible to see long processions of machines, truck chassis, and tractors travelling on the Grand Trunk highway across India to modern industrial centres, held up for half an hour while a procession of bullock carts strain and creak up the hill in the opposite direction.

Juno at Crest not to be missed

By Eric Rump

The Crest opened its repertory season with a performance of O'Casey's Juno and the Paycock.

Juno is amongst O'Casey's greatest plays, subtle in its characterization, rich in humour, and powerful in its appeal to the emotions.

We witness in the downfall of the Boyle family the necessary defeat of all families who live in a world of greed, envy, spite and indolence. Until such qualities are changed to those of love and charity, as both mothers maintain, then mankind will continue to live in a world whose most enduring characteristics are its suffering and its pain.

The parts of "Captain" Boyle and Juno, his wife, are played by Robert Christie and Maureen Fitzgerald. Robert Christie caught many aspects of the Captain's character quite effectively—his grubbiness, his false pride, his sly ability to get away with things. Yet I would have had him prouder still, the Paycock, strutting around the town, dazzled by his own heroic projection.

Maureen Fitzgerald is about ten years too young for the part of Juno. She tried to conceal this, but her face was still the face of a fairly young woman and her movements had a youthful vitality. She gave the impression of having emotional reserves which Juno should lack simply because she has suffered so much in her earlier life. These have gradually worn her down to the point where she gives up her long struggle to keep the family together. By the end of the play she is no longer able to cope.

The smaller parts are all competently handled, though two deserve special mention. Neil Dainard, one of the first graduates of the National Theatre School, played Johnny Boyle. He sounded far too well educated for the part and had difficulty with the Irish accent, but nevertheless communicated the desperate bitterness of the wounded young man.

Then there is Barbara Bryne as Mrs. Madigan. She is undoubtedly the star of the evening. From her first entrance one realized, with that quick thrill of anticipation, that here was an actress in complete control.

She has a rare and magnificent sense of comic timing and a feeling for the broad gesture that stays this side of caricature. She was acting not only when she was moving about the stage like a sharp and angry bird, or when her frail arms almost snapped under the weight of the gramophone she collected from the Boyle's, but also when she was standing still.

As she stood silently by the doorway in Act III, watching Juno and her daughter, her slumped shoulders, her barely erect head, expressed exactly her sympathy for them and her knowledge that she could do nothing to help.

The play is directed by Rocco Bufano, in places he drove the play too hard, made it noisy, too full of business. This is a play that needs, especially at the beginning, to meander along, to take its slow way through domestic trivialities.

It isn't necessary to have the cast shouting away so that each line reaches the ear like a shotgun blast, or to be always breaking from high-pitched wrangling to quietly intense and bitter deliveries, so that we all know a "dramatic" moment has arrived.

And he could have insisted that the designer, Tom Spaulding, make the set look less like a fairly cheap Toronto apartment house. These people are supposed to be very poor — they literally don't know where the next meal is coming from—yet their furniture and their dress put us back in the comfortable regions of the lower middle class.

Juno and the Paycock is not, however, a play to be missed. Given time, I expect the actors will relax more with their parts. It will be running, along with two other plays, until December, and a visit to it will prove a worthwhile investment.

Henry IV at Alex Needs rehearsal

By Leslie Mulholland

Last weekend the Canadian Players presented Shakespeare's Henry IV Part One at the Royal Alexander theatre.

Despite a need for rehearsal, the production was almost successful.

In the intimate scenes of the play, Desmond Scott's direction was subtle and interesting. However, the staging has yet to fill out the dimensions of the action scenes.

As Falstaff, Ron Bishop who is naturally of adequate bearing, suited the role in appearance. He brought a good deal of humour and lightness to the role.

But though he excelled in the tavern scenes, his monologues were weak and difficult to follow. He tended to play Falstaff with fey mannerisms, which though funny in themselves, obscured the more subtle comedy of the text.

Peter Haskell as Prince Hal gave the most provocative performance of the production. He emphasized the serious nature of the role, and developed Hal from a royal delinquent to an ambitious Prince of Wales, aware of the responsible position he must eventually hold.

As his sire, the King, however, Felix Munsil lacked royal bearing and an acquaintance with Shakespeare's verse. He portrayed Henry as an incredibly weak and dull middle-aged man. Little hint of the usurper Bolingbroke, plagued with the responsibility that he so desired, was expressed.

In Ted D'Arm's Hotspur, though the character was far from full realization, there were suggestions of a characterization which when filled out could be most interesting.

The production was well supported by the minor roles. In almost all cases these younger players were successful.

Any Shakespeare seen in Toronto is compared with Stratford. This production, rather than trying to out-do the Stratford flourishes and haubuoys, let the dramatic momentum of the play carry itself. Though weak in places, this approach resulted in excellent drama.

As the actors become more familiar with the verse and their roles, and the diction improves, this production will, no doubt, achieve creditable dimensions.

INDIA (cont.)

Further contrasts come in thinking — some intellectuals bemoan the loss of the British administration—many more blame India's conditions on Britain and her colonial policies in India.

On any train ride in India, one is bound to run into some educated person who, finding that you come from "America" loudly criticizes the "ill-treatment" of Negroes and the American segregation policies. This same man may be reading a magazine advertising a special kind of facial cream guaranteed to "make the skin shades lighter". He will not admit the beauty of a dark-skinned girl, and hopes that he will marry a girl who is, above all, "fair".

A land of emotion

One often hears the term "serenity" applied to Indians and their way of life. Therein lies still another contrast. They may be serene, but in all classes, rich and poor, emotions are very close to the surface. After a death, or after a marriage when a mother is losing her daughter to another household, there may be loud weeping and wailing.

Men may weep unashamedly for the same reasons that women do — pathos, sorrow, or even severe criticism. When the Chinese threat became fully apparent last October, Calcutta was full of loud meetings, proclamations, nationalistic fervor, and near-panic.

In most classes of Indian or Asian society, people are very tolerant of the outsider's ideas — they are hospitable, and affectionate. They do not often expect the young volunteer to adapt to, or adopt their customs, but are usually pleased when he does.

They are very willing to accept the fact that a foreigner is from a different world, and are not surprised or upset at his strange customs. They are not, however, so willing to adopt these strange new ideas and customs themselves, and quite reasonably, are suspicious of anyone who is trying to push new ideas at them.

The CUSO volunteer may have dreams of changing the conditions and attitudes he encounters. In Asia, he will find that this idea of rapid change simply does not work. Eventually, he will settle down, and within the existing framework of society, try to realize the most important goals of such overseas service — to increase international understanding and goodwill, to give what he can, and above all, to learn and to understand.

A brown rock — well actually it's much too dignified to be called a rock. Perhaps a stone? Tablet? Much better.

Anyway, a brown stone tablet with wedge-shaped writing sits on my desk. I can't understand what the writing means, my being unilingual. It's cuneiform writing, about 3,000 years old.

But I almost found out the translation once. Thereby hangs ...

In England they call the third floor the second floor — reasoning, or unreasoning, that the first floor (Canadian) is really the main floor. So when the guide at the British Museum told me the Western Asiatic Antiquities Department was on the third floor, I got lost.

There was a room full of old things and an old pensionable guard who didn't speak Akkadian. But he thought I could find the department, Mate, by walking along the Roman Corridor, past the Rosetta Stone, through the Islamic Manuscript Department and into the Coptic Tunnel.

At last I came to a door with hieroglyphics on it spelling, I hoped, Western Asiatic Antiquities Department. There was no door handle but at the top of the door there was a bell and another sign in hieroglyphics.

Most signs in London say either "£5 Fine for Falsely Signalling Fire" or "It is Forbidden to Foul the Footway: Dogs Must be Kept on Leash." This area of the BM seemed an unlikely place to have that sort of warning so I rang the bell tentatively, if you can be that way with a bell.

Anxious moments passed while I mentally compared the knack of gaining anything in the BM with the knack of gaining entrance — without first dying — to Tutankhamen's tomb. Then an aged man about three feet tall opened the door and said, in flawless hieroglyphics:

"Yes?"

"I've been having trouble translating this tablet," I said. "I was just wondering if ..."

He ushered me inside. There was a formaldehyde smell and I could feel my moccasins slipping on the wet stone. He rolled a stone in front of the door after closing it. Then we walked for five minutes in the dark. At last a voice boomed:

"Approach and pray, peasant. I am Gilgamesh, the great king of Assyria. Have you come to me with cedars from Lebanon?"

"No, not exactly. I have this tablet here ..."

"Ah, a message from your lord. Give it to me."

A light shone on the speaker, showing a powerful Semite wearing white bandages. I felt like a crippled newsboy unable to remember "Shazam."

Gilgamesh translated the tablet for me and then said: "They are very ancient, my boy, from the period when Innana and I dared the wrath of the gods by playing the sitar without sacrificing to the Uttudu bird. Now we are cursed to stay the rest of our life in the Western Asiatic Antiquities Department."

He sobbed softly. Innana tried to take his mind off his troubles by unwinding some of her bandages.

Then other bandages started to approach me carrying a stone jar about my size.

"All I wanted Mr. Gilgamesh ..."

The last thing I remember is thinking that Egyptians really do have two left hands just as in the hieroglyphics.

I woke up in the Black Dog across from the BM with a faithful English friend pouring a pint of beer down my throat. I awoke slowly in the best of circumstances but this time it was instant. I clutched the pocket. The tablets were safe, wrapped in ... my God, it was ... an ancient, foul-smelling bandage. But no papyrus with translation on it.

I puzzle on.

TWO ANSWERS TO TWO QUESTIONS I HAVE BEEN ASKED TOO OFTEN LATELY:

Two answers to two questions I have been asked too often lately:

1. The reason that what I wrote about Sean O'Casey last Friday seemed somewhat discursive — if not downright incomprehensible — is that the printer's gremlins managed to reproduce my four typewritten pages in order 1-3-2-4.

2. "wkr" is in a language called Cablese — newspaper men's abbreviated writing used for saving cable costs and time on teletype message wires. The trick is to eliminate all unnecessary words and all unnecessary letters within a word. Thus — "Walker" in Cablese becomes wkr — because the other letters aren't needed either. I realize many feel wkr isn't needed either.

Whittaker Chekovs at H. H.

By Peter Acker

Hart House opens tonight with the first of four plays scheduled for the year — The Three Sisters by Chekov.

It runs every night except Sunday until Nov. 2 inclusive. The play is directed by Herbert Whittaker, drama critic for The Globe and Mail.

The play is narrow and deep: a small surface (in this case a family) is sounded, subjected to forces and turned inside out in front of us. Chekov reveals the ennui, the emptiness, fragility and beauty of a whole class of people in turn-of-the-century Russia. To do this he presents one family from that class — the Prozoroffs.

They are forced, during the play, to question their illusions (going to Moscow, becoming a professor, marrying "him") and look at the life they are leading. Only then, Chekov says, is there a chance to live. He mirrors the microcosm of this large class in one family and he gives us as believable a family as possible. When the three sisters appear on stage for the first scene they must have and give the audience the feeling they have been living together for a long time.

Each line and action demands their participation as whole, if small people, in that complex web of talk, love, hate, bickering, understanding and misunderstanding and unexpressed feelings that make up a family.

This makes enormous demands upon the actors. Mr. Whittaker pointed out that in Broadway comedy the actor must have the facility of making funny and smooth all sorts of special situations and get them across to an audience. This does not demand a deep characterization: what's funny stays; what's not, changes or goes.

"In our case the actor must work into the part, always questioning himself as to whether his actions and expressions are consistent with the character established and the demands of the scene, Mr. Whittaker said in an interview.

"A lot of imaginative ideas have to be thrown away because they don't fit.

The sooner during rehearsal an actor can start thinking out his own motivations on stage instead of being directed, the better. The Three Sisters is a very great play and it's also a very difficult one."

How did Mr. Whittaker feel about working with students?

"They want to learn. This is exciting for me and important for them and theatre. In professional theatre a director can expect certain things from his actors; they are paid and they do their job. This in no way detracts from the high standard of performance in professional theatre, but in student theatre the director meets people of varied acting experience.

A few are professional, some are trying, many have never been on stage. The methods of getting these people to work together must be many — both subtle and direct — and must change as an actor learns about his part and craft. It's very tiring and satisfying and Mr. Gill has a well-earned year off. I'm very glad to have been able to take his place for this production."

I talked with Mr. Whittaker about innovations he had made.

"Our audience won't sit while an actor talks to them over the footlights. I've broken up the longer philosophical speeches with movement.

Mr. Whittaker has enlarged the playing surface by building a platform in front of the regular stage. The three sisters, strangers in their own house, play the whole last act on this platform, which has been been transformed into a garden.

"I've made an openfaced sandwich of the stage by extending the action to the aisles and alcoves.

"We've added live, visible musicians where Chekov suggests only off-stage effects.

As Mr. Whittaker left the theatre, he was heard to think loudly: "Ah, if only we could get one of those balalaika bands. Ah well...."

Whittaker directs Beth Morris and Anthony Burger.

Toronto theatre has 2 problems

By Eric Rump

In Toronto at the moment there is a group of established older actors. Barbara Chilcott, Barbara Hamilton, the Murrays and so on.

They all know each other, have often worked together and have led distinguished careers. When the time comes for them to retire gracefully, who will replace them? Are there any younger actors now working around town whom one might expect to see stepping into their shoes?

It was partly because of these questions that I took a cab the other night and went to see Mr. Bill Brydon.

Bill Brydon is not exactly a household name, though one day he may well be. He came into the theatre seven years ago, after a varied career out West, which included both engineering work and selling shoes.

He has always had a natural talent for mimicry and finding this did not particularly help him as a salesman, he decided to try the theatre. In this he has been successful (he has been seen a number of times in Toronto, both at the Crest and at the Dell, and is looking forward to the coming years in the theatre.

I asked him if there were any aspects of the present theatrical situation that he found discouraging.

Two problems in particular bothered him. The first was a lack of good producers and good directors — the sort of people who knew the right kind of play to choose and how to put on a straightforward, strong and direct production without wandering off into the effete or pretentious.

Even a man like John Hirsh, he claimed, should be valued as an organizer rather than a director. Hirsh has distinguished himself by getting the Manitoba Theatre Center going, rather than by the quality of the plays he has put on.

The other problem was the lack of encouragement for Canadian playwrights. In this respect he felt the CBC was much to blame. Though the CBC claims to be interested in new Canadian plays, it does nothing about such plays even when they were shoved under its nose.

Brydon cited "The Door" as an example — a good, original one-act play that was showing at the Dell last year.

Yet nothing was done about it. It was allowed to slide quietly into oblivion.

These objections aside, he felt that the theatrical scene in Toronto was encouraging. He emphasised that theatre in Toronto had grown in a surprisingly short while, and saw no reason to assume that it had reached its peak.

Brydon welcomed the establishment of the National Theatre School which he felt would help to push up everybody's standard of acting. He was pleased with the present repertory system at the Crest which allows a group of actors to work together over a long period of time. With luck, this system will have the same beneficial effects as it has at the Aldwych in London.

Brydon was smiling as I stood up to leave. "I may have had one or two discouraging things to say," he said, "but really I'm very optimistic. It's going to be a good time for theatre in Toronto." He said this with conviction and he may, by his own efforts, prove himself right.

The sound of surprise

By David Jackel

Things must be getting better. It used to be that there were two choices when it came to hearing jazz at the downtown clubs. Either you went to hear it or you didn't. This situation existed because there was usually only one major jazz attraction in town.

In the past few weeks the picture has improved to the point where it is possible to choose between good and bad jazz. The name groups are arriving with such regularity, that the oft-repeated claim of Toronto to be the third-ranking jazz city in North America may soon elicit something besides laughter.

Krupa Drums On

For example, those who want jazz with their alcohol can choose one or all of Chico Hamilton, Gene Krupa or Bobby Hackett for this weekend. Hamilton's quartet has received several mentions in this space, and you should have the idea by now that it's very good.

Then there's Krupa, who drums at the Savarin for a lot of the same bobby-soxers who screamed their approval three decades ago. The fans well past their adolescence and too far out of shape to scream, but Krupa plays on as energetically as ever. His style is an individual one, but essentially represents a dead-end in jazz drumming, as indicated by the fact that Krupa doesn't do anything very differently from the way he did it with Goodman.

If you've never seen Krupa, then go ahead. But if you dig modern drummers you will have come to expect a much more flexible way of playing, with a greater attention paid to melody and shading. This sort of thing Krupa can't supply. What he can provide is excitement, but only if you haven't been over-exposed to him.

With Krupa is multi-saxophonist Charlie Ventura, recently returned from a long period of obscurity. Ventura, an early popularizer of bop influences, once led a band which played "bop for the people". Although it included Jackie Cain and Roy Karl, the attempt conclusively proved that socialism has no place in jazz.

Ventura returned to the scene last year, playing bass saxophone on a Dizzy Gillespie excursion into bossa nova territory. Now he's with Krupa, which shows that at least he's trying not to become typed.

At the Town Bobby Hackett offers his brand of polite jazz. Possessor of one of the most lustrous trumpet tones in the music business, Hackett has largely forsaken the jazz field in favor of greener pastures. And who doesn't like money?

Coming Attractions

Next week Coleman Hawkins will climb on to the Friars' bandstand in place of Hamilton, and demonstrate that it is possible to grow old without becoming staid. Hawkins' career extends back into the 1920s and fame with the Fletcher Henderson orchestra, through the 40s and 50s as a solo act, up to recent record dates with the most modern of the young jazzmen.

His style has progressed and at the same time remained an individual and timeless example of tenor saxophone artistry. The 60-year-old Hawkins is only slightly younger than Louis Armstrong, but his chops have held up much better. If you consider yourself a jazz fan, hear him.

Meanwhile, after the successful week enjoyed by Art Blakey at the First Floor Club, Julian Burns has headed for New York to line up some groups for the future. The non-alcoholic listeners can therefore rejoice also. Things are indeed getting better, and it looks as though a swinging winter lies ahead.

Campus Jazz

At Hart House, Bill Gray got his series of noon-hour jazz concerts off to an auspicious start by presenting the Paul Hoffer Trio. Leader Hoffer (doubling vibes and piano) was assisted by two non-student professionals, bassist Stan Zadek and guitarist Art Devilliers.

The trio presented a well-prepared program, which included two Miles Davis compositions (So What, Milestones) done in arrangements which avoided any obvious homage to the Davis versions. Hoffer and Devilliers both soloed well, and bassist Zadek's big sound pushed the group along strongly enough to keep things swinging despite the absence of a drummer.

With Hoffer at the piano the proceedings took on the loose, cooking sound associated with the old Oscar Peterson trio. The piano-bass-guitar format hasn't been employed very successfully in jazz since Peterson dropped it, and the Hoffer concert brought back memories of how successfully it can be.

Next Wednesday Lorne Tepperman will lead his combo in to face the sandwich-eaters at Hart House. Details of future sessions will be announced when available. First we have to do something about the finks who keep walking out in the middle of a number. Maybe a special Lawrence Welk concert, if they want something to walk out on.

At the drop of a cat

By Sally Ness

"The most sensational aquatic smooch ever screened..."

Where is it? Somewhere between the October Playboy and the Imperial theatre, Rampage has lost even this claim to distinction. That this clinch between Mitchum and a naked Martinelli in the raging waters of darkest Malaya (it was filmed in Hawaii) ended on a censor's cutting floor makes little difference; this "film of high adventure and romance" seems to be suffering from the dry rot of being, I hope, the last of the jungle epics.

To the beat of bongos, castanets, and other suitably jungle-like instruments — usually so loud that only the audience can hear the tigers growling and the snakes hissing — Harry, a great white trapper (Robert Mitchum), seemingly unable to articulate in words greater than one syllable, sets off to capture a rare and dangerous tiger-leopard, "The Enchantress", for a German zoo.

Tagging along are big-game hunter Otto Abbot (Jack Hawkins) and Anna (Elsa Martinelli) whom Abbot rescued from a slum at 14, and has since made his mistress. Anna vindicates herself: "He gave me Everything — what else could I give him but myself?" Lo and behold, an Eternal Triangle develops and Anna realizes that Otto is losing his usefulness, attractiveness, and hunting ability.

Harry catches the Enchantress and Anna with nary a scratch (adventure seems to give way to romance in this film). She throws herself into his arms, and his stateroom, on the ship... "A woman must be with the man she loves!"

The film ends in Germany with the police, the zoo, Anna (who climbs a six-story ladder in heels and an Oleg Cassini suit) and Harry chasing the cat, and Otto chasing Harry. The cat kills Otto, Anna kills the cat, and Harry leads Anna off into the dawn.

The film comes complete with Malayan natives looking like leftovers from a Tom Mix movie (Sabu, the former Elephant Boy, makes a triumphant comeback). This candlelight-and-wine safari has a collection of the best clichés and some of the most unbelievable writing since Tarzan and Jane. Only Hawkins rises somewhat above the mire of mediocre dialogue. Martinelli gives all she's got and it's not enough. "I cried when he found me, and I have not cried since, nor have I been in a church". The John Wayne image is not becoming to Mitchum, and I find him hard to take romantically.

Warner Brothers would do well to study jungle photography under Disney although perhaps someone realized it wasn't worth the effort.

The verdict? It's cheaper to watch Tarzan on T.V. and more fun to read Playboy.

"She got enough for both of us — you have her tonight."

Little Zazie took an axe...

By Ricky Salsberg

"When Mother's got a loverboy, the family bit is out," explains 11-year-old Zazie to her uncle on whom she has been foisted for her brief stay in Paris.

She relates this tidbit with the same nonchalant frankness with which she later horrifies a man by telling him how her mother butchered her father with an axe. This ingenuous lucidity enables Zazie to move calmly through a Paris which she turns upside down in conjunction with Louis Malle, the director, and Henri Raichi's agile camera work.

"Zazie" mangles logical sequence, furious fantasy and a horde of zany characters into a riotous film.

It is ablaze with hilarious action, from the first sped-up drive through Paris streets; to the last grotesquely-prolonged riot in the restaurant. By the end, we are overcome by a measure of terror, because this, our conception of high spirits, is suddenly no longer fun, but a phantasmagoria out of control.

The brilliant camera effects, the sight gags, and the boisterous comicality of the situations ("We will fly at an altitude of five feet eleven," announces the bus driver) are sufficient justification for recommending this film, but there is also a bold sophistication about it all.

The two chase sequences which Zazie dreams are tinged with lightheartedness and wild, carefree abandon.

The real chase and the final brawl, which Zazie sleeps through, are somehow occluded by a disturbingly nightmarish quality.

"Your talk is too grown-up for him," Zazie is told, and how true this is. Zazie's words are grown-up words, but she can be comfortable with them while the grown-ups cannot ("Snotty, my ass," she keeps repeating candidly). For Zazie is a tough child, and these two qualities can joined allow her to pass unscathed through the world.

Her adult companions cannot, for they are no longer children, and their toughness has too often been replaced by facade. The aggressive widow has to bawl out, if only for a second, that she is lonely.

The taxi driver mumbles his true confessions into his radio during his spare moments. The uncle gains his greatest triumph performing in a night club as a female impersonator.

Sometime when you feel you have the energy, go see "Zazie". It is a charming, madcap, sparkling, and very exhausting experience. In color, too.

The unusual... but well done

By Tim Bentley

Walt Disney's Fantasia is an exciting experience of music-made-visual.

Now at the Tivoli, the film combines the beauty of Beethoven, Stravinsky, and others with Disney's excellent animation.

The opening minutes present members of the Philadelphia Orchestra taking their places and tuning up. Their shadows loom large above them; the unusual lighting and camera work juxtapose them intriguingly on the ceiling.

They begin with an abstract expression of Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor, which ranges from subtle pastels to stark black on red. Impression blends into impression in a smooth-flowing tableau.

Tchaikovsky's Nutcracker Suite, which follows, is a very light and fanciful sequence with more of the painting than of the cartoon about it. One lovely scene finds falling leaves and lithe fairies swirling together in the wind and skittering across the autumn ice.

In contrast, the Sorcerer's Apprentice by Dukas is a cartoon pure and simple (featuring Mickey Mouse of course), which tells the amusing story with music instead of words.

The last of seven pieces is Moussorgsky's Night on Bald Mountain, a frightening picture of the power and horror of night.

The episodes mentioned all rate an A, with the others not far behind. One wishes that the film had been made entirely for an adult audience rather than trying to appeal to children as well.

Leopold Stokowsky conducts what is occasionally too individualistic an interpretation of such works as the Nutcracker. However, the film is married only by some unevenness of excellence and scratches on the print.

Fantasia is a must for anyone who enjoys the unusual well done.

Healthy look at a sick mind

By Ron Brown

A refreshing new twist in motion picture filming is found in The Caretakers (now at the Odeon-Carlton). Although it at first promises to be just another "sick-sick" psycho-pathic movie, it is not.

Instead it takes a square, solid look at mental illness, its causes, and some of the efforts to cure it.

The story centres around an ordinary housewife in her 30s named Lorna (Polly Bergen). Because of family conflicts in her childhood and the recent death of her only child, she finally "breaks".

She is admitted to a mental hospital and finds herself under the special care of Dr. Donovan McLeod (Robert Stack, a reform-minded, determined young mental doctor. He is bent on curing his patients by treating them as human beings rather than as mental cases.

His reforms (one of which is the establishment of a day hospital) are continually blocked by the head nurse (excellently portrayed by Joan Crawford) who prefers the "intelligent use of force".

Stack seems unable to shake the cloak of Eliot Ness in his straight-faced, tedious portrayal of the young medic of unquestionable morals.

Polly Bergen is excellent. Her role as a patient who blames herself for her only son's death is strangely reminiscent of Susan Hayward's award-winning performance of a death row prisoner in I Want To Live.

Producer-director Hall Bartlett effectively brings out the many outlooks toward mental illness. Joan Crawford represents the old style of "make them respect authority" while Stack illustrates the more modern "treat 'em nice" methods.

Bartlett criticizes the lack of understanding shown by outsiders towards the patients, by showing the adverse effects that this outlook has upon their recovery.

Another notable performance is given by Janis Paige as a former street-walker who believes that all men are after only one thing in life.

Barbara Barrie, a newcomer, shows great talent in her portrayal of a patient who believes she is a fairy princess and hasn't spoken a word for seven years.

This film is well worth seeing for those interested in the study of mental illness. It is a documentary-drama, but this does not detract from its fine quality. Its sincere and accurate look at mental disorder is a must for everyone.

"I'm sorry I said you seem unable to shake the cloak of Eliot Ness in his straight-faced, tedious portrayal of the young medic of unquestionable morals."

Fangs ain't wot they used to be

By Diane Garbig

I recommend For Love or Money as superior candyfloss entertainment. It is full of beautiful people piloting millionaire's cars and rushing from one smashing apartment to another. This movie is the American way of life as it should be!

The plot is a slender affair of a billionaire mother's scheme to marry her three (glamorous) daughters to suitable men. The unwilling Kirk Douglas is employed as matchmaker. While playing Cupid, he falls in love with one of the daughters (Mitzi Gaynor.) The rest of the story unravels with misunderstanding, door-slaming and bedroom-roulette.

Kirk Douglas is less teathy than usual and turns in an excellent comedy performance. His friend Gig Young looks like Jack Lemmon with a gland condition. Thelma Ritter plays her usual salty role and manages to make it appear fresh. Mitzi Gaynor never swerves even a shade from the Doris Day original — nice girl gets wary roué — she is predictable and adequate.

The whole bubble is directed at breakneck speed, keeping the picture entertaining.

It's at Loews.

Who gives a hoot?

by Linda Halverson

Last Sunday night at the Bohemian Embassy Ian Tyson asked drily if everything is called a hootenanny these days. Almost everything is.

One of the local stores recently advertised a Fashion Hootenanny illustrated by gaunt girls with guitars.

One of the local taverns has redubbed their gingham-clad waitresses "hootenannies".

Oscar Brand commented that eight new TV shows are being prepared, all tentatively titled "Hootenanny".

Well then, Why does the Guild apologize that the long-ago-selected title for their new magazine is Hoot? Why are the producers and promoters of the CTV "Let's Sing Out" show (now four weeks old) hoping that it will not be labelled a Canadian Hootenanny?

where everybody gets into the act, has now become a form of musical madmanship with all the lightness of spirit of a lynching party. The idea of the "world's biggest hootenanny" was as jarring as the Folkathon which rasped on for six endless days here last June.

The major criticism of both these endeavors is that commercial gimmickry and circus act presentation debase folk music as an art form. The only positive feature put forward is that such shows serve to bring folk music to a large number of people and provide work for local artists.

But so do concerts and coffee houses. And these latter do so by drawing on the performer's ability to entertain rather than his skill in organizing a thousand people into rounds of sing-alongs or worse, play-alongs.

a prosaic preview of the Canadian Centenary, a book review, an art review, and a funny bunny" bit that isn't really either.

The design is good, the layout attractive, the photography sporadically excellent, but somehow the writing makes the reader feel he has been eavesdropping on an in-group conversation.

Festival provides facts and fancies but few opinions. Ironically, one of the only things Festival criticizes is the commercial exploitation of hootenannies... but their list of offensive items does not include their editors' own contribution: the world's biggest hootenanny.

Perhaps, as Bob Dylan suggests, they should know their song well before they start singing.

The Folk Music Society of

The Clancy Brothers and Tommy Makem

The tired old phrase "who gives a hoot" contains a clue to the answer. For one bundle of blame can be deposited on the doorstep of the ABC Hootenanny show. Not only does their blacklisting policy (described in an earlier Varsity by Gerry Lapkin) make a mockery of the ideals of folk music, but the format of the show has turned it into a veritable carnival. Performers are hustled on-again-off-again while the beautiful youth of America sings, hums, stamps and claps through one up-tempo number into another. The only pause that refreshes is the commercial.

And there are guilty others. The hoot, once described as a folk singing jam session

The world's biggest hootenanny turned out to be simply a big bad concert. The poor sound equipment and inexperienced performers could explain why it was a failure as a hootenanny lies in its very conception.

There is still a place for the hoot. But it is a more intimate one than Maple Leaf Gardens.

A new pusher has appeared on the folk music addiction market in the form of a magazine called Festival. Not yet knowing its users, it seems to be aiming at many levels of consumption.

Along with the expected look at the Toronto and larger folk scene, it includes

MUSIC

By DAVID BUNDLER

A disturbing approach to Schubert. At Eaton Auditorium Thursday afternoon, the Women's Musical Club of Toronto began its current season with a concert by the Quintetto Boccherini.

Being a quintet of strings, more particularly, two violins, two cellos and viola, the repertoire for such a group is frightfully limited.

Neither Mozart, Beethoven nor Brahms wrote a bar for such an ensemble, and in fact, the only masterpiece in the genre, to my knowledge at least, is the glorious C Major Quintet of Schubert.

Since the only part of the program I heard was that very work I must say that my criticism is minimal: in the face of the most heart-rending creation until the slow movement of the Elgar E flat Symphony, reason flies out the window.

But I did feel that the Quintetto Boccherini gave us an introspective Schubert, akin to the last piano sonatas but also to the epic temporality of Bruckner. In any case I felt a need to think again about Schubert, a welcome task at any time, and thus I must suspend judgement.

"In this unmusical country there are dreadful barrel organs which go up and down the streets — there is one playing under my window right now, which is so out of tune that it almost makes me weep and I find it nearly impossible to continue this letter to you. When I am forced to listen to discordant sounds, I cannot keep a single clear idea in my head. I feel a physical distress that immediately affects my mental faculties." — Princess Lieven to Metternich.

My dilemma is apparently not so modern as I had presumed: whether to allow oneself to be swallowed up in the ubiquitous musical pleasures or take a penknife and sever flesh at the point where the lips come together.

And who is to say that Beethoven did not turn the cruel malady of deafness into an inescapable solution? I ask myself, how does one sustain musical drives when every pseudo-musical utterance, every sound, every human action reeks of disorder, desperation and cold-blooded triviality? Like Lautreamont: "Seeing these things, I have desired to laugh with the others, but this strange imitation was impossible for me." Dante must have made provision after all for the diabolical irreverence of the artist; and he does not even have to move from his study to enjoy it. But the poets turn is yet to come! Imagine a renegade Shakespeare being bombarded with the oily bellying of painted players strutting upon his very doorstep, mounting the trellis by his window, lungs not a whit impaired, vaulting forth into his place of repose and rattling their entrails until his assaulted eardrums cry, no more! What of poor Pepys, the doleful Hanslick? The artists very place of business has been abandoned to the fancy of the money-changers in exchange for weighted pockets. Greasy men in bursting tailcoats gesticulate erotically from lofty perches atop feminine footwear: in reply a hundred human forms nod wearily and resume their atonal masturbation. "Weia, Waga, Woge du Welle, Waile zur Wiege" shrieks Tolstoy in defiance of the fortissimo Wagner flatulation. Humml, humml . . . gurgles of outflow. This tangle of grey bodies is they. Silent, dim, perhaps clinging to one another, their heads buried in their cloaks, they lie together in a heap, in the night . . . he cannot harm you anymore.

Illness mars Hart House concert

By PAUL ENNIS

A notable experiment was marred Sunday night due to the illness of harpsichordist Greta Krauss. The Hart House Orchestra had planned to present two versions of each of two well known works of Bach. Only the fourth Brandenburg concerto and a version of the Harpsichord concerto in F minor survived the mishap.

The latter work, a violin concerto in G minor, was scarred considerably in the transition. With concertmaster Andrew Benac as soloist it was the least successful part of a sometimes successful program. Mr. Benac's playing lacked direction and his phrasing had no dynamic flow. His tone was thin throughout and often flat. The second entry in the opening movement very noticeably so. Except for the fine pizzicato accompaniment in the second movement the orchestra was only adequate.

The concert began with an Overture in G minor. This work is of dubious authorship and has been ascribed to any one of three of Bach's sons. It is not an exceptional composition — only a superlative performance would have brought it off.

Dr. Neel's interpretation of the first two movements was marked by fine dynamic contrasts and 'nice' phrasing. The minuet was ragged however, and the capriccio lifeless. The third movement trio was balanced and the two violins and cello soloists blended well.

Substituted for the concerto in F for Two Recorders and Harpsichord were two chorale preludes and two fugues. The chorale preludes are angelic in character. Some of the orchestra's finest traits were exhibited in this performance.

The emergence of the violas in the first work out of the general level of the music was superb. In the second, the viola and cello melody against violin accompaniment really came off. Subtle contrasting almost destroyed the less than mediocre impression created by the opening works.

All voices were brought out in the fugues but this is not enough for a group of this calibre. Admittedly these were last minute substitutes. Even so why not have the precision and warmth of the last chord throughout?

The Brandenburg was a joy. Bernard Krainis and Hugh Orr, recorders, joined Mr.

Benac as soloists. Their playing was more than suited to the demands of the piece. The novel sound of the recorders dispelled any ill effects of the violin.

While Mr. Benac is highly competent technically, his playing was marred by dynamic sameness and occasional pitch problems. Most of these were in extremely difficult passages such as the double stopped sixteenth note section of the fugue and could be excused in an overall view.

The playing of Mr. Orr and the off-handed Mr. Krainis was delightfully suited to the music. The first movement with its light six note theme and the pulsating fugue of the third were virtually flawless. The sixteenth note runs in the first recorder in the second movement were broken down into two note groups.

This, however, was only a very minor distraction. The three instruments blended well, particularly when the recorders were above the melodic line of the violin.

The accompaniment was well controlled and never heavy. If this is any indication of the orchestra's capabilities the remaining four concerts should be more satisfying than Sunday's.

Pop art demands attention

By Paul Russell

"Pop art", whether we respect it or not, is the strongest trend in International Art at the moment and therefore it demands attention. The Exhibition at the Morris Gallery until Nov. 6, — The Art of Things — offers Toronto viewers a broad and very general glimpse at what forms this trend is taking.

In America, pop art's greatest asset is its immediate relation to the contemporary every-day scene. Wesselman's "American Still Life with Pink Refrigerator" has an impact which is unforgettable in its jarring reflection of the flashy materialism of modern American life.

I found two works by Spain's Sanseundo by far the most interesting pieces in the exhibition. This artist's version is on huge canvasses, executed in heavy impasto technique, with reproduction of well-known historical personages popping out of the painted area in quick vibration.

The theme of such a work (ie., The Kingdom) while immediate, is not a tight relationship to a particular facet of contemporary life. Rather it conjures an image of a general phenomenon with all its human aspects, and sees this phenomenon in its various historical phases. At one moment Machiavelli appears, then a mad modern cocktail party. To the artist the two go together.

Pop art, like just about anything new and different, is very much under attack at the moment. Some try to ignore it completely as a passing fad. The question of whether it is art at all invariably comes up. Whether its art with a capital A or not, it is vital, exciting, immediate and a valid reflection of contemporary life and feeling. What's more — it's great fun! Some News From Hart House

The JCR

The girl who came to supper

Is out to lunch

By RAY WYLIE

Noel Coward's latest offering, The Girl Who Came To Supper, is playing at the O'Keefe Centre until Nov. 2.

Disappointingly Coward has reverted to a worn-out plot to carry his music and lyrics. Coward gives us the Student Prince all over again — unhappy monarch (Jose Ferrer), simple but loving girl (Florence Henderson), rocky road to romance, and final parting scene. All this could be excused if it were compensated for by outstanding lyrics and music, but here too the effort fails badly. There were only two singing skits which came close to captivating the audience, and even their success was due in large part to the individual personalities of Florence Henderson and Tessie O'Shea.

The orchestra did little to help the cast overcome the trite score: the harsh brass and thumping drums, unfortunately sacrificed tonal quality to sheer noise.

With the glaring exception of Jose Ferrer, the play was quite well cast. While undoubtedly a fine actor, Mr. Ferrer is seriously hampered in musical comedy by his voice. It is much too nasal and heavy, lacking that lyric quality which is required in this specialized field, and indeed in this particular role.

Florence Henderson is well suited to her role, but even she had difficulties in rising above the obvious limitations of the script.

Tessie O'Shea gave a captivating, if brief, performance as a London fish and chips girl, while Irene Brown had the necessary grasp of humorous sophistication to capture her role of the Queen Mother.

If sometimes a little too gaudy, Irene Sharaff's costumes were suitable to the period of the play (London, 1911).

Oliver Simth's set design provided one of the few escapes from the general mediocrity of the show. In the Regent's apartment, he created a warm and intimate playing area out of the cavern-like stage of the O'Keefe Centre. Again, by the ingenious use of pillars and false perspective, he gave the Ball Room an uncanny sense of depth and height which won the audience's spontaneous applause.

As an excuse for an evening out at the O'Keefe, The Girl Who Came to Supper should prove adequate. As an original and outstanding contribution to the theatre, it fails by most standards — hackneyed plot, uninspired music, commonplace lyrics, and unevenness of singing voices.

There are a few high spots during the two and one half hours, but they fail to rescue the production from the quagmire of mediocrity in which it is engulfed.

The militant Right speaks

By Jim MacKenzie

"I intend to examine his philosophy," Pierre Berton said Thursday night. He was opening an interview with Dr. Fred Schwarz, president of the Christian Anti-Communist Crusade and an often-quoted spokesman for the American "Right".

Mr. Berton won the battle — with the help of Toronto Daily Star writer Mark Gayn — but lost the war. He didn't look at any basic principles on which Schwarz constructs his attitude toward the Communist program of "co-existence".

A talk with Schwarz driving across Highway 401 from Malton Airport to TV station CFTO in Agincourt brought out the "philosophy" which Berton failed to touch on the half-hour taped show.

Dr. Schwarz is an ex-medical doctor from Australia, whose latest book You Can Trust the Communists — to be Communists has more than 750,000 copies in print. His California TV program, School of Anti-Communism, has recently outrated all other shows running at the same time period.

He is listened to by more and more college students every time he returns to a campus.

He tells them that freedom of speech is not unlimited. "A society of freedom is limited by law," he said Thursday night. "And these laws should be stringently enforced when they are being threatened."

He says that no university can be divorced from the society and continuity in which it exists. "The university has to be a part of the legislative process. No university can have complete freedom."

To Dr. Schwarz, the crucial point in American philosophy is that the Constitution outlines the attitudes to be assumed by Americans. This is his basic principle. From this belief, all his subsequent rightist statements grow.

But he refuses to be called a rightist. "This term has just been applied to me by the press and TV — the mutual quotation club of selective falsehood. They conduct a calculated campaign of misrepresentation," he said.

"If I am a radical, then so is Kennedy and the others. We all would be guilty only by association with certain elements. Why doesn't someone define this term 'Right'?"

Whatever the term, Dr. Schwarz denies Communists the right to say whatever they want in free society. The American Constitution has not become relative. It is as much an absolute as his first principle.

This rules out coexistence. "But the very differences in the meaning of the term to Russian Communists and Chinese Communists and liberal Americans makes coexistence impossible as an ideology, he said.

"We deal with philosophies and ideologies. We are like pathologists. We only study disease. We leave the preventive steps up to an informed public."

Dr. Schwarz sees five kinds of Americans to be informed: the hostile; hysterical; hypocritical; hoodwinked; and hesitant.

The hostile are what must be called leftists — the opposition. The hysterical are "medically sick, seeking an escape mechanism from reality. They are afraid to see that we are losing to a calculated plot for world domination. Intellectual revolts result when their thin world is smashed by reality."

The hypocrites are the Democrats. "They resist and slander us because we draw many members from the Republican party. But we don't rely on big business for financial support. Ninety per cent of our support comes from 50,000 individuals. . . . Oil companies have only sponsored our shows. . . . Our books are always open."

The hoodwinked are the public who have been "misinformed." To Dr. Schwarz, they are "our great hope, because when correctly informed, they can side with us."

The hesitant are those who are thinking, but who don't want to get "involved in anything."

Why has the Right come to the fore lately? "Because of public response to our message. Not one false statement made against us has been able to be proved. I have never pressured or slandered anyone."

And how is the Communist force doing in America? "It's difficult to say. Their internal strength could be insignificant. But the point is that they are the bridgehead of a malignancy that has beat down a billion people and is aiming, very gradually, day by day, to win America."

Dr. Schwarz works from principles, perhaps non-flexible. He works by constant analogies — which, as Mark Gayn demonstrated last night, don't work in every case.

Last night, his first appearance in Canada made him defend his analogies, his belief that cultural exchanges with Russia put Russia in the advantageous position. He hadn't visited Russia as had Pierre Berton, and hadn't read Marx and Lenin in the original, as Berton remarked Gayn had.

But the pre-determined Berton moral victory was effected only by skipping the vulnerable first principles and making a typical Berton appeal to an after-dinner audience. The audience — yet to see the tape — could have been informed rather than persuaded. The Right could have been devastated, as was evidently desired, on a higher plane.

As Gayn said to Schwarz after the taping: "Too bad it was only a half-hour show."

But this came only after he had closed the show by saying he was relieved to know the Right was represented by men like Schwarz.

Dr. Schwarz talks on the definitions of co-existence and asks if it is possible today at 4:30 in the West Hall of University College.

CLASH WITH HOMECOMING SHOW

Rinkies & Colts meet in key game

By GORD BELLMORE

Poor scheduling will deprive the audience at tonight's Homecoming Show of possibly the best entertainment of the weekend.

But even if the show didn't clash with the intermediate football game at Varsity Stadium between Baby Blues and Western Colts, people would probably find something else to do, judging by past turnouts at Rinkie games.

The Students' Administrative Council can't be knocked for planning its Homecoming Show for the same night as the football game... probably nobody on that able council even knew there was a game. The indifferent attitude is nothing new. The intermediates have never had support.

Tonight's game is the key one of the schedule for both Baby Blues and Colts. The team that wins will have a stranglehold on the league title.

Currently, Varsity and Western are tied with Ryerson Rams, the third team in the league, for first place. Each team has won one game and lost one in the short four-game schedule.

It goes without saying that Baby Blues and Colts will be going all-out for tonight's game.

In fact, Baby Blues have shown great spirit in both their games this fall. They were sharp in beating Ryerson 15-0 last week and in their first effort against Western they could have avoided a 22-14 setback but for a costly fumble in their own end of the field.

This year's Rinkie team seems to thrive on adversity. All season Baby Blues have been plagued by injuries and the constant shifting of personnel back and forth from the Senior Blues. Yet they have maintained good spirit under these conditions.

For tonight's game, Tom Verth (end), Andy Grodzinski (tackle), Terry Bates (guard), Andy Szandner (halfback), and Pete Sutherland (halfback) will play for Rinkies. These players will also dress for Senior Blues' game against Western tomorrow.

INTERFACULTY ROUNDUP

Irish pose only challenge for Victoria

By AL SCHOENBORN

There's only one team remaining in the interfaculty football loop with serious intentions of preventing Victoria College from walking away with its sixth consecutive Mulock Cup.

The Double-Blue from St. Michael's convincingly displayed its stubbornness Wednesday by crushing SPS 27-6. This show of strength moves the Irish to within two points of first-place Victoria.

Only a narrow loss to Vic in the league opener spoils St. Mike's record this fall. Next week St. Mike's encounters undefeated Victoria in a battle for first place.

A Pat Hennessey touchdown and one of Bill Meagher's three converts gave St. Mike's a slim 7-0 half-time lead over the Engineers. But a 20point third quarter featuring t.d.s by Vern McCreary, Tony Fiorini, and Jay Govan put the game on ice before Glen Katsuyama tallied the SPS points in the final stanza.

In Group II play, Pharmacy won its second consecutive game, beating Trinity 14-7. Keith Flexman paced the druggists with a major and two converts, while Orest Seychuk added a touchdown. Charles Cooper scored a major for the Black Panthers and Paul Wilson added the convert.

RUGGER

Tries by John Maki and Steve Richie gave Meds A a narrow 6-5 victory over PHE A. The Phys Ed points came on a try by Craig Williamson, converted by Andy Szandner.

Vic I continued to roll along in first place on the strength of an 11-0 victory over an improved UC team. Bill Jackson took care of all the Vic scoring on three tries and a convert.

Law trampled Architecture 26-0 as Clarence Ekstrand led the Perry Masons with three tries while George Brozier booted four converts.

Emmanuel scraped by Second Division defending champion New College 6-3 on tries by John McFarich and Bob McElhinney.

SOCCER

Meds A moved into a four-way tie for third place in Group I soccer yesterday on the strength of a 1-0 decision over previously undefeated Vic I. The lone goal was scored by Winston MacLean.

Other action saw Knox and Pharmacy fight to a scoreless draw, while SPS III got a three-goal performance from Bill Papailias in a 5-1 win over Meds B.

LACROSSE

Action centered on the lower Groups this week as a result of schedule difficulties in Groups I and II.

Trinity seems to be the team to beat in Group III. Its latest victim was Knox by a 7-2 count. The big man for Trinity was Dave Crossley with five markers, while Norm Trowell and Bil Kilfoyle scored the others. John Fatum hit for Both Knox tallies.

Dave Pugsley's four goals paced SPS II to a 7-1 victory over St. Mike's B. Pre-Med I edged Vic II 3-2 on goals by Bob Sorokolit, Carlos Frewin and John Kempson. Tom Truesdale and Bob Hopkins countered for Vic.

A hat trick by Gene Shoul-dra led Meds C to a 6-3 win over the new entry from Forestry. Gary Watte got all three goals for the losers.

In an exhibition contest, SPS I (Group II) took Meds A (Group I) 11-6. Gerry McIntyre and Bill Burgess each scored three for the Engineers and Wayne Archer added a pair. Jeff Hurwitz, Mike Easterbrooke and Don Stemp shared the scoring for Meds with two apiece.

SAC asks Tarheels to have no segregation

Officials of the Students' Administrative Council Tarheel exchange have requested that none of the program's compulsory activities at the University of North Carolina be planned for segregated locations.

(Yvonne Yearwood (LS), the only Negro to apply, was rejected from the exchange.)

Johanne Bennett (IV Trin), Tarheel chairman, and Diana Bennett (III UC), weekends chairman, emphasizing the multi-racial nature of the University of Toronto, wrote in a letter to the chairman of the North Carolina exchange committee: "Most of our exchangers feel very strongly about the necessity of integration in the university community."

For this reason, the exchange students are chiefly interested in "the ideas we will bring back from your discussions," they said.

The letter asked for prior notice of the discussion topics so students might make preparatory studies "as a basis for expanding their own ideas." In this way, they can fully exploit the educational opportunities of the exchange, the SAC officials said.

Blues down Ryerson Rams 3-1

By KATY O'SULLIVAN

In a game which pushed them into second place in the intercollegiate soccer league, Varsity Soccer Blues triumphed over Ryerson Rams 3-1 yesterday on the back campus.

It was a fast, hard-fought contest in which Blues controlled all the play. Varsity showed itself a well-conditioned team and although this was not Blues' best game to date they showed a fire and drive that was missing when Ryerson defeated them four weeks ago.

Positional changes saw star halfback Peter Haynes shifted to the forward line while Dom Dente went to Haynes old position at left half. In his new defence capacity Dente was outstanding! With his speed and steady playing he may be the spark Blues' defence has been lacking.

Inside forward Bobby Lewis gave another excellent performance for Toronto proving himself a constant threat to Ryerson's defence.

Vince Carrubba opened the scoring when he kicked Rams' only goal at the 35-minute mark of the first half. Peter Haynes tied the game up just as the second period began when he took a corner kick from Jeff Mahon and headed it toward the goal. The ball bounced off Ryerson goalkeeper Ed Korchak's hands, dropped onto the goal line, and was tapped in by Haynes.

URS MAAG

Bill Troost scored the winning goal when Korchak lost the ball in colliding with another Toronto forward. The final goal for Varsity was hammered in by Pat Terrelongue 10 minutes before the final whistle.

In a traumatic play halfway through the second period—a play characteristic of the bad luck which plagued Blues in their loss to Western on Saturday and in the first half of this game—Urs Maag fired a low hard shot that looked like a sure goal.

The ball bounced off a defender to Jeff Mahon who pushed it back toward the goal where it bounced off the crossbar. Terrelongue slammed the ball in again only to have it fall just outside the goal post.

Blues' next game will be Saturday against first-place Western on the back campus at noon. If Blues win they will be one point out of first place and a strong contender for the intercollegiate championship.

Comments: Ace scorer, Keith Murphy, pulled a muscle in his right leg in the early moments of this game and will miss action when Blues meet Western . . . Nick Walker, who missed yesterday's game because of a twisted ankle, should be back in the lineup tomorrow . . . Dave Olive, playing his first game for Toronto yesterday, showed tremendous speed and should become a regular member of the lineup.

JOHNSON AND SANDERS MISS GAME AGAINST AGGIES

Back campus field takes toll on UTRFC

A UTRFC

Syndicated Service

The concrete-like pitch of the back campus claimed its second major victim yesterday, and Varsity Rugby Blues will be without the services of two of their leading scorers for Saturday's match against Ontario Agricultural Aggies.

Hard-running Rod Sanders joined Larry Johnson in the infirmary when knee scrapes suffered on the cushionless field became infected, and broke out in boils. Sanders has entered hospital for treatment.

It is the second consecutive weekend that Johnson will be out of the line-up. Blues' perennial all-star has been crippled by shin-splits incurred on the grassless pitch.

Sanders' position will be adequately filled by John O'Brien, a two year veteran with the Intermediates who sees his first Senior League action tomorrow. O'Brien contributed six points to Intermediates' rout of Western a week ago.

One more Blues stalwart has been placed on the injured list for Saturday's encounter with OAC, but Gethin Hughes' "injury" is less serious — he's getting married.

Fortunately for Blues, Bob Dodds' return to the line-up will nicely fill the spot vacated by Hughes.

Although Blues swamped Aggies 36-3 last week in Guelph, the heavier farm lads have always been a serious problem for Toronto, and the Aggies will be out for revenge. If Blues slip into the complacent play which characterized their early-season outings, OAC could upset.

In the Scrum: Hooker Bill Stow's place-kicking ambitions have always been frustrated by the toe heroics of Captain Paul Wilson. But now Wilson has relented a little, and has promised Stow the opportunity of kicking . . . whenever Blues can build up a 25-point lead. Last week in Guelph, Stow received his first chance, a convert attempt, and made good. The Intermediates play host to Western in the second game of the rugby doubleheader, immediately following Blues' contest. Game time for the Toronto-OAC match on the back campus is 11:00 a.m.

Varsity's three rowing crews compete in London

University of Toronto's three rowing crews journey to London for an international exhibition regatta Saturday at Lake Fenshaw. In addition to five Ontario schools, competition is expected from Wayne State University of Detroit, Michigan State University, and Marietta College of Ohio.

Blues' Varsity crew will be without two members with which it has handily won all its races this fall. Since stroke Forbes Marnoch and Roger Jackson are ineligible for the Intercollegiate Championships November 2, Blues have decided to drop them for the remainder of the exhibition schedule.

Substituting for Marnoch and Jackson will be Dave Hogg and Paul Vogt, both elevated from the Junior Boat. The Varsity Eight with its new personnel has been practising all this week, and is expected to be as powerful as ever.

Toronto's Junior Boat benefits handsomely by the exchange, as both Marnoch and Jackson will be rowing for the Juniors. If the Freshmen crew holds up, chances are good for a Blues' sweep.

Should Blues finish in second place after winning their three remaining games, they would be entitled to a playoff. They would then have defeated first-place Queen's and under league rules the second-place team can challenge the top team to a playoff if they have beaten the first team at least once during the season.

Booze, broads & floats make Homecoming '63

Beer does that to some people (five minutes after the game).

vsp: czornecki

Twisting on Bloor Street and broken bottles in Varsity Stadium marked this year's University of Toronto Homecoming Weekend.

The Friday night show in Varsity Arena, with Don Cullen of the Bohemian Embassy as master of ceremonies, featured Lady Godiva wearing an engineering jacket and very little else. She wheeled into the arena on a motorcycle in the wake of the Lady Godiva Memorial Band and the cannon (which was not fired).

Soloist Ingrid Festell opened the show with two arias and a selection from My Fair Lady.

A trampoline act and several satirical skits by the Sempsters Too, three U of T students, followed, and the Pioneers concluded the show with several well-chosen folk songs.

After a frenzied night of float-building, the parade started at 10 a.m. The 25 floats held up traffic all around the campus for almost two hours, finally passing University College at 11:30 a.m. for judging.

Architecture took first place for its depiction of campus architectural fads, while Knox and Trinity came second and third respectively.

Police reported an "unusually well behaved weekend" on the liquor front. About six summonses were issued for illegal possession of liquor at the game, and two Western students were arrested on the street after the game.

Although several policemen were stationed throughout the stands a number of empty bottles were left behind when the fans rushed onto the field at the end of the game.

Four police officers guarding each goal-post prevented any attempts to tear down the posts.

Police reported no raids on fraternity houses.

Peking si, Moscow no -- Schwarz

By JIM MacKENZIE

The modern belief that the Chinese Communists are war mongers and that the Russian Communists are more conciliatory is "a slanderous attack on the Chinese," an American anti-Communist said Friday.

Speaking for an hour in the near-fall West Hall of University College, Dr. Fred Schwarz, president of the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade, said the Chinese program is "a dynamic, historic conquest without thermonuclear conflict."

Dr. Schwarz made the statement in his speech — "Is co-existence possible for the West?"

Dr. Schwarz said the whole problem of co-existence depends on the definition of the term in the United States, Russia and China.

China follows the doctrine of Marx, he said, whereby "government is seen as the oppressive instrument of the bourgeoisie to defeat the proletariat. The united proletariat, the Communist party, overthrows the government."

He said the Russian non-Marxist program was best seen in Khrushchev's exploding bombs after a moratorium, and threatening thermonuclear war on the United States if Cuba were attacked.

Artsmen steal Skule flag

The Engineers' flag has been stolen.

It was taken from the flagbearer's room in Stephenson House sometime Friday night. Jim Cortney (II APSC) had stored it in a bag which he left in his room, but when he opened the bag at Varsity Arena for the Homecoming Show he found nothing but towels from the residence.

An anonymous letter received by The Varsity, purporting to be from the chairman of the "Arts Cannon Stealing Committee," Alexander Y, said the flag would be returned "as soon as the engineers place in the hands of some neutral person cash or a certified cheque for the United Appeal for whatever they think their honor is worth". A sum of $25 was suggested.

Engineering Society publicity director Bob Morris (III APSC) said Sunday the Society has no proof that the flag has not been destroyed. "Until such time as concrete evidence to that effect is obtained, we refuse to consider the proposal of the so-called ACSC," he said.

"We feel there is a definite difference between a college caper and common theft," Morris said. "It requires very little intelligence to steal articles from people in your own residence."

Nothing like sex to make a contest popular, The Varsity feels. Add a $5-bill as first prize and we have a swinger. Here's what it's all about.

An anonymous University of Toronto student's letter appears in this month's Playboy Advisor. Playboy magazine advises him. But we think Playboy missed a bet. Here's the correspondence:

"Two friends and I decided to live off campus this year and succeeded in losing a fine basement pad. It was the perfect place to bring the local chicks and they really loved it. In fact, they love our cove so well, they now come in force — four and five at a time and at all hours of the day and night.

"These girls naturally think that three guys like us are helpless and they want to cook, clean and press everything — including us! So now our place is famous and we haven't got a moment to ourselves and are suffering scholastically as a result. We don't want to limit the girls to a timetable for visits since they'd probably blast off entirely. But how can we make them a bit more regular with their visits and actions without offending them? — L. H. Toronto, Ontario."

Playboy replies:

"Don't tell them when they can come—tell them when they can't. Agree among yourselves on certain hours when your place will be off limits for outsiders and post a notice to that effect. The realization that they can't wander in at all hours will enhance your aura of mystery and add to your masculine appeal." Horsefeathers, The Varsity tells Playboy.

So for the most imaginative and humorous substitute for Playboy's Ann Outlandersish advice, we'll pay and we'll publish the result.

The best reply from a male student wins $5 and everlasting fame by getting his name and artistry into The Varsity.

The best female reply gets (1) to sew on a button for bachelor wk (who admits he's helpless) in a Varsity office ceremony rich in the pomp and pageantry of ages past and (2) a steak dinner complete with wine (if she's old enough — we hope she isn't) with handsome Jim Laxer, Varsity features editor and gourmet internationally known as The Fabulous Bubblegut.

Keep the entries under 200 words so we can print a selection of cute ones. Mail them or bring them in to our judge — loveable old Ken Drushka.

Deadline is 2 p.m. Friday and results will be in Monday's Varsity.

Lectures on theological and psychological guilt

"Guilt—Theological or Psychological?" packed the Friday noon-hour lecture in the Anatomy Building but many listeners felt they learned little about guilt itself.

Visiting Chicago psychiatrist Dr. David Busby admitted that he had too little time to cover his subject, which he called "a universal experience and enigma to mankind."

He said there is also a misunderstanding between psychotherapists and clergymen because they use the same concepts but with different meanings, including "long lists of modifiers such as "too much, too little in heroic attempts at definition."

Dr. Busby pointed out the distinction between "guilt — a state of being, theologically speaking — whether one is aware of it or not" and "guilt
Feeling — a sense of guilt."

Speaking more as a therapist, he said: "I believe in the integrated life, the holistic view of man, with his total environment which includes God."

"It is an essential conviction for the causative factors and treatment of man. The whole therapy must be this;

any less is inadequate."

To illustrate several points in his lecture, Dr. Busby gave a case history of the hostile dependency of a "mama's boy" who buried his guilt of resentment until it erupted when he was a missionary in Arabia trying to undo wrongs which are passed over in everyday society.

In this case and others he felt "like a spectator to the therapy of Divine healing."

"But the psychiatrist should treat only inappropriate (neurotic, psychotic) guilt feelings and not try to remove true, objective or theological guilt, which should be left to the clergy."

Campus Canada is missing

Campus Canada is missing.
This national Canadian magazine made up of contributions from university students across Canada was due to arrive on campus Oct. 16 and has still not arrived.

Two unconfirmed publishing dates were set by University of British Columbia editor Roger Macafee, and the magazine was to be shipped to this university by guaranteed air freight for distribution preparation last week.

John Cosgrove (I APSC), chairman of the CUS committee on campus, admitted Thursday night that he didn't know what had happened to the shipment.

He said he believed publishing was being postponed to add material from the NFCUS conference held in the week of Sept. 30. No information, confirmation or otherwise, had arrived from editor Macafee.

"There were no confirmed dates set for anything," Cosgrave said in an interview.

"The University of British Columbia asked to publish Campus Canada at the NFCUS conference and Roger Macafee was the editor in charge."

The University of Toronto did not enter a bid.

Cosgrave wasn't sure either whether the magazine had even been published yet. "The delay in delivery has caught us completely by surprise."

Macafee was also last year's Canadian University Press president.

Reports from last year's CUP conference held last December arrived at universities Thursday.

Blood drive opens on campus today

The campus blood drive starting at St. Michael's College today comes at a crucial time in metropolitan Toronto. Last week, the supply of blood on hand in Toronto for emergency use had dwindled to its lowest on record.

The university objective is 3,000 pints.

Last Friday, one emergency operation requiring 20 pints of positive-type blood would have exhausted the city supply at the Toronto Red Cross blood transfusion centre.

"It was a case of barely scraping by from hour to hour to hour," said the medical director of the Jarvis St. clinic.

Last week, also, an urgent appeal went out for negative types of blood.

All blood used in Metro — 90,000 pints this year — is free. Years ago the rate was $25 a bottle.

No money, half an hour and an over-active student's heart can do the trick for Toronto.

St. Michael's starts the bleeding with a clinic in the lounge of Loretto College from 9 to 11 a.m., and 12:30 to 4:15 p.m.

Tomorrow, Trinity, St.
Hilda's, Massey, Wycliffe and Law can give blood at a clinic in the Trinity Buttery.
The hours are the same as those at SMC.

Medicine can bleed at 67 College St., from noon to 3:30 and 5:30 to 8 p.m. tomorrow.

Two clinics at Margaret Addison Hall Wednesday and Thursday from 9 to 11 a.m., and 12:30 to 4 p.m. will accommodate Victoria, Music and the Museum students.

Other hours will be published Friday and next week.

Lapalme to open exhibit

Georges - Emile Lapalme, Quebec minister of cultural affairs, will officially open the next Hart House art exhibition — "Ten Montreal Artists".

The opening will take place in the Great Hall next Monday at 8 p.m. Warden McCulley said that he expects the opening to be one of the most interesting events of the year at Hart House.

John Bowden, secretary of the Hart House art committee, announced Friday that all members of Hart House are invited to attend. Invitations for themselves and a guest may be obtained free at the undergraduate office.

Expecting a large attendance, Bowden advised all members to obtain their invitations as soon as possible.

Represented in the art exhibition will be works by 10 of French Canada's best known artists. Among them—Bellefleur, Gendron, Molinari and deTonnancour.

The show will run Nov. 4—24 in the Hart House art gallery. Regular hours are 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. Women 2 p.m. to 5 p.m.

Schwarz (cont.)

"The Russian program is frighteningly inefficient, while the Chinese is appealing to the young and idealistic, even on the United States' campuses," he said.

"The Chinese literature has never advocated necessary war. Avoidance of a thermonuclear war, as far as is possible, is their belief. They prefer internal action by the Communist party, leading to revolution.

"When missiles were forced out of Cuba, China said they never should have been put there in the first place; that they always believed the Communist pathway was one of progressive socialism."

Detecting this progress was the necessary step for non-Communist countries, Dr. Schwarz explained. "In the U.S.A., Communists don't attack the bourgeoisie — Kennedy — but rather the Right: me."

"The conflict in the two programs may sharpen the efficiency of the winning program. There have been so many changes in communism that this dialectic would seem to be nearing them to their final objective."

Berths open for graduates

The fifth University of Windsor Conference on Canadian-American relations will be held in Windsor Nov. 5-9.

It will be the first to which students have been invited.

The topic to be considered will be "Domestic Problems in Canada and the United States — segregation and separatism and their effects on North American solidarity."

Among the speakers featured at the five-day conference will be Paul Martin, secretary of state for external affairs, and Dean Rusk, U.S. secretary of state.

The University of Toronto will send one graduate student to the meeting. Application forms are available at the SAC office, and will be received there until Monday.

manuscript by Eric Rollinson, Prelude and Fugue in G minor by Dupre and Dr. Willan's Introduction, Passacaglia and Fugue.

A Negro native of South Africa who escaped to Canada via the "underground railway" will be guest speaker at a closed United Nations Club dinner in Hart House Thursday.

Paul Richards will address the members and visitors on Life in South Africa. He now is a Toronto high school teacher.

About 200 tickets to the dinner, at 25 cents each, are available on a first-come basis at the SAC office and FROS house.

our leaders?

The selection of a new leader for the Conservative party in Britain and the almost open search in the Canadian Progressive Conservative party for a replacement for John Diefenbaker provide a pointed commentary on part of the malaise in which our generation finds itself.

In a society as politically oriented as ours the role of the leader of a political party should be clear - to provide leadership for both the members of his political party and the citizens he hopes to govern.

A naive person might think our political leaders attained their positions of prominence because they were the men with good ideas, and the forcefulness and ability to carry these ideas out.

The leaders would appear to be men capable of assessing the conditions of their time, drawing conclusive solutions and carrying out policies based on rational decisions.

But once the inquiring mind, which most students have, is provided with an education that demonstrates the potential of men and ideas the whole system crumbles.

The result has been that the youth of this country, although it might not realize why, has become disenchanted with what it perceives in its political leaders.

A political leader in this country is selected for the support he can command from the wide variety of pressure groups and influential individuals - with very little emphasis on his abilities as a man of ideas and administrative capabilities.

He must be able to draw the support of organized labor; but he need not be able to analyze and be willing to act on a labor decision as controversial as the Great Lakes trusteeship situation.

He must be able to get along with the Argus Corporation; but he need not understand and be prepared to regulate the activities of that organization in its dealings with thousands of Canadian citizens.

He must also be to some degree acceptable to the government leaders of other nations; but it is unnecessary for him to act on humanitarian principles while a major ally helps perpetuate atrocities on the population of South Vietnam.

What is essential is that he be acceptable to a majority of the groups whose influence lies in their highly organized membership, their financial resources or their vociferous nature. The men who control these groups, in effect if not in fact, control the selection of our leaders.

The end result is not dissimilar to a fictitious character the editors of the Reader's Digest might create.

The political leaders of this country have failed the people of the country, particularly the youth. They have not acted as the occasions demanded they act, but rather have acted in compliance with the pressures brought to bear under the various circumstances.

In Quebec the leadership which was lacking in the political parties came to the fore in an apolitical manner. In the United States the lack of political leadership on the racial question resulted in the leadership in this field developing outside political lines.

In English speaking Canada the same thing is slowly happening. It is too late for the political parties to change their tactics, even if they were willing or able to.

This generation's youth is desperately in need of intelligent and dynamic leadership.

We can only wait for the first crisis and hope that able leaders will appear through other than political channels.

An irksome banana in Hart House

top - posed

By JAMES NOHRNBERG

Herbert Whittaker — director of the current Hart House production — has adapted The Three Sisters for stage presentation by adding an element of farce and funny business for which Chekhov's text gives little authority.

One example must suffice to illustrate Whittaker's embellishments: Chekhov has his doctor conclude his drunken monologue on his worthlessness and unreality by suddenly presenting the play's cuckolded school-teacher with a banana — a piece of symbolism indelicate at best, and quite inappropriate to Chekhov's imagery or to the elegiac accidia of an old order with the sickness unto death. The banana incident is pure invention.

The Doctor's despair stems from the fact that he has forgotten all he ever knew: he cannot cure anything because this is a community of incurables. It is, of course, difficult to perform a play where the formula for action is: Don't just do something — stand there.

With the exception of the bourgeois pushers, these characters exhibit a marvellous paralysis of the will, and all the stage business they go through is a species of distraction, obsolete response, and timekilling. (The philosophic projection of such a vision of society is fatalism, and the sinister shadow of the triple female variously known as The Fates, Norns, and Wyrd sisters, presides over the social destiny in the background of the play).

Far from the characters developing and flowering into some significant action, they are quietly smothered by their shyness, diffidence, and subjectivity: each retreats into the prison-cell of himself, the windowless monads of spinsterhood, introversion, and provincial isolation. (Irina has forgotten the Italian for window).

To get around this dramatic stalemate the director has resorted sometimes to gimmickry like the above, and to a good deal of business, too much of which takes place in the penumbral obscurity of the theatre sideaisles. Many of Chekhov's ambiguities have been prematurely explained to the audience: when Natasha disappears into the darkness for her rendezvous with middle-class adultery, she greets her semi-visible friend with the stage-whisper, "Love". This is not in the text; it gives away the story too early.

I would not like to think the audience was being patronized here (though an audience that arrives late and displays a compulsion to laugh at the most straight forward dialogue perhaps deserves patronizing).

Concerning the acting, there is something to praise in every performance, but Beth Morris's Natasha — the bride, all elbow and reflex-smile, bourgeoisie to the back teeth — carries off the honors.

Chekhov's theme here is that of the expropriators expropriated, not by a revolutionary proletariat with a millennial gospel of work, but by a middle-class acting out an ethic of utilitarian efficiency and enlightened selfishness. Miss Morris puts this across with excellent acting.

A second fine performance, despite the initial impression that he is going to play it for laughs, is Urjo Kareda's Kulygin; Kareda looks something like Laughton, and combines a similar obtuseness with deft histrionics. John McNeilly's Solyony and Peter Ackers's Rode are also standouts.

Anthony Burger as the child-man Prozoroff is uneven; George Friend as Colonel Vershinin is too even. Friend has a public address system voice that could process anything, but particularly a pitch for snake oil.

His role is very difficult, because it is the least varied example of a character who uses a topic of conversation in a way as repetitive and compulsive as Lady MacBeth washing her hands. Of the three sisters themselves, Rita Merkelis and Krysia Jarmicki do very credible jobs, but Sheila MacDonald's Masha suffers in her big scenes from both glibness and forced intensity. Like Friend, Miss MacDonald has the advantage of a natural stage presence, without, unfortunately, being quite convincing in this particular role.

We are told that Baron Tusenbach is not yet thirty; Jeremy Adamson, who plays the part, has the limitation of being not quite twenty. The smaller roles are competently handled.

Concerning the staging, there was too much activity at the fringes, though perhaps I have the tunnel vision conditioned by a notion of a Newtonian receptacle down there at the other end of the room. I felt Natasha's exit in Act I was overdone; the party that featured the Doctor dancing was, however, both a triumph for Heinar Pillar and his director. Likewise the green sash incident: Natasha claims her inappropriate belting is really not very green; then she turns to go into the dining-room, displaying to the audience an expanse of viridian that reaches from her waist to the floor. Moments like this, I daresay, justify the public's attendance.

CANADA IN CRISIS (1)

(This is the first of a series of articles by English and French Canadian students on the subject of English-French relations in Canada).

A tale of two cities

By JIM LAXER

Varsity Features Editor

University of Montreal students feel a definite friendship for U of T. They have a vague feeling that Ontario students are sympathetic to their problems. This is in striking contrast to their strong dislike of all things McGill.

Montreal's two great universities characteristically share opposite sides of the same mountain; McGill looking south on the harbor and the old commercial downtown — U of M, massive and vertical facing the Laurentians to the north.

Both schools of the mountain are looking to U of T to side with them in the dispute. Large sections of McGill, the ancient school of English Westmount, are determined to maintain their control of the river city. The U of M, a focal point of the new French Canada is striving to gain economic control of Quebec for the native Quebecois.

Disagreements between the two student bodies range from local education issues to the vexing national question. Different conceptions of student journalism, divergent views on the role of church and state in society — an entire dichotomy of thought exists on the whole problem of student action in society.

On a recent trip to the campus of U of M, I found the student body intensely political, fed up with English Quebec and looking to the country for a sympathetic hearing.

Many U of M students argue that the English minority of Quebec (about the same size as the French minority of Ontario) should not be allowed to speak for all English Canada, by default.

"The dialogue that is needed must essentially be a dialogue between two cities — French Canadian Montreal and English Canadian Toronto," said one student.

A large proportion of French Canadian students have become "separatists — if necessary."

They are willing to work within the Canadian context — but only if far-reaching changes are realized — now. Each day that passes more of their number cross the line to join the swelling ranks of those who would found a "French Canadian Laurentide Republic."

French Canadians are sorry about the violence of the FLQ — but theirs is the reasoned sorrow of peaceful but determined men and not the anger of a vehement English Canada.

The French Canadians are a warm-hearted people. Their love for the whole of this country even at this hour of strained relations is impressive.

University of Montreal students assume that French Canada is a nation. The great dispute is whether this nation's aspirations can best be realized through separatism or a modified form of Confederation. Events in English Canada are likely to decide which faction will win the struggle.

Confederalism, the most popular French Canadian answer to separatism, calls for wide decentralization of power. Constitutionally this could involve the establishment of two semi-federal governments for English and French Canada. Education, broadcasting, most economic matters and criminal and civil codes would be entrusted to these governments. Above this level a federal government would control foreign affairs, tariff policy, defence, currency, and postage.

Estimates on the relative strength of the factions vary widely. Guy Bertrand, editor of the student newspaper, Le Quartier Latin, gives the Confederatists 65 per cent of the campus and the Separatists 35 per cent. He added that supporters of the present form of Confederation are virtually non-existent.

Most conversations with French Canadian students ended on a note of optimism. One said "We are, after all, the descendants of two great European peoples, both instrumental in the evolution of democracy and humanism. If we cannot work out our problems amicably with much in common then what chance does the United Nations have in the world at large? Geography has dictated that our destiny must be interrelated if we are both to survive in North America."

To relieve Sid Smith sterility

By GARY HIRST

The architectural sterility of Sidney Smith Hall will be relieved within the next year. A bronze sculpture by Walter Yarwood will embellish one of the panels of the lecture wing facing St. George St.

Mr. Yarwood's model was accepted by the Varsity Fund Committee Sept. 26 after an initial invitation to submit one March 5.

The sculpture will contain about 13 pieces supported by a framework of steel. Yarwood said that it isn't meant to mean anything except possibly the diversified interests of Arts and Science students. The shadows cast by the various parts on each other will provide the main interest in the work, he said.

The sculpture will occupy the panel immediately adjacent to the main entrance of Sidney Smith Hall. Originally it was to extend out over the entrance area in what Yarwood termed a yard-arm effect. This extension of the sculpture was dropped by the Varsity Fund Committee because they thought that it would invite certain groups to hang effigies and other articles from it.

Yarwood felt that the weight of the bronze was a definite consideration. It will weigh 2,500-3,000 pounds that the panel may not be able to support. If so, the sculpture will be cast in aluminum.

Yarwood's studio is located on the fourth floor of an old piano factory in a semi-slum. The studio was once a frozen food locker. It opens out to the roof of a lower floor where Yarwood sometimes works. Inside amid the pipes are some of Yarwood's works, and a pregnant cat which he calls Eileen because it tends to lean.

Yarwood, a stocky virile man who wears dungarees, sneakers, and windbreaker at his studio, once attended Ed Humberstone Collegiate in Toronto; later Western Technical School. At Western he studied art, after which he became a free-lance artist, doing mainly advertising work.

He laughingly commented: "Then I was making money."

After 20 years in the commercial art field he decided, at the age of 40, to try sculpturing. At present, Yarwood has been sculpturing for four years.

His idea of criticism: To believe their good criticisms is "to induce a false sense of grandeur." And to believe their bad criticism is to go mad.

Yarwood's other major effort is a totem type of sculpture which rises out of a fountain at the Winnipeg International Airport Building. This piece, more than three stories high, is an interpretation of the building's architecture, Yarwood said.

He plans to do another major work for Coca-Cola's new plant in Thorncliffe, Ont. Yarwood said the president of Coca-Cola desired something more subtle than a glaring Coke sign. The sculpture will represent a coke bottle being raised and lowered.

Blues swamp Aggies for second week in a row

Varsity Rugby Blues duplicated their 36-2 rout of Ontario Agricultural College last week in Guelph by swamping Aggies 34-3 Saturday on the back campus.

Like the Guelph rampage, Blues started slowly, requiring 16 minutes to hit the scoresheet. From then on the play rarely left the visitors' end of the pitch.

Blues' outstanding performers Saturday were halves Terry Picton and Rich Hayman who gave the backs plenty of the ball and rewarded the forwards for their hard work. Picton received good protection from wing-forward Doug Bosomworth who is as efficient with his feet as Carl Brewer can be with his hands.

Captain Paul Wilson topped Blues' pointgetters with 19 on two tries, five converts, and a penalty kick. In seven often difficult-angled attempts, the Golden Toe missed the uprights but once.

John O'Brien ran up nine points in his first appearance as a Blue. Other scorers were Ian Sinclair and Rich Hayman. On Hayman's try, the flashy half sold five dummy passes in a row before crossing the line.

Weakened by injuries and promotions to the senior team, the Intermediates squeaked out a 11-5 victory over Western. Only a week ago, they trounced Mustangs 25-0.

Winger Bob McGee tallied eight points with a try, a convert, and penalty kick. Intermediates' other points came on a try from forward George Brazier.

point from their efforts.

In the third quarter, Blues moved to the Western four-yard line on four plays and another offside penalty against 'Stangs. A great catch by Doug Phibbs for 11 yards and an 18-yard run by quarterback Jim Israel were the big plays in the drive.

But Blues petered out from there. Taylor went to quarterback after Israel was shaken up in running to the eight-yard line. With the offside penalty Blues had a first down at the four. But Taylor threw incomplete when rushed, Gerry Sternberg got three yards to the one, and then Taylor fumbled the ball in attempting to sneak for the touchdown.

Missed opportunities such as these exemplified Blues' play in the first three games and after three quarters of this one it appeared the picture would be the same, even though Blues were playing better football.

A PAGE FROM CLEVELAND BROWNS' PLAYBOOK

Hollett's touchdown seemed to change everything. The play was one that Varsity's opponents have not been able to defend all season. But in earlier games, either the receivers didn't hold onto the ball or the quarterbacks threw wild.

Hollett, playing left end, delayed momentarily after the ball was snapped and then cut to his right at about a 45-degree angle. By the time he reached a zone about ten yards beyond the line of scrimmage, the area was clear of defenders, these having carried out other assignments. Israel's pass was perfect and Flash showed a good turn of speed to outrace three Mustangs to the goal line.

Three plays earlier the same pass play had been good for 17 yards and in the second quarter it had gained 13 yards. On one other occasion, immediately after the 13-yard gain in the second quarter, the ball went through Hollett's hands into the arms of Western linebacker George Chris.

The play, known by Blues as the "double cross", has been used effectively in the past by the Cleveland Browns of the National Football League. It's extremely difficult to defend because the end who is the primary target is the last potential pass receiver out of the offensive alignment and by the time he makes his move the defenders are already committed to other receivers.

"The play is certainly a good one," commented Blues coach Dalt White after the game, "but the only trouble is after this game the other teams will be more aware of it and will work on defending it."

After Hollett's t.d. Blues came alive. The players' bench, disconsolate in earlier games, showed a new spark with players encouraging each other, back slapping, et al.

Blues seemed more assured of their ability after this play and for the remaining 10 minutes of the game they completely dominated Mustangs.

It's little more than wishful thinking to foresee Blues winning their final two games and qualifying for the Yates Cup playoff against Queen's Golden Gaels. But the team is now confident, the players know they can win. And they know they still have a chance for the title.

If Blues go on to greater things this season, you can look back on the pass from Jim Israel to Mike Hollett at 5:18 of the fourth quarter of the fourth game as the play that marked the turning point in the 1963 season for Varsity Blues.

Riley's 12 points lead Colts to 18-6 win over Rinkies

By GORD BELLMORE

The hard running of half-back Jim Riley spelled the difference in Western Colts' 18-6 victory over Varsity Baby Blues at Varsity Stadium Friday night. Versatile Riley did the bulk of the ball-carrying and most of the scoring for Colts with 12 points on two touchdowns.

Riley capped a 99-yard sustained drive the second time Colts got the ball in the first quarter as he skirted the left end from the four-yard line to score. Riley carried on seven of the 11 plays in the drive.

Late in the third quarter the 5' 10", 180-pound halfback put the game out of reach when he scored on a wide sweep from the five-yard line.

The other Western points came on the kicking of Doug Mitchell, brother of former Western great Bill Mitchell now with Edmonton Eskimos. Mitchell kicked a 35-yard fourth-quarter field goal and had two other attempts of 21 and 26 yards go wide for singles. He was also good on one of two convert attempts.

Toronto's only score was set up on an alert play by kicker Ben Hutzel. On a third-down kicking situation, he parlayed a bad snap into a 30-yard gain by passing to Ian Kirkpatrick. The play carried to Colts' 20-yard line, and three plays later fullback Ron Peroff barged over from the nine on a nice bit of running.

For baby blues, it was a frustrating evening as they couldn't get a consistent attack mounted against the stingy Western defence. A change in quarterbacks from Craig Williamson to Gil Farmer didn't help. Between the two, they only managed to complete five of 17 passes.

The only ball-carrier to get untracked for Baby Blues was Pete Sutherland. The husky halfback ran well and also caught three of the five passes. It was a busy weekend for Sutherland, as he put on another fine performance for the Senior Blues Saturday.

The combination of Baby Blues' inconsistent offence and Colt's ball-control tactics put the rinkie defence under constant pressure. The score could have been higher but for the great play of Varsity defenders, led by corner-backer Hutzel.

Colts are now in first place in the intermediate league with two wins and one loss. Baby Blues are 1-2 to tie with Ryerson Rams (1-1) for second.

Rinkies close the season at the Stadium Wednesday against Ryerson.

McGILL HOLDS QUEEN'S GROUND ATTACK

Connor passes Gaels to fourth win

KINGSTON—Queen's Golden Gaels patched up their porous deep pass defence here Saturday and hung on for a 17-7 win over a determined McGill Redmen team. It was the fourth straight Senior Intercollegiate League victory for Gaels.

Quarterback Cal Connor gave a Homecoming crowd of 10,000 something to cheer about as he connected with Bayne Norrie and Jim Ware for touchdown passes to offset a stubborn McGill defence that contained Queens' vaunted ground attack.

Gaels struck early in the game when Harold Rose fell on a McGill fumble at the Queen's 37-yard line. In two plays Gaels were in paydirt as Connor tossed a screen pass to Norrie and he raced 68 yards.

Connor went to the air again late in the game for Gaels' second major, hitting Ware who was kneeling in the end zone.

Bill Edwards converted the second t.d., Rose booted two singles and McGill defensive back Leon Abbott was dropped inside the McGill end zone for a Queen's safety touch after he had intercepted a Connor pass.

League scoring leader Willie Lambert scored the lone Redmen touchdown in the second-quarter on a 15-yard pass from halfback Bruce Johannson. Lambert also converted to tie the game 7-7.

Soccerites dump first-place UWO 2-1

By KATY O'SULLIVAN

In a game marked by numerous penalties, University of Toronto Soccer Blues fought to a 2-1 victory over first-place University of Western Ontario here Saturday.

Bill Troost scored both Blues' goals, one at the 25-minute mark of the first period and the other half-way through the second period.

Vic Gledhill scored for Western on a free kick given 15 yards in front of Toronto's nets just before Troost drove in the winning goal.

Blues move into second place one point behind Western and a point ahead of third-place MacMaster.

Both Western and Toronto have two more league games in their schedules — Blues must win both of theirs while Western must lose or tie on of its games for Varsity to cop the championship.

A win for Mustangs Saturday would have given them the intercollegiate soccer championship.

With so much at stake players on both teams were on edge and the game was rough and uneven with constant fouling. A taller and heavier team, Western at times relied on brute strength to break up Blues' forward drive. This was particularly marked after Varsity had scored its first goal and Mustangs' Lorenzo Girones was warned by the referee for ungentlemanly conduct.

Blues continued to play well at midfield and were stronger on the wings than they have been at any other time this season. On right wing newcomer Dave Olive proved himself an able playmaker while left winger Troost scored both Blues' goals.

Next game for Varsity is against McGill in Montreal next Saturday. This will be the second game of the home-and-home series for the Blackwood Trophy awarded on a total-goal basis. With a one goal lead in the series Blues go to Montreal favored.

Rowers win again, edge Wayne State

Varsity's senior rowing crew continued to dominate its meets as it won for the third week in a row, this time at Lake Fanshawe in London.

Highly-rated Wayne State finished second Saturday by one closed length, Western finished third.

Varsity's junior and freshmen crews both finished second in their mile races. The junior crew finished one open length behind Western while the freshmen team finished second to Ryerson by the same margin.

Varsity's senior rowing crew will take part Saturday at the Eastern Canadian Intercollegiate Rowing Association Championships at Lake Fanshawe.

Blues bounce back after 52-15 debacle

STAY ALIVE, WIN 12-8

By SHEL KRAKOWSKY
Associate Sports Editor

The unpredictable Varsity Blues kept their playoff hopes alive and moved into a third-place tie with McGill Redmen at Varsity Stadium Saturday.

Blues bounced back from last week's 52-15 drubbing at the hands of Western Mustangs to defeat these same Mustangs 12-8 before a cheering Homecoming crowd of 12,195.

It was Blues' best game this season as both the offensive and defensive units played well. Many Blues played both ways in this desperation contest and turned in standout performances.

Assistant coach Mike Chykaliuk was especially pleased with the work of the offensive line.

"The line played well and guards Noel Bates and Kaspar Pold were outstanding in pass protection and blocking. If the backs would have hit the holes faster the score could have been much higher," said Chykaliuk.

"You have to give a great deal of credit to Jim Fisher and Bill Jackson", Chykaliuk added. "They played both offence and defence and were outstanding."

Fisher played offensive tackle and defensive end while Jackson played offensive end and defensive tackle.

Another two-way player was Blues' Ken Davison who played flanker and in the defensive backfield. On defence, Davison recovered a Mustang fumble and returned an interception 30 yards. He also handled punt and kickoff returns and ran with reckless abandon. On one occasion he returned a kickoff 55 yards.

The margin of victory for Blues was two safety touches, one in the second quarter and one in the last quarter.

Varsity opened the scoring early in the first quarter on a missed field-goal attempt by Bryce Taylor which went for a single.

Blues had a chance later in the quarter to hit paydirt after middle guard Dave McCullough recovered a 'Stang fumble on Western's 24-yard line. But after Blues moved to the nine-yard line, Western's Bill Payne intercepted quarterback Jim Israel's toss on the goaline and raced 78 yards to Varsity's 32.

The Mustang attack was stalled and Jim Weber hoofed a single from the 26-yard line on a missed field-goal try to tie the score.

In the second quarter, Ted Miller, Mustangs' 148 pound, 5' 8" quarterback, got Western's only touchdown as he made a sensational 40-yard gallop around end after being trapped in the pocket attempting to pass. Weber converted to give Western an 8-1 lead.

With 2:25 left in the first half, 'Stang Rob Campbell made a key interception when he picked off Israel's pass at the goaline. However he took a step into the end zone to find some running room and was tackled by Blues Mike Hollett and Gord Whyte for a safety touch.

Varsity was still behind 8-3 in the final quarter when Israel connected with end Mike (Flash) Hollett for a 41-yard pass-and-run play for the winning touchdown. Hollett, weighing 200 pounds, looked like a tank injected with adrenalin as he rambled for the major. Taylor converted to give Varsity a 10-8 lead.

Blues closed the scoring when Bill Watters downed Western quarterback Bob Israel in the end zone for a safety touch.

Varsity completely dominated play in the second half getting 11 first downs and 208 yards. The tough U of T defence held Mustangs to a total of 68 yards in the second half and UWO quarterbacks completed only one pass in 11 attempts in the final 30 minutes.

With Saturday's win Varsity is right back in the race for the Yates Cup. A win next week over McGill coupled with a Queens' win over Western could give Varsity a chance to force Queens' into a playoff in the final game of the season here against Gaels.

QUICK KICKS: Argonaut coach Nobby Wirkowski was an interested spectator at Saturday's game. . . . Harry Wason intercepted two passes for Blues while Rob Campbell intercepted two passes for Western. . . .

Pete Sutherland, in his first action as a Varsity halfback, was the game's leading ground gainer rolling up 65 yards in 15 carries. . . . Jim Israel was Varsity's second leading ground-gainer scampering 54 yards in 10 tries. . . . UWO's Dave Garland gained 60 yards in 13 carries while Art Froese and Ted Miller both chalked up 50 yards, Froese on 10 carries and Miller on three. . . . Mike Hollett caught three passes for 71 yards. . . .

The Western Mustang Marching Band shone as usual. . . . The Blue and White Band also played.

BLUES FIND THEIR CONFIDENCE AT 5:18

It took Varsity Blues three games, three quarters, five minutes and 18 seconds to find themselves. But once they did Blues were on their way.

The team that wore the blue and white before 12,195 Homecoming fans at Varsity Stadium Saturday didn't resemble the crew that lost a 52-15 debacle to Western Mustangs the week before in London. Blues showed a new spirit and a new will to win.

But even so, it wasn't until 5:18 of the final quarter, when Mike (Flash) Hollett scored the winning touchdown, that Blues found their confidence. For three quarters Blues played a strong game. They tackled, blocked, and caught passes better than they've done this season.

But for some unknown reason they still couldn't make the best of their opportunities. Until Hollett scored to give Blues a 9-8 lead, Varsity's only points came on a safety touch and a single off a missed field-goal attempt.

In the first four minutes of the game, for instance, Blues had two golden opportunities to register major scores but they only garnered a single point. After Kenny Davison, one of the league's most versatile and talented players, recovered a Western fumble on the Mustang 30-yard line Blues were stalled at the 22.

Bryce Taylor booted a field goal from the 30-yard line but the play was wiped out by a Western offside and Blues had another opportunity for a major score. With a first down on the Western 15-yard line, however, they only got as far as the 14 and Taylor was sent in to try another field goal.

This time the boot was wide and Blues counted only a single

Finally!

FIRST QUARTER

VARSITY — Bryce Taylor's attempted 22-yard field goal was wide and Western's Bill Payne conceded the single point. Three plays earlier Taylor had booted a 30-yard field goal but an off-side penalty against Western wiped out the play and gave Blues a first down at the 17-yard line. The drive stalled at the 14-yard line before Taylor attempted his second field goal.

Western 0 Varsity 1

WESTERN — Jim Weber tried a field goal from the 26-yard line but it was wide and went for a single point when Blues' Gerry Sternberg just failed to return the kick from the end zone. Western had gained possession on the Varsity 32-yard line when Bill Payne intercepted a Jim Israel pass at the Western goal line and raced 78 yards.

Western 1 Varsity 1

SECOND QUARTER

WESTERN — Quarterback Ted Miller found no receivers open and took off for a 40-yard touchdown run. Miller bypassed five Blues without the help of blocking to score this brilliant t.d. Weber converted.

Western 8 Varsity 1

VARSITY — Rob Campbell intercepted a Jim Israel pass at the Varsity one-yard line and was tackled over the goal line by Gord Whyte and Mike Hollett for a safety touch.

THIRD QUARTER

No Scoring

FOURTH QUARTER

VARSITY — Jim Israel hit Mike Hollett with a pass at the Western 25-yard line and Hollett outraced three Mustangs for the touchdown. The play covered 41 yards. Blues moved 78 yards in only four plays for the score. A similar 17-yard pass to Hollett and a 20-yard run by Israel set up the scoring pass. Taylor converted.

Western 8 Varsity 10

VARSITY — With four minutes left in the game, Western quarterback Bob Israel went back into his end zone to pass and was tackled by Bill Watters for Varsity's second safety touch off the game.

Skulemen change minds in middle of kidnapping; trade blood for flag

Just another bedspread for a tired Arts girl? Nope. It's the much-vaunted, now-taunted Engineering Society flag stolen last Friday night. The Varsity denies the theft but promised Tuesday to have the flag returned to the Skulemen Thursday in return for 100 pints of blood.

After a lightning raid on the Varsity office and the near-kidnapping of a reporter, Engineers negotiated Tuesday afternoon for the return of their flag, stolen last Friday.

In a special ceremony Thursday on the front campus at 1 p.m. the traditional blue silk flag will be returned to the Engineering Society in exchange for a guarantee that Engineers this year will donate 100 pints of blood more than they gave last year to the Red Cross. (Last year's total was 321 pints.)

The deal was worked out after a tense 45 minutes in which 40 Engineers milled around the office shouting "let's hang him" and "cut off his . . . s."

The reporter, Bruce Lewis (II UC), stood in the middle of the throng. He was handcuffed to Stefan (X) Schader, the Engineers' chief cannoneer.

Despite a heavy blue-and-green vest and jacket, Lewis shivered slightly as Bob Morris (III APSC), publicity director of the society, accused him of stealing the flag. Morris said he is sure Lewis is "Alexander Y," self-appointed chairman of the "Arts Cannon-Stealing Committee."

"We're taking him with us and we won't give him back until the flag is returned," Morris shouted to Varsity staff members who, he believed, may have had some part in the hiding of the flag after the theft.

Lewis admitted privately he was "somewhat involved" in the theft but he added that he had let it slip out of his fingers and no longer knew where it was.

Schader tugged at Lewis' wrist impatiently. Somebody threatened to call police.

Varsity Executive Editor Alan Walker offered Morris some free legal advice:

"You're already eligible for an assault charge. If you take him out of here, police might call it kidnapping."

Morris replied: "We'll have Lewis charged with theft." But after equating the possible jail sentences involved, Morris agreed to talk terms with Varsity Editor Ken Drushka and Walker.

Morris rejected the original terms outlined by the "ACSC" which demanded the Engineers donate $25 to the United Appeal.

"This whole thing is unfair," Morris said. "Whoever stole the flag took it out of the flagbearer's residence. It was a sneaky trick."

(The "ACSC" Tuesday night issued a statement saying the flagbearer abandoned the flag in a bag in a residence lobby while he went to pick up his date.

(The statement, signed by Alexander Y, said "more responsible members of the committee led by Alexander Y took charge of the flag to prevent it from being destroyed.")

Drushka and Walker indicated they were aware of the location of the flag. They also indicated they might be able to persuade those in possession of the flag to return it if the Engineers promised to donate extra blood this year.

"After all, your flagbearer got caught napping and you deserve to pay something for that," Drushka said.

Morris agreed. Arrangements were made to exchange flag for pledge Thursday. And Schader was told to let Lewis go.

But there was no kcy. Finally somebody picked the lock with a hairpin.

SAC meet tonight will debate Model Parliament reform

Reform of Model Parliament will be debated at the Students' Administrative Council meeting tonight.

Ian Thompson (OCE) suggested two weeks ago in council that a minority government situation might be created, followed by elections and the usual Model Parliament session early in the second term. Suggested reforms have met with much criticism, and the debate is expected to be heated.

A question period at the beginning of the meeting will provide an opportunity for students to find out what council is doing.

The meeting starts at 7 p.m. in the debates room, Hart House.

French group starts

The Students' Administrative Council French committee starts its activities this week, five weeks after it was set up by the SAC.

Temporary chairman Richard Pope (IV Trin) Tuesday asked for interested students to volunteer as soon as possible.

Pope called for "a close look at the university's one-hour-a-week, one-year French Canadian course, and the emphasis on Parisian French" as possible projects of the committee.

The committee also hopes to provide a translation and information service to council, Pope said.

Flay store

VANCOUVER (CUP) - Toronto is not the only university having bookstore troubles this fall.

The Ubysses, the University of British Columbia student newspaper, has charged that the UBC store is making an annual profit of between $30,000 and $40,000 from the students.

In addition the paper has charged that the operating costs of the store are excessive, and that the markup on individual books is 25 to 35 per cent.

The students have offered to improve the situation through a cooperative store, which would return any profits to students. University officials have rejected this idea.

Columbia race expert talks today in West Hall

An American expert on race relations and the force of violence in the world will speak on liberalism, nationalism and non-violence in international relations at 4:30 p.m. today in West Hall, University College.

Dr. Howard Zinn of Columbia University has written articles for The Nation on non-violence as a tactic. He is presently an advisor to the Student Non-Violent Co-ordinating Committee, a United States national organization against racial discrimination.

During the Second World War, Dr. Zinn served as a bombardier in the U.S. Army Air Corps. He was for seven years, from 1956 to 1962, chairman of the history department of all-Negro Spelman College in Atlanta, Ga.

Dr. Zinn has called the march on Washington "the best organized of irrelevancies" for many Negroes, and has stated the U.S. government "must act, and leave the Southern segregationists to wrestle with courts and plead for tolerance."

Bissell Opens New Common Room

The new Junior Common Room of Sir Daniel Wilson Residence is "something to be proud of," said U of T President Claude Bissell Tuesday afternoon on officially opening this $15,000 addition to the UC male residence.

This basement room used to be known as the "marine lounge" because of its sea-green color and next-to-the-boiler-room location.

The idea of a JCR for all the houses of Sir Daniel Wilson was originated by Dave Clemons (IV UC).

Two years ago Clemons presented a petition of 85 per cent of the residents to the dean of men, H. I. Macdonald, pledging a contribution of $5 a person for the next four years.

But after one year the collection was discontinued after an anonymous donor contributed most of the $15,000 cost.

"The new JCR will be the only common room for all the houses of the residence," said Manfred Bienefeld (IV UC), student council president of Sir Daniel Wilson.

Meds students ban euthanasia

A large majority rejected the motion that "Euthanasia should be established and controlled by our legal medical code" at the Medical Society's debate Tuesday.

Speaking for the motion, John Wright reasoned that it is "barbaric and stupid" to let an incurable patient suffer in agony when death was certain. He added that in Uruguay euthanasia is legal, while in certain other countries the penalty is very light. In summing up, he said: "I prefer chloroform to cancer."

In opposing the motion, Bob Bear pointed out that quite apart from a doctor's breaking the Hippocratic Oath, a precedent would be created which would be hard to control. He foresaw the case of an old patient who would volunteer euthanasia merely to rid his relatives of an unnecessary burden.

Treasure Van is coming

In an incense-filled room, the opium pipes will be passed from hand to hand. The wineskin too will make the rounds. Hundreds of Exotics (count 'em — hundreds) will grace the hall.

Arriving Nov. 4 at the Drill Hall, Treasure Van is the World University Service's way of raising funds for the education-deprived peoples of Africa and Asia. Treasure Van is your way of contributing to this worthwhile cause, and while doing so, you can stock up on new and different Christmas (or Chanukah) gifts.

A purchase of a hand-carved ebony statue, a Greek vase, or even a 10-cent package of Indian incense will help to establish scholarships, and the development of universities, which we fortunate students take for granted.

Treasure Van will be at the Drill Hall, 119 St. George St., Nov. 4—8, 10 a.m. — 5:30 p.m. and 7—9:30 p.m.

U of T students begin bleeding

University of Toronto students rolled up their sleeves Monday to begin a two-week drive for 3,000 pints of blood requested by the Toronto Red Cross.

St. Michael's College just fell short of its 350-pint quota Monday, giving 339 pints at a clinic at Loretto College Lounge. One of the first to give blood was Rev. John Kelly, president of St. Michael's.

Trinity, Massey, Wycliffe and Law pumped a total of 251 pints yesterday. Med students gave 32 pints as well.

Trinity fell 23 pints short of its objective yesterday — 250 pints.

Colleges can meet and surpass their quota by giving their donation at open clinics Friday and next Friday at 67 College St., from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Today, Victoria begins a two-day clinic. Friday, Dentistry and OCE can bleed from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. and 3:30 to 4:30 p.m. in the Dents auditorium; and 9 to 11 a.m. and 12:30 to 3:30 p.m. in the OCE gymnasium.

Sellout for HH play

A sold-out house for Friday and Saturday means any students wishing to see the Hart House Theatre production of Chekhov's The Three Sisters will have to buy tickets for tonight's or Thursday's staging, James Hozack, the theatre business manager reported Tuesday.

The first two nights of the production played to full houses.

A half-capacity audience turned out Monday to view Herbert Whittaker's stage adaptation of the Russian play.

council's decision

The Student's Administrative Council will tonight debate, and possibly alter, the structure of the Model Parliament.

During the last two weeks several changes have been proposed. The airing of these proposals has started widespread and often heated debate throughout the campus.

In the Oct. 21 issue of The Varsity editorial support was lent to more consideration of private members' bills, proportional representation and a lift of the ban on parties without federal representation.

In subsequent issues a considerable amount of space was devoted to printing the arguments against these proposals. It is natural that these counter-arguments came entirely from representatives of the campus political clubs, particularly the Liberals.

But just because the return arguments have all opposed change, Council need not accept these arguments as a reflection of campus opinion.

Council can expect the political clubs, particularly the Liberals, to have representatives at the meeting tonight. But the presence of these representatives should not be taken as a reflection of widespread opinion.

The political clubs represent a small, although potentially valuable, segment of the student community. But they do not represent the thousands of students who will be more or less affected by Council's decision.

Council must act for the benefit of the entire student body, not for the benefit of the political clubs.

on lectures

The public attendance at theatrical premiers in our society has become so absurd that it now is accepted as an open joke.

The diligent attendance of lectures at this university is nearing the same point of absurdity. Even when lecturers openly discourage attendance, the seats are daily filled with students who either take copious notes, sleep, talk to their friends or engage in discussion.

On some occasions some of these lecture room activities are beneficial to some persons. For most of the people, most of the time, they are a waste of time.

The depths of absurdity are reached when a poor lecturer stands before a class, reading from the text students have presumably read. But still they come, as if by their mere presence they will gain knowledge or marks.

The total effect is that of an academic soup line. The students appear to have no place else to go, so they come to classes. They receive their dole of knowledge, no matter how skimpy, and drift off to the next session.

Why students wait patiently for their scheduled handouts when there are vast storehouses of knowledge elsewhere is beyond our comprehension.

Why they do not spend more time in the libraries, museum and in discussions remains an unanswered question.

CANADA IN CRISIS (2)

(This second article in the series was written for The Varsity by Michel Beaulieu, the co-editor of the University of Montreal student newspaper, Le Quartier Latin).

par MICHEL BEAULIEU
co-directeur,
Le Quartier Latin

Si j'ai décidé d'écrire ce texte, après y avoir réfléchi durant près de trois mois, ce n'est pas pour succomber à la trop facile tentation de gifler les canadiens-anglais. C'est simplement qu'en étudiant le problème de la Confédération tel qu'il s'est posé à ses débuts et tel qu'il se pose de nos jours, j'en suis venu à me poser une question: "Que deviendra le canadien de langue française si la Confédération subsiste dans son état actuel?"

Je n'essaierai pas de répondre à cette question comme telle, mais plutôt en vous soumettant quelques réflexions.

Il est maintenant de notoriété publique qu'on a conçu le pacte confédératif pour favoriser la construction du chemin de fer trans-canadien. (La clause incluse parmi les conditions d'entrée de la Colombie-Canadienne à cet effet reste assez significative: il fallait que le chemin de fer soit terminé pour 1880 d'abord, puis pour 1890).

De notoriété publique aussi, ce pacte a été écrit en tenant compte de la situation en 1867, ce qui est assez éloigné de la situation présente de nos deux entités respectives.

Car, il ne faut pas se leurrer, nous sommes deux nations à l'intérieur d'un même pays.

Deux nations dont la langue et les origines culturelles ne sont pas les mêmes.

Et je ne crois pas mentir en affirmant tout-de-suite que si le Canada-français possède la culture, le Canada-anglais possède pour sa part l'économie. Et les deux étant indissociables par essence dans toute société organisée, l'une des questions primordiales du débat reste: quelles seraient nos concessions mutuelles dans le cas où le pacte confédératif devait être pensé de nouveau.

Je n'appelle pas concessions le fait d'avoir des chèques ou des menus bilingues. Et cela malgré les élucubrations de tous les Caouettes de la terre.

J'appelle concession dans le cas présent: le bilinguisme intégral. Actuellement, la grande majorité des montréalais de langue française doit parler anglais dans la seconde ville française du monde, tandis que dans les villes anglaises, si nous parlons en français à quelqu'un, celui-ci nous répondra un "What?" des plus dégoutés, ou bien nous ordonnera sèchement "Speak white". Je ne doute pas cependant qu'un effort de compréhension s'opère actuellement dans les milieux anglo-saxons à notre endroit.

Les canadiens-français ont attendu longtemps cet effort, et maintenant qu'il arrive, il est trop tard. Il eut fallu que cet effort se fit il y a de nombreuses années. Mais il n'existe rien sans doute comme le sentiment de la défaite imminente et totale pour revigorer les forces les plus vives d'un peuple.

Et je suis de cette génération qui a le sentiment de n'avoir plus rien à perdre et qui se sent à la fois trahie par la génération précédente et étrangère dans son propre pays. Et d'ailleurs, pour nous, le pays n'a qu'un nom: Québec. Québec, nom indien tranchant comme les hautes guillottes de la révolution française.

Il est trop tard pour réaliser une unité nationale, puisque nous sommes et demeurerons irrévocablement deux nations. Tout nous divise: ne fut-ce que de la langue et de la tradition, la justification de l'indépendance s'y trouve renfermée.

Trop tard pour une foule de raisons et je me contente d'en énumérer quelques-unes:

Le taux pour cent de canadiens-français par rapport au taux total de population du Canada diminue sans cesse d'année en année. Si le mouvement continue — et rien n'indique qu'il puisse ralentir ou arrêter — nous serons irrémédiablement assimilés d'ici une cinquantaine d'années. Ou bien séparés. Or, les jeunes de mon âge refuseront d'être assimilés, refuseront que leurs enfants le soient. Si une vingtaine de jeunes de ma génération, pour la plupart plus jeunes que moi, ont réussi à faire trembler le Canada durant quelques mois, que sera-ce lorsque des milliers de jeunes se lèveront des quatre coins de la province?

Trop tard parce que nous avons notre fierté et que nous refuserons jusqu'à la perte de souffle de nous laisser piétiner par un fédéralisme peu scrupuleux. Parce que les deux premiers ministres français du pays, Wilfrid Laurier et Louis Saint-Laurent, n'ont pu faire autrement que de nous prostituer une fois rendus aux échelons supérieurs du pouvoir. Trop tard parce que nous n'acceptons plus d'être les vendus à un peuple qui n'a pas su nous respecter. Nous sommes un peuple de vaincus — on nous l'a assez répété — et un peuple de vaincus s'assimile par essence avec lenteur et certitude à son vainqueur. Or, nous en finirons avec l'état de vaincus.

Trop tard surtout parce qu'il aurait fallu repenser le pacte confédératif alors que nous pouvions encore nous attendre à un geste pose de façon désintéressé. C'est en effet au moment où nous voulons quitter qu'Ottawa tout-à-coup s'aperçoit de notre existence.

Sur le strict point de vue action étudiante, les exemples abondent. Les journaux universitaires de langue française ont quitté la PUC en claquant les portes, Quartier Latin en tête, et j'entrevois le jour où les associations étudiantes des mêmes universités quitteront FNEUC.

Toutes ces considérations peuvent sembler aléatoires, mais elles n'en restent pas moins essentielles aux yeux de plusieurs de mes compatriotes. Pour les comprendre, il faut vraiment se mettre dans notre peau, vivre avec nos tristes et soigner de notre sang.

Et si le séparatisme, qui me semble la seule solution malgré l'inévitable affaiblissement vital des deux parties, vous paraît une solution rétrograde, si le séparatisme vous apparaît comme une trahison d'un passé encore tangible, je vous dirai avec le grand orateur que fut Jaurès: "Mais vous oubliez que c'est en coulant vers la mer que le fleuve reste fidèle à sa source."

Resume

The following is a provocative "explication" by the Co-Editor of the University of Montreal's Quartier Latin of why he believes in "le séparatisme" and why attempts at "le biculturalisme" have come too late.

M. Beaulieu begins by asking himself the basic question: "What will happen to the French-speaking Canadian if Confederation continues in its present form?"

He brands the B.N.A. Act as out-of-date, and states unequivocally that we are two nations not one. (It is now common knowledge, he says, that the federal pact was merely a way of getting a trans-continental railroad built).

Québec has the culture; the rest of Canada has the economics; but, by definition, the two can not be mixed in any organized society.

Referring to "concessions" he scorns bilingual cheques and menus. The only concession worth anything is total bilingualism.

The author points out further that the majority of "Canadiens" speak English in Montreal (the second largest French-speaking city in the world), but that in English-

Canadian cities the French-speaking who asks directions in his mother tongue is told, "What? Speak white."

According to Beaulieu the present generation of "Québécois" feels betrayed by their compatriots. Laurier and Saint-Laurent once in office prostituted the interests of Québec. Québec is proud of her history. Contemporary Canada forces her either to separate or be swallowed up.

To those opposing "le séparatisme" Beaulieu quotes from Jaurès: (being freely translated) "But you forget that only by running toward the sea does a river remain faithful to its source."

COMMENT

NDP should join Liberals

By BRUCE LEWIS

A careful examination of last year's campus political platforms would indicate that like the real parties, the campus politicians tend to "hug the centre" on most issues, and take few or no courageous or radical stands.

But when there is serious disagreement between them, it is usually the Liberals and New Democrats who are closest together (e.g. nuclear arms).

This would tend to contradict NDP propaganda that you can't tell the two old parties apart. This is reinforced when one listens to the political philosophies of campus politicians. If, as many contend, the ideological base and future of the political parties is to be found in the universities, this would indicate that there is little place for both the Liberal and New Democratic Parties.

And, in fact, an examination of practical politics leads to the same conclusion. If these two parties were to coalesce, the new party (regardless of what its name would be) would represent the opinions of the united left. The Liberal right wing would join the Conservatives to provide a solid choice for voters between right and left.

It would be unlikely and undesirable that there would then be two entirely diametrically opposed parties. But there would be a wider and a clearer choice for the voters. In rebuttal NDP supporters claim that their opinions would not be heard in the united party because Liberal procedures are "undemocratic". They point out that by publicly proposing reforms they already move the Liberals left.

The latter statement is undoubtedly true. But how much better would it be if this were done by reasoned discussion and debate rather than by "the unseemly race to promise more." In fact, although the present New Democrats would have a proportional voice in determining party policy, their real importance would be in the choice of the party leadership.

It is all very well to draw up platforms, but the real power is in the Cabinet. (The best example of this situation is in Quebec where a socialist cabinet minister has far more influence than he could ever have had as leader of the New Democratic Party.) If there were only one party of the left now, Mr. Douglas and some of his friends would be in the cabinet where they could have a much greater influence on what is actually done.

But perhaps more important than policy considerations is the effect such men would have on the administration of the country. Canada does not produce enough capable political leaders to allow some of them to go to waste in a third opposition party.

Emotionally disturbed are not insane

By DONNA MASON

Varsity News Editor

You could never find the duty psychiatrist when you wanted her. Mrs. Thomas walked up and down the long, bright corridor wringing her hands and sighing. Her housecoat was unbuttoned and her slippers were not tied. She had not washed her hair in a month. In the lounge Mrs. Campbell sat whispering to herself as she unravelled the scarf she had knitted. In a room down the hall Mrs. Petersen sobbed as she recovered from the effects of shock treatment.

The day? Anytime. The place? A ward for women with mild emotional disturbances in the Women's College Hospital. It's not bad in that ward. There's a slight odor of people kept in the same place for too long, but it's not as bad as it could be. Because of course, you can't open any of the windows more than six inches. This is a necessary precaution since many of these women have at one time or another attempted suicide. The windows are shatterproof glass. You can sew and knit, but the nurses keep an eye on all sharp objects, such as scissors.

Every morning and afternoon those who want to are taken down to the basement for occupational therapy. The occupational therapy room is dingy, small and crowded. There are a few books ranging from Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm to Agatha Christie mysteries. You can paint, make enamel-and-copper ashtrays, knit or make slippers. One woman told me "I've made slippers for all my grandchildren — five of them. When do you think they'll let me go home?"

Home is the only thing they think about. At meals, at occupational therapy, whenever they start to talk, eventually they start discussing home. Some are realistic about it. "My daughter died," one said. "She came with me all the way through the war. Sometimes we lived on potatoes for months, but we lived. Then after the war we came here to Canada. She married a nice boy with a good job and had a lovely baby. Then she died. She went through all that in the war just to die when everything was so good. I want to get out of here but I don't know what I'd do if I did."

But most have a more idealistic picture of home. Miss Morris, 80 years old, talks about her "sweet little apartment" and her cottage in the Muskokas. She doesn't really remember much, and when you talk to her she will stop in the middle of a sentence and forget what she was saying. "It's those shock treatments," she says. "They make me forget everything." There isn't very much they can do for Miss Morris except take care of her. She'll never be able to look after herself again.

Some, like Mrs. Thomas, have been there for a long time. Her husband came to Canada after the war with nothing and built up a business. He's doing well, but he never stops worrying about money. After the children grew up, Mrs. Thomas had little to do, so she started going off on shopping expeditions. Her husband put a stop to that, so she sat around the house all day, without washing herself or making any attempt to keep the house clean. She was afraid of the telephone, and even today, when the telephone rings, she starts nervously. She is taking shock and insulin treatment, and the doctors say she'll be able to go home for a weekend soon.

The weekend at home is another dream. But even when you do get out — which isn't till they think you're almost well — you can't be by yourself. These women are never by themselves. They can't leave the ward without a nurse or an occupational therapist: they can't go out for the weekend without some member of their family to take charge of them.

The 20 women on this ward — most of them middle-aged — spend most of their time in the lounge or in their rooms. It doesn't make much difference, really, because there's nothing to look at except each other. The rooms are crowded and only three or four have one to themselves. Each room contains beds, tables, chairs, all jammed together. There is a piano in the small lounge, but the person who plays it most is an attendant who visits two or three evenings a week and plays ragtime and Dixieland. Then they all go into the lounge and sit and listen. On the evenings when he doesn't come, they are always asking the nurse "When is Mike coming again? He hasn't come up for a long time." It hasn't really been long — maybe a day or two — but on this ward the days never seem to end.

These women are not insane. Most of them can be helped, but it takes time, patience, and treatment. Many of them are repeaters who are sent home but return a few months later. Since their troubles are emotional ones caused by the home situation, they cannot be permanently cured unless their relatives can successfully alter their attitudes. It is for this reason that the psychiatrists and social workers spend as much time with the families as with the women themselves. But in many cases this does not help. A woman who was discharged during the time I spent on this ward was back again before I left, more upset than ever. Her family could not forget that she had been in the hospital, not for a respectable physical ailment, but for emotional reasons, and her home life steadily worsened until she was forced to return to the hospital.

"We can't do it all," a nurse told me. "Until their families learn to accept emotional disturbance as a common, natural thing, some of these women will keep coming back. We can only help them while they're here."

CUP COMMENT

by BRUCE KIDD

Since last year's changes in the parking regulations, University of Toronto students reluctant to pay the 50 cents for on-campus parking usually spend that much on gas trying to find a spot within walking distance of classes. This year other Canadian university students are feeling the pinch of new parking regulations.

Parking violators at the University of Calgary at Edmonton are fined two bucks for each of first two offenses. For any subsequent offence the guilty face the possibility of suspension of their on-campus automobile privileges (whatever they are).

At another Prairie university, the fines are even steeper. First conviction at the University of Saskatchewan costs $1, second $5 and thereafter a whopping $10. But that's not all: for every day the fine is overdue, 50 cents is added to the tab up to a maximum of twice the original fine.

At Western, it's a different story altogether: it doesn't cost you anything to park illegally, you just lose your car. In an attempt to eliminate the effort involved in the processing of tickets, UWO security police will simply tow away your car.

GET PREGNANT — STAY ALIVE

If you are a female between the ages of 20 and 30, and want to stay alive, your chances of avoiding the grave are best if you become pregnant. According to statistics gathered by the Saskatchewan College of Physicians and Surgeons, the death rate among pregnant women in the 20-30 age bracket is lower than that among the non-pregnant women in the same age group.

And the best place in Canada for you to have your child, the statistics say, is Saskatchewan. Maternal mortality there is only 2.3 per 10,000 compared with 3.5 to 4.0 per 10,000 for the other provinces. Medicare anyone?

MAC CLOSE TO STUDENT RADIO OUTLET

A radio station at McMaster University is well along the road to realization. Council has given its approval to a plan which would have Mac students broadcast programs in conjunction with a Hamilton AM outlet. If this experiment is successful, then Mac would bid for a FM station of its own.

But the approval of the Mac administration for the student-operated scheme is still forthcoming. Under the Broadcasting Act, a licence can only be granted to an officially incorporated body. Since neither the students' council nor the radio committee can be incorporated, any licence must be issued to the university's board of governors. All of which opens up the touchy subject of administrative responsibility for student opinion.

ALBERTA SUPREME COURT ACQUITS SLAYER

An arts student who studied too hard for his final exams has been acquitted of attempted murder. According to the court ruling, University of Alberta student William Kobluk was insane when he stabbed a coed outside a U of A lecture hall last May.

The official verdict was "not guilty by reason of temporary insanity." In the hearing, a University hospital psychiatrist testified Kobluk had been under intense stress cramming for his finals and was on the brink of a nervous breakdown in the weeks preceding the stabbing.

THE MEN IN THE WHITE COATS

A student-organized police force has been established at St. Francis Xavier University in Nova Scotia. From 12 to 20 upper classmen will comprise the force. Sporting white jackets and paid a dollar-an-hour wage, the campus cops will report St. X rule infractions to a student disciplinary board, and will break up any spontaneous outbreaks of rowdiness. Theirs will be the enviable privilege of confiscating booze.

JAM'S LEGISLATIVE UNION?

The model parliament at Ryerson Institute has scrapped the British North America Act. Under the new rules, issues for debate can fall under either federal or provincial jurisdiction. This change is highly questionable.

Canada with a unitary system of government died in the Confederation debates. Almost all problems facing Canadian legislators today could be discussed as problems of Canadian federalism.

Eliminating the federal principle from the ground rules for model parliament would seem to eliminate the raison d'être for a model parliament — that of students tackling the problems simultaneously faced by our professional governors. Ryerson would do well to revert to the oft-abused BNA before their parliament sits next January.

STUDENT PAPER FACES LIBEL SUIT

An article appearing in the Auckland University (New Zealand) student newspaper Cracum has provoked a $15,000 libel suit by an Auckland firm of architects. The article, by a university lecturer in architecture, severely criticized the design and structure of a new university building. The architects then demanded a retraction and apology, but the "apology" was a further criticism of the architects. Suits are pending against the publishers, the university student council, and the author.

FIRST UNITARIAN CONGREGATION AUDITORIUM

175 St. Clair Ave. W., Toronto
The Liberal Religious Tradition
Unitarian Thought and Action
Commencing on Tuesday, November 5th, 1963 at 8 p.m., a four lecture series on Liberal Religion as exemplified by the Unitarian Movement.

Though some historical background will be included, the main emphasis will be on Procedures, Practices, Beliefs and Forms of Services of Today. There is a rich variation in forms of worship in Unitarian Congregations throughout the world, but there is a strong unity in their attitudes towards creeds and dogma. How do Unitarians claim the right to be called a religious movement without the use of these two pillars of orthodoxy? What are the dynamics that make Unitarianism one of the fastest growing religious movements in North America? Each lecture will be followed by an extended question period.

SPEAKERS LIST

Vic takes stranglehold on first place

By AL SHOENBORN

Victoria College Scarlet and Gold kept their perfect record intact as they scraped by St. Mike's 6 - 3 yesterday. The win assured Vic of at least a first-place tie in Division I football.

In yesterday's game, St. Mike's took an early three-point lead when Bob Meagher booted a 15-yard field goal.

Bob Morrison put Vic on the scoreboard with a single late in the quarter, before Al Major's safety touch left the score 3 - 3 at halftime.

A third quarter field goal by Vics Phil Rimmington proved the margin of victory although St. Mike's almost won on the last play of the game. However, a St. Mike's pass from Vic's six yard line failed to click and Victoria won its fourth consecutive game.

In Division II football, Medicine parlayed an early field goal by Jim Boyce into a 3 - 0 win over previously unbeaten University College Monday. Meds takes over first place after three straight wins.

UC defeated Forestry 20 - 6 in an earlier game Friday. Fowler led Redmen with two majors while Ian Sacks added another. Shel (The Toe) Krakofsky added a convert and Hartley Garfield booted a single. Lloyd Burridge scored the Forestry t.d. when he ran the length of the field after the second half kickoff.

SOCCKER

Group I continues to be in a mad scramble as a mere two points separate the top five teams.

UC I moved into a first-place tie with Sr. Skule after a 2 - 1 victory over Vic I, while Sr. SPS played to a scoreless draw with Trinity A. UC and Sr. Skule have six points apiece.

Close behind are Medicine A and St. Mike's A with five points after recent victories. The doctors took winless Jr. SPS 4 - 0 while the Double Blue got past PHE, the other winless squad, 2 - 0.

Trinity is in fifth place with four points after its tie with Skule.

In Group III action, Architure walloped hapless Emmanuel 8 - 0 as Walker potted five goals. In other action, Knox got into the win column with a 1 - 0 win over Wycliffe.

A pair of recent victories have given Meds B a one-point edge over second-place Vic I in Group I. Friday, the junior doctors handed SPS a 13 - 0 defeat led by a seven point effort from Bob McGee and Alex by Willy Cawkell and tries by Willy Cawkell and Alex Furness.

Monday, Meds B beat big brothers Meds A, 8 - 3. McGee, with a converted try, and Cawkell, with a try, accounted for The Meds B scoring, while Ron Peroff scored the Meds A try.

Vic II won its first game of the year, rolling over SPS 18 - 0 on the strength of a nine-point performance by Gary Naylor.

Law remained unbeaten in first place in Division II as it took New College 18 - 5, while Knox edged Wycliffe 8 - 3, and Pharmacy shut out Architecture 6 - 0.

Elsewhere, Vic IV made it 18 - 5 over Trinity C as John Gartley led the way with 7 points.

LACROSSE

St. Mike's A continues to roll along in first place in Group I after defeating Dents 9 - 4. Barry Fleming and Don Schmidt each scored a hat trick for the Double Blue while Casey Soden added a pair. John Kawaguchi led the losers with two goals.

Trinity consolidated its hold on the Group III lead yesterday with a 7 - 3 triumph over Pre-Med II. Norm Trowell and Bill Kilfoyle led Trinity with three goals apiece and Dave Scott added the other. Geale, Stein and Yoshida scored for the losers.

Ruggerites win

Varsity Rugger Blues posted a big upset last night at Varsity Stadium by defeating Toronto Nomads 15-6 in an exhibition game.

Paul Wilson paced Blues with a try and three field goals for 12 points, Bill Charleston scored the other Varsity try.

Blues led 12-0 at the half.

...and in this corner

By SHEILA LITHWICK

Why don't Canadians have more fun?

Contrary to the opinions of many of my colleagues, I am violently opposed to encouraging spectatoritis.

This is a disease commonly found in most advanced (?) cultural societies.

It is characterized by flat feet, knobby knees, hunched backs, high blood pressure, anaemia, and low I.Q.s.

The primitives were immune.

They would have starved if they had waited around and watched people drop food on their laps.

Our society is starving itself in its own way.

It is social etiquette that every sports activity taking place on campus must have a sufficient cheering section of sedentary idolaters; otherwise the participants would not play as well.

This is a lot of propaganda.

In an article I read yesterday, a chair manufacturing company explained that the width of their seats has increased considerably in the last few years.

It should be interesting to watch a 1963 student sit in a 1920 lecture-room chair and still more fun to see 1970'ers tackle 1963 desks.

This increase will continue until people wake up and realize that they can have more fun taking part than picking up a pair of binoculars and watching.

To this end I look towards the Hart House fortress and the Benson Building beehive.

To this end, too, I scorn those bodies languishing under the fall trees, one hand straightening out a misplaced lock and the other greedily hoarding a double-decker sandwich.

To illustrate I would like to point out that several new and smaller universities such as York, Ryerson, Laurentian, Windsor, Carleton, Ottawa, and MacDonald in conjunction with the Women's Intercollegiate Athletic Union, have initiated a Sports Day Program.

York University held a Sports Day last Saturday with Toronto, Ryerson, and Western competing in field hockey archery and tennis.

The venture proved highly successful.

It is these programs that give smaller universities the opportunity to compete at an intercollegiate level while yet not members of the W.I.A.U.

As well, it gives as many people as possible an opportunity to participate actively.

To those of you that have been duly inspired, the first invitational intercollegiate Field Hockey Tournament will take place Saturday on the back campus at 9 a.m.

Toronto will host Western, York and McMaster University. I am sure that many other opportunities lurk in the shadows for bright undergraduates to have some healthy fun.

Why not seek them out?

Rinkies have crack at first if they defeat Ryerson tonight

By GORD BELLMORE

That there is an Intermedi-ate football game at Varsity Stadium tonight between Ryerson Rams and Varsity Baby Blues is the truth. Beyond this point there is only confusion.

If Baby Blues, presently with a 1-2 record, defeat Ryerson (1-1), Rinkies will have completed their season with a respectable 2-2 record in no worse than second place in the three-team league.

Ryerson goes on to play first-place Western Colts (2-1) in the season finale at London Saturday. With only three days rest and faced with playing in Little Stadium where Western teams have habit of making life uncomfortable for visitors, Rams should think seriously of staying home.

If by some quirk of fate, however, Ryerson should defeat Colts as they did earlier in the season, 22-15, the schedule could end with all teams tied for first place with 2-2 records.

It is most likely, however, that Western will win Saturday against a tired Rams team and thus win the championship with a 3-1 record. Tonight's game at the Stadium should decide second place.

Baby Blues will have a tough job on their hands as they will not be bolstered for this game as they were when they shut out Rams 15-0 two weeks ago.

Halfback Andy Szandtner is out with damaged ribs, and end Tom Verth is getting a well-deserved rest after playing in all Rinkies' games and the last three with Senior Blues. Verth is also on the limp.

Line coach John Casey would like to have Andy Grodzinski, Terry Bates and John Fraser, who have alternated between Baby Blues and the seniors. But head nabob Dalt White is undecided in light of Blues upcoming clash with McGill Redmen Saturday in Montreal.

The biggest loss to Rinkies is Peter (Suds) Sutherland, who has won a permanent spot with Blues. Sutherland made an auspicious debut in the big time Saturday for Blues against Western after going the whole game at offence for Rinkies against Colts the night before.

Sutherland was the game's leading ball-carrier Saturday, rushing for 65 yards on 15 carries.

He had waited a long time for a real crack with Blues after starting the past two seasons for Victoria College in the Interfaculty League.

GERRY STERNBERG IN SECOND PLACE

Lambert having his best season

By SHIEL KRAKOWSKY
Associate Sports Editor

QUICK KICKS: Halfback Willie Lambert of McGill Redmen continues to lead the Senior Intercollegiate Football League in scoring with 44 points in four games.

Wonderful Willie, having his best season in six, has scored six touchdowns, four converts, a field goal and a single. He has accounted for all but 20 of Redmen's points this season. . . .

Varsity's Gerry Sternberg is in second place with 30 points closely followed by Western's Pat McConnell and Bill Edwards, both of whom have 29 points. . . .

Blues Harold Hall, Mike Kelly and Rilvo Ilves are still hurting from injuries and are doubtful players for Saturday's important game at McGill. Guard Kaspar Pold is also a doubtful starter after sustaining a badly sprained ankle against Western Saturday. . . . Ross Dainty, who suffered a minor concussion, and Doug Bucknam and Gerry Sternberg with charley-horses, will probably be ready for McGill. . . .

Coach Dalt White has been impressed with the work of quarterbacks Jim Israel and Bryce Taylor in the defensive backfield. Taylor is a regular in the defensive tertiary while Israel gets spot assignments. . . .

Of Blues' eight interceptions this season, Taylor has made three and Israel two. Harry Watson, with two, and Ken Davison grabbed the other interceptions. . . .

For Saturday's big game between Queen's and Western at Kingston, Mustangs are not in the best shape physically. All three quarterbacks, Bob Israel, Ted Miller and Woody Deschamps, are on the limp as is tackle Ross Nicholson. . . . Queen's 17-7 win over McGill Saturday marked the biggest margin Gaels have won a game by this season. Their previous wins were by seven, two and seven-point margins. . . .

MID-WEEK FISTAMINATIONS

There have been conflicting reports as to the Ontario-Quebec Athletic Association regulations regarding post-season playoffs for the Yates Cup and the Senior Intercollegiate Football League championship.

To put the record straight, here are the correct regulations direct from the OQAA football playing rules.

There is only a post-season playoff for the Yates Cup:

1. if two teams tie for first place;
2. if the second-place team has defeated the first-place team at least once during the season, or
3. if the second-place team has tied the first-place team twice during the season.

In addition, should there be a tie for second place only the team that qualifies under the above regulations is eligible for a playoff.

To complicate matters more, if both second-place teams have defeated the first-place team, then the team that has scored the most points in the two games between these second-place finishers qualifies for the Yates Cup playoff.

In application to this season, and especially to Varsity Blues, Blues must defeat McGill and Queen's in their remaining two games and Western must lose to Queen's Saturday for Varsity to be eligible for the playoff. By Western losing to Queen's, Mustangs would then be eliminated since they have already dropped a 20-18 decision to the Tricolor. . . .

The man responsible for all this hullabaloo in the first place was Dr. H. B. Yates, a graduate of McGill, who donated the Yates Cup in 1898. The trophy is the second oldest in Canadian football, the oldest being the Mulock Cup for Varsity's interfaculty champions. This mug was donated to the University in 1894 by Sir William Mulock, then chancellor of U of T. . . .

McGill Redmen, whom Blues play in Montreal Saturday, are the only team already eliminated from the Yates Cup race, having lost two games to Queen's. The defending champion Redmen have only won one game, a 25-24 squeaker over Blues, but they have been surprisingly strong in all their games considering their lack of depth. . . .

In other intercollegiate conferences across the country — St. Francis Xavier X-Men, whom Blues face Nov. 23 at Halifax in the Atlantic Bowl, are stronger than ever. St. F.X. is undefeated in five Atlantic Conference games, winning all by lopsided scores. One win was a 91-0 shellacking of St. Dunston's. . . .

University of Alberta leads the Western Conference with a 5-0 record, McMaster is atop the Ontario Intercollegiate loop, also a 5-0. . . . When Blues dumped Western 12-8 last Saturday, it marked their first league victory in the second half of the season in four years. . . .

RUGGER BLUES JUST ROLLING ALONG

Varsity Rugger Blues are duplicating their championship season for last year. In 1962 the Ruggerites tied Queen's in their first game and then won all the rest. So far this season it's been the same story. . . . The Soccer Blues are in one of the tightest championship races in years. They trail league-leading Western by only one point with each team having only two games to play. . . . Bobby Lewis of Soccer Blues is still the most exciting player in the college league to watch. . . .

Jack Russell of the Argo Rowing Club has done a fine job with Varsity's rowers this season. The U of T Senior crew is undefeated heading into Saturday's Eastern Canada championships at London. . . . Former Queen's Golden Gaels John Quinn add John Futa are taking their Bachelor of Phys. Ed. at McMaster and are playing football there. Quinn is a brother of Pete Quinn of Ottawa Roughriders. . . . Bill Woloshyn, a former guard with Western Basketball Mustangs, is in Law at U of T and will play for Blues cagers. . . .

The Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Union's plans for inter-conference football bowl games have been postponed until at least 1965. The reason given was lack of funds. . . .

When the football coaches consider all-stars for 1963, they'll do a grave injustice if they overlook Blues' Kenny Davison. Davison has been outstanding in numerous departments, offence, defence, kick returns. . . . Blues' Jim Israel is showing great improvement in his punting over last year. So far Israel has averaged 36.9 yards per punt, compared to a 28.4-yard average last season. . . .

A group of students at Western, led by Western Gazette Sports Editor Dave Soles, are pushing to get intercollegiate hockey at the University. . . . Ward Passl, Hockey Blues scoring star, will have the cast removed from his left leg Monday. Passl tore ligaments in his knee playing interfac football. Right winger Steve Montelth, who suffered a similar injury to his ankle in football, is still sporting a cast with no time given yet for its removal. . . .

Michigan State football coach Duffy Dougherty had this to say: "Football is not a contact sport. It's a collision sport. Dancing is a contact sport."

Tarheel chairman defends selection

Weekends Chairman Diane Bennett (III UC) Wednesday claimed the selection committee for the Tarheel Exchange was "slandered" in that "entirely unfounded charges of racial discrimination" had been levelled by The Varsity.

"I should particularly like to borrow the adjective 'nauseating' to describe the editorial writer's disingenuous view that the University of Toronto is in a position to 'present the Tarheelers with a unique point of view when the vice-president of the student body of the University of North Carolina is a Negro," Miss Bennett told a meeting of the Students' Administrative Council.

(The editorial to which Miss Bennett referred also included the statement: "There was no discrimination against Miss Yearwood because she is a Negro."

(Varsity Editor Ken Drushka stated Thursday night The Varsity never claimed the SAC had racially discriminated against Miss Yvonne Yearwood).

Rejecting the charge that selections were made on a basis of social capability rather than intellectual ability Miss Bennett pointed out that the 30 students chosen included 12 first-class honor students and 12 second-class honor students.

Model Parliament reform was the other major topic of discussion at the meeting. This year's Model Parliament will have a majority government only if the winning party has 40 percent or more of the popular vote. If no party achieves this figure, representation will be proportional. In the past the winning party has been given an automatic three-seat majority.

But in the minority government situation there will be no non-confidence motions, making it impossible to defeat the government.

At a meeting of the campus Progressive Conservative Club yesterday it was revealed that the Liberal and New Democratic Clubs voted against the proposals, but the combined votes of the committee chairman Ian Thompson (OCE), University of Toronto Debating Union chairman Richard Tan (II Meds) (a PC), and PC leader Jeff Lyons carried the proposals.

The council also:

Appointed Richard Pope (IV Trin) chairman of the French Committee;

Decided to invite Ayn Rand to speak in Convocation Hall under council auspices;

Heard that mimeograph facilities for campus organizations were available at Bancroft Hall.

Skule's flag went home Thursday.

Varsity Editor Ken Drushka (III UC) turned over the flag, stolen last week, to Engineering Society officials in front of about 100 Engineers, some armed with clubs.

Bob Morris (III APSC), spokesman for the Engineers, restated his promise that Skulemen will donate 431 pints of blood to the current Red Cross campaign.

'Liberalism just apology for violence' -- Zinn

"Liberalism is a particularly sophisticated apology for violence," Dr. Howard Zinn said in his speech on liberalism, nationalism and nonviolence at University College Thursday.

He said a nation state is the best method for meting out violence, and that violence is man's distinct contribution to the universe. Symbols such as the soldiers paraphernalia and a vague idea of the "enemy" allow people to commit the wholesale slaughters of war, Dr. Zinn said.

The enemy becomes a hateful blob.

Dr. Zinn attacked liberals of the world "who are particularly good at making up reasons for going to war" if they think there is need. Such symbols of American liberalism and reform as Jefferson and Jackson suffered his invective.

He felt no issue in the world today was worth nuclear war. Nonviolence should be used as a tactic for communication with the heads of state, as parliamentary devices don't suffice, he said.

What is needed is a "shock impetus" to bring people to their senses before they set out to destroy.

Dr. Zinn concluded by saying: "We need the courage to say no" to the madness in world affairs today.

Toronto called 'ugliest city'

Toronto is the ugliest city, it was decided at a Hart House debate, Thursday night.

The supporters of the motion — "Toronto—Ugliest City"—charged Toronto is the "ugliness of the aesthetic hole" and a "great slum empire"; that it is a city of "the unspeakable trying to digest the uneatable," of "juveniles recoiling from the onslaught of puberty" and that its "squalid surroundings breed squalid people."

The opposition concentrated on the great beauty of Toronto's sewage system, explaining how "Toronto takes great pains to beautify the ugliness of our daily lives."

Gary Kelly (III Vic) insisted that Toronto has a soul and that "knowing a city is like knowing a woman — you have to know her both physically and spiritually."

Alan Jarvis, editor of the magazine Canadian Art and a past director of the National Gallery in Ottawa, was guest speaker and supported the government. He struck the key note of the debate by quoting an Italian nobleman:

"If I die, I should like to die in Toronto, because the transition between life and death would be 'imperceptible'."

SMC Senate Club will try parliamentary style

St. Michael's College Senate Club has decided experimentally to abandon its "American" style of tournament debating this weekend.

In a tournament with six Canadian and American schools beginning tonight at SMC, parliamentary rather than the American "Western" style of debate will be used for the first time.

The first invitational parliamentary debating tournament will be co-sponsored by the SMC Senate Club and the SMC Students' Administrative Council. Among the entrants are McGill, Royal Military College, Osgoode Hall, Pittsburgh and Villanova.

Participants will receive their debate topics one hour before debate begins.

Guest speakers at the debates will be Justice Arthur Kelly, and prominent Toronto lawyers Arthur Maloney and John Robinette.

No booze at Molson Stadium

The Lady Godiva Memorial Band will lead 1,800 University of Toronto students into a liquor-free Molson Stadium in Montreal Saturday.

An administrator of the McGill Students' Executive Council, in a telephone call to U of T Students' Administrative Council President Doug Ward (III Emm), Thursday night said students found with liquor in the stadium or at the turnstiles will be ejected.

"We expect Toronto students to act the same way they would at a home game," the spokesman said.

All Toronto students are invited to join the LGMB in downtown Montreal at 1 p.m., in front of the Laurentian Hotel, when the band will lead off to the stadium, passing the Windsor and Mount Royal hotels en route.

Pick Model Parliament leaders

Two foreign students were elected model parliamentary leaders for the two major campus parties this week.

Ivan McFarlane (IV Trin), a Jamaican, and Richard Tan (III Meds), from Hong Kong, were voted prime minister candidates for the Liberal and Progressive Conservative parties respectively.

McFarlane beat the other Liberal nominee, Bruce Lewis (II UC), by a 2-to-1 margin in the party vote Wednesday. Tan was elected over Sheldon Gilbert (III UC) in a vote Thursday by 40 PC club members.

McFarlane called for increased aid to education, a pay-as-you-go pension plan and deficit financing to cut unemployment and boost income.

Tan said tersely: "I can't imagine any foreign student joining the Liberal party, when one studies its immigration policy."

STUDENTS FINED

The names of the following U of T students were released by Metropolitan Toronto police as fined $20 apiece Wednesday for liquor offences at last week's Homecoming football game: John Zaritsky, Margaret Pollitt, Aldis Nakovskis, James Royce, Alexander Logan, Paul Norris.

Blues' destiny rides on McGill excursion

By SHEL KRAKOPSKY
Associate Sports Editor

Varsity Blues have their work cut out for them when they tackle McGill Redmen at Montreal's Molson Stadium Saturday.

As the playoff picture now stands, Blues must defeat McGill and Queen's Golden Gaels must turn back Western Mustangs at Kingston for Blues to have a crack at the Yates Cup.

If Western upsets Queen's, Blues are out of the running for the title even if they defeat McGill and bring the red and white goal posts home to Toronto.

Varsity head coach Dalt White is confident that Gaels will defeat Mustangs and give Blues a fighting chance for the silverware.

"I think Queen's won't have too much trouble with Western since the game is in Kingston and all Western's quarterbacks are on the limp," said White last night. "Queen's will certainly be up for the game since they have a chance to sew up first place in front of a home crowd."

As far as Blues' chances against McGill, White was a little more reluctant to make a prediction.

"We're capable of beating McGill but they're a hard team to figure out. I don't know how good they really are having seen Gary Cullen at quarterback against us. But now Cullen is out and Glen St. John is the quarterback."

Cullen played in McGill's first two games while St. John recovered from the flu. But Cullen suffered torn knee ligaments against Blues and St. John was pressed into duty for the second half of the game.

White also commented that the long train ride to Montreal plus the fact Blues won't practice tonight because of their late arrival in Montreal might hamper the team. But, White added, not enough to lose.

Blues offensive guard Kaspar Pold is a doubtful starter but will suit up. Pold suffered a badly sprained ankle against Western last Saturday and has been taking treatment all week.

Rookie Jim Blakelock, who has been used mostly at line-backer, will likely start in Pold's guard spot. Blakelock played defensive tackle for Victoria College last year.

Pete Sutherland, another Vic product, will probably start at halfback after turning in a solid performance in

GLEN ST. JOHN
New McGill pivot

KASPAR POLD
Blues' limping guard

his debut against Western last week. Gerry Sternberg and Harold Hall will get spot assignments at halfback with Sternberg starting in the defensive backfield.

This will be Hall's first game since he injured his ribs three weeks ago against Redmen here.

QUICK KICKS: Rinkies' defensive end Wally Secombe will dress in place of Tom Verth, who has an injured leg. . . . Secombe intercepted a pass in Baby Blues' win over Ryerson Wednesday and ran 75 yards for a touchdown. . . . Defensive halves Mike Kelly and Rilvo Iives are still on the injured list. Kelly has a bad ankle and Iives has a sore shoulder. . . . Linebacker Ray German's knee is still a bit stiff from stitches required after last week's game.

Shel's Shelections: Blues over Redmen by 13 points. . . . Gaels over Mustangs by nine points. ....

SECOCOMBE'S INTERCEPTION SAVES GAME

Baby Blues down Rams 26-19

By GORD BELLMORE

A last-minute interception by defensive end Wally Secombe preserved a victory for Varsity Baby Blues over Ryerson Rams at Varsity Stadium Wednesday night and gave Rinkies a slim hope of still finishing first in the intermediate football league.

Secombe picked off a screen pass by Rams quarterback John Knight at the Varsity 35-yard line and rambled 75 yards for a touchdown that gave Rinkies a 26-19 win. At the time of Secombe's big interception Rams were threatening to win the game with Baby Blues leading only 20-19.

The victory gives Rinkies a final season's record of 2-2 and a tie with Western Colts for first place. Colts have played one less game than Rinkies, however, and can win the title by defeating Ryerson in the final game of the schedule at London Saturday.

A Ryerson win would leave the final standings with all three teams in the loop tied for first place, each with 2-2 records.

The game belonged to Rinkies' defence as they shut out Ryerson in the final 30 minutes to overcome a 19-13 deficit. The defence also baled out the offence by scoring the two second half t.d.s that won the game.

Before Secombe's brilliant score, corner backer Ben Hutzel intercepted a Knight pass early in the fourth quarter and raced 28 yards to give Baby Blues a 20-19 lead. Hutzel also booted a 26-yard single in the final stanza.

The offences did the scoring in the first half. Rams' Bill Genova scored from five yards out in the first quarter and Pete Sutherland tied the game for Rinkies in the second period on a 45-yard jaunt. Hutzel's convert gave Varsity a 7-6 lead.

Genova scored his second major from the two-yard line after Rinkies had fumbled the ball away and then Baby Blues got the lead right back when Rams fumbled at their own five-yard line and Gil Farmer carried for the t.d.

On the last play of the first half Varsity took a penalty, giving Rams one additional play. Halfback Paul Lawrence combined with Eric Kirk for a 48-yard pass-and-run touchdown. Jim Salt then threw to Kirk for the convert to give Rams a 19-13 half-time lead

Scullers rated highly in quest for Eastern Canada championship

By PAUL LITTLE

Varsity's three eight-oared rowing crews have been working out at sunrise each morning with one purpose in mind — to topple Western from its hold on the Eastern Canada Rowing championship.

Shortly after Western crushed U of T's Varsity eight by three lengths in last year's championships, the Western rowers stated they would like to challenge University of British Columbia for the Canadian title. Varsity's senior crew, undefeated this season, hopes to show UWO at tomorrow's championships at London they need look no further for top calibre competition.

In a regatta last week at London, Western was third behind Wayne State and Varsity.

Toronto's crew has been hampered by the ineligibility of veterans Forbes Marnoch and Pete Southam. But the reserves of the junior boat proved capable replacements last Saturday. The U of T crew is well-conditioned with five Argonaut Rowing Club heavies and one lightweight.

Included in the Varsity boat is Rog Jackson, who was a key member of the Western title crew last year.

U of T's Junior boat, beefed up by Southam and Marnoch in its stern section, is also favored for a trophy Saturday. Their chief competition also comes from Western. McMaster is defending champion.

The Freshman boat, composed of either academic freshmen or first-year oarsmen should also be in the front ranks. The competition will be formidable, however, as Ryerson defeated the freshmen at London last week.

Pharmacy notches third straight win

By AL SCHOENBORN

The men from Pharmacy seem to have hit upon a secret formula as their football team is off to one of its best starts in recent years. The druggists won their third game in a row Wednesday, defeating hapless New College 27-0 and moved into a first-place tie with Medicine in Division II.

New College (0-3) has yet to score a single point in its first season in interfac football.

Dave Moore paced Pharmacy with two touchdowns, Don Heys chipped in a t.d. and two converts and Keith Flexman counted a major and a 50-yard single.

Trinity won its first game of the season yesterday, drubbing Forestry 21-6 in Division II.

Bob Reid, Bob Stone and Mike Treadwell scored touchdowns for Trinity with rugger star Paul (The Golden Toe) Wilson adding three converts. Wilson, playing the third football game of his life, also ran for a first down after getting a bad snap for a field-goal attempt.

Dave Chown counted the only Forestry t.d.

SOCCER

A goal by Andris Rode propelled PHE to its initial win in Group I Wednesday, as Phys Ed edged Trinity A 1-0.

The win moved PHE into a fifth-place tie with Trinity, a mere two points out of first place.

In Group II, SPS III downed Vic II 3-0 on goals by Bill Papiailas, Wolf Reznidek, and Dave Sefton.

Varsity hopes to snatch Blackwood

Varsity Soccer Blues invade Montreal this weekend and hope to come away burdened down with the Blackwood Trophy, the spoils of the victor in the annual Varsity-McGill soccer rivalry.

McGill has held the Blackwood for the past three years, but Blues stand a good chance of wresting the Trophy from Redmen. Varsity leads the two-game total-point series 4-3.

Blues will employ the same revamped lineup which has won their past two games.

Although he can only play at half-strength, the return of injured Keith Murphy to the lineup should further help Blues.

Ruggerites can win title with win over McGill

UTRFC Syndicated Service

Undefeated Varsity Rugby Blues can clinch their fifth consecutive Intercollegiate Championship Saturday with a win over McGill in Montreal. Earlier in the season, Blues whipped the Redmen fifteen 17-0.

Varsity will continue to miss regulars Rod Sanders and Larry Johnson. Their places in the line-up will be filled by Mike Treadwell and Gethin Hughes.

McGill has enlarged its pitch, but this strategy should backfire — Blues' backs will welcome more running room.

The Intermediates play Barbarians and the Thirds take on Nomad Thirds in a U of T back-campus double-header Saturday. Both Toronto sides have been weakened by injuries. In the Scrum: Note to stay-at-homes — an ATL card will get you into the Carling Cup Rugby Final Saturday at Varsity Stadium. Toronto Irish kick off to Montreal Wanderers at 2:00 p.m.

The pseudo-scientific mentality

By ERNIE WEINRIB

Ernie Weinrib, a third year Classics student at University College attacks the current fad of scientism.

No one would today deny the dominance of science. Although we may have misgivings regarding the blessings of atomic power, although we may hanker after the idyllic calm which we imagine marked the pre-industrial world, none of us would seriously propose turning back the clock. We moralize among the bourgeois comforts of our living rooms, and if we do idealize the noiseless tenor of any previous age, it is very much in the spirit of Crabbe's pastoral poetasters:

Yes, thus the Muses sing of happy swains, Because the Muses never knew their pains.

The benefits of science are undeniable and yet — there are murmurs of protest. Not everyone is completely satisfied with science's present role and status. The disaffection felt by people working in the humanities has grown into almost open revolt. Despite the warnings of C. P. Snow in The Two Cultures, our intellectual schizophrenia continues to grow. But so potent is the power of science, and so wanton is the public craving of the amenities that the protests of what Snow called the "literary culture" are viewed as the helpless mutterings of frustrated intellectuals.

The problem to be dealt with may be called the "pseudo-scientific mentality." This term is not meant to be provocative or pejorative; it is merely a fairly accurate description of the phenomenon. It is with good reason that the prefix pseudo is included because some, perhaps most, of the truly eminent scientists have been immune to this malady. Indeed this is a case where lightning strikes the lower peaks. The "pseudo-scientific mentality" is more frequently to be found among the masses of science undergraduates.

NOT PERNICIOUS PER SE
This type of thinking is, of course, not pernicious in itself. Unfortunately the disease is contagious, and to make matters worse it has been spread by the narrow minded arrogance of some rank-in-file scientists and science undergraduates. As a result it has infected the public in general and the "literary culture" in particular. In fact the real tragedy is not, as Sir Charles Snow would have it, that there has been too little intercourse between the two cultures, but that there has been too much and that of the wrong kind. For the scientists have introduced the pseudo-scientific mentality into non-scientific fields.

So powerful is the impetus of science and so influential are its credos that it seems that even non-scientific disciplines must play the game of progress on science's rules. Even where this trend has been resisted, the misdirected gusto of the average scientist exhilarated by the spectacular success of his craft has succeeded in foisting upon a gullible public the rather dubious proposition that scientific criteria are the only ones which have any real value.

Examine, for instance a very basic tenet of scientific thinking that there must be a clear distinction between fact and fiction, between truth and falsehood. We have become mesmerized by the fact-fiction dichotomy. We wrongly feel that this criterion is universally appropriate, and even when its inadequacy in certain fields is exposed, we mercilessly insist on using it not as a valid principle but as a Procrustean bed.

Perhaps, we have fallen into the trap pointed out nearly forty years ago by Alfred North Whitehead as typical of the scientific mentality, namely, the emphasis on things at the expense of values. In any case we have certainly not heeded Whitehead's warning that the modern world must cultivate an appreciation of the variety of values.

SERIOUS CONSEQUENCES

This basic intolerance inherent in the pseudo-scientific mentality could have serious consequences for the humanities. In particular, as I. A. Richards has never tired of pointing out, it may lead to the death of literature or a significant part of it. For it will lead to a muddling of two levels of belief, the intellectual and the emotional, which will render impossible the reading of doctrinally disagreeable poetry.

As a result a Christian will no longer enjoy Lucretius, and an atheist will be unresponsive to Donne or Hopkins. The Christian who reads Lucretius pleads against belief in an after-life will find himself unreceptive. The pseudo-scientific emphasis on the distinction between fact and fiction will force him to reject the De Rerum Natura as untrue. Because it will not be absorbed into the structure of his revealed Christian truths he will find that he has a mental block which prevents him from appreciating Epicurean poetry.

There is obviously something wrong here because the De

Rerum Natura is a great masterpiece. The mistake must be with the reader; misled by his pseudo-scientific necessity for distinguishing fact from fiction he has read the poem at the level of intellectual instead of emotional belief. If he had read it at the proper level, he would not have felt compelled to absorb the poem into the structure of other known truths. He could simply have recognized that the poem can serve an emotional need and can exist so to speak, in a vacuum without being brought into jarring conflict with "the facts".

SCIENTIFIC SUPERIORITY

It is commonly believed that science is in some way superior to the humanities in that the former produces devices which raise the standard of living whereas the latter produce only esoteric articles in learned scholarly journals. It is doubtful if any thinking scientist would be so simple-minded as to accept this claim as its face value.

Perhaps the archetype of the pseudo-scientific mentality was Herbert Spencer. In a treatise on education he once argued that only a training in the science could properly equip the student for "the business life". This view is, of course, generally accepted today, but on investigation it will be seen to be wide of the mark on several counts. For as the poet A. E. Housman pointed out in his inaugural lecture in 1892, scientific study is frequently not as useful as it pretends to be.

Much scientific work is highly theoretical and is justly disregarded by many producers of commercial commodities. Frequently, moreover, useful discoveries are not wilfully planned but are accidental by-products of useless research. Says Housman: "Electric lighting, ana aniline dyes and other such magnificent alleviations of human destiny do not spring into being at every forward step in our knowledge of the physical forces and chemical composition of the universe; they are merely occasional incidents, flowers by the way."

To survive in the world man needs "not science but an indispensable minimum of science".

Even Housman would probably have been surprised to reflect on how small the minimum is. It was indicated some years ago by the late Professor Gilbert Norwood of the University of Toronto. In exasperation he once pointedly asked "When is the last time you used long division?"

MISLEADS PUBLIC
But these criticisms of the pseudo-scientific utilitarian

Why Women love a liar

CANADA IN CRISIS (3)

(This is the third article in the series on English-French relations in Canada.)

Two centuries after the conquest

By D. J. Duckworth

"WE ARE THE COWARDLY AND DISHONORED CONQUERED"

Symptoms of the malaise of unrest and discontent in French Canada are very apparent. French Canadians, convinced that their English-speaking compatriots are bent on running the country as though Quebec does not exist, have exploded into angry, defiant nationalism.

Early symptoms were the agitations of the Separatists. This group is large and loosely embraces the moderate and the extremist. Both seek a new and more autonomous Quebec. It finds expression in books and pamphlets and in the words "Quebec Libre" scrawled on public buildings and monuments.

Separatism is not new to Quebec. In recent history it has tended to flare up and die down at irregular intervals. This most recent flare up however, does not look as though it will die down.

The roots of separatism go deep. Quebec was once a French colony which was conquered by the British in 1759 and incorporated into the British Empire by force of arms. The bitterness of this conquest has never faded in the minds of the French Canadians. They have always considered themselves a distinct people, quite apart from the English Canadians.

The bonds of national unity have never been strong but it is the social and economic change in Quebec which has brought matters to a head. Quebec, once mainly agricultural, has become heavily industrialized in the last two generations. A new, large and prosperous middle class has emerged upsetting the whole balance of power in Quebec, and soon, in Canada.

In the past it was generally accepted that big business should be run by the English while the French elite entered the Church, politics, and the professions. This is no longer the case. More and more of the young "Quebecois" are entering the world of business and are very qualified to do so.

Although most of the enlightened "Anglais" have a high respect for the Quebecois and would like to see a more bilingual Canada, the facts of life militate against this.

Most Canadians live and work without a knowledge of French. The Quebecois, on the other hand, find their traditional education system a disadvantage and often exclusive use of French excludes them from high office in government and business. They are forced to be bilingual.

As a result, the young people are beginning to feel that they are second class citizens, discriminated against and denied opportunity because of their race. They therefore readily listen to nationalist orators who paint a picture of an independent Quebec where the French would be the masters of their own destiny.

But there is another aspect of Quebec's social revolution which is not so well known. Although it is not irreligious, the revolution has a strong anti-clerical bias. Quebec wants the priests to stay in the church and leave education to the laity. And here is the heart of the change for it has resulted in divided councils within the Church and even within families.

Premier Lesage speaks of Quebec as having emerged "from the protective shell" of the Church after three centuries. For English Canada this means a new approach to living with Quebec. We, in English Canada, must now function with the French Canadian people and not with a tiny handful of the traditional elite.

Quebec, as everyone knows, demands a reconstruction of Confederation. Daniel Johnson, leader of the opposition Union Nationale party in Quebec, recently stressed, "We must choose before 1967. Either we will be masters of our destiny in Quebec and equal partners in running the affairs of this country, or it will be complete separation."

Many of the French Canadian demands are likely to be unreasonable; many again will be essentials. English Canada must handle herself so that she will save the federal structure from disintegration. It will be up to French Canada, if she is equally sincere, to respect the difficult position of the rest of the country in meeting their demands.

The French Canadians, not unlike the American Negroes feel that they have been quiet and timid too long. They think the feeling that they are second class citizens has hindered every aspect of their development as a people.

As Leon Bloy put it: "Toute notre vie intellectuelle et morale s'explique par ce seul fait que nous sommes de lâches et déshonorés vaincus." — "the cowardly and dishonored conquered."

Bridge: an occasional column

By John Laskin

One of the fascinating features of bridge is that it is a game where the seemingly impossible is actually quite possible. Suppose, for example, that you, sitting south, pick up the following hand: J97532 Your partner deals A7532 and bids 5 diamonds — and East overcalls J9 5NT to show a strong hand. You pass to 7 spades. You would certainly double, wouldn't you, for you have 6 trumps and if the opponents escape to 7NT you can lay down the A of Hearts. Well you double but the opponents stay at 7 spades. You Most certainly should defeat this contract and yet—

North figuring East to be void in diamonds opens the 6 of clubs won by the A. The K of hearts is led and your A is trumped with the 4 of spades (Had you not played the A; dummy would simply continue to lead hearts). A club is then led to the K and four top hearts are played on which declarer discards his last club and three diamonds, leaving the following position:

—	—	—	—
AKJ9	Q10	AK
— N	—	—	86
— W	E	—
Q10	S	—
—	J97532	42.

Declarer now scores each of his 6 trumps separately by cross-ruffing. He leads a club from dummy and overtrumps whatever you play. He then trumps a diamond with the A of spades while you helplessly undertrump. He leads the last club from dummy and again overtrumps you and ruffs his last diamond with the K of spades. In dummy once more he plays a heart and overtrumps you for the third and final time to make 7 spades doubled. His only mistake — he forgot to redouble!

Contemporary Canadian art at Gallery

By Anne Lindner

An interesting cross section of Canadian contemporary art is currently showing at the Art Gallery of Toronto. The artists are from Ontario and Quebec and though chosen as individuals and because of their international standing, some schools and groups are evident as representing Canadian art today.

The traditional and conservative element is represented by the familiar canvases of F. H. Varley and Goodridge Roberts.

Jacques de Tonnancour, with his quiet and not yet abstract landscapes, illustrates the evolutionary outcome of the Group of Seven.

Self-taught William Kurelek is the one primitive in the show and his canvases show a conscious concern with design and color.

Then there are abstract expressionists and some of the hard edge school and in between, a rash of painters bordering on second generation Rothkos.

Of the abstract expressionists (Bellefleur, Comtois, Letendre, Ferron, Gagnon, and Maltais), Leon Bellefleur seems the most joyful and Marcelle Ferron the one who best carries on the automatist tradition from which they both stem.

Bordering on the abstract, but not of automatist origins, are painters such as John Meredith and William Ronald.

Ronald's metal structures with a subtle magnetic color ing, show more maturity than his brother's garishly colored ribbon-like forms which are not very well executed.

Two painters moving into a new figurative form are Graham Coughtry and Thomas Hodgson. Both fall short of their goal of making the human figure talk - Coughtry because of his timid shapes and Hodgson, his levity.

Unique in figurative presentation is Richard Gorman's "Fat Lady" and "Her". The latter is black-purple aluminum encasing a canvas of the same color with a yawning aperture down the centre - a very foreboding piece in spite of poor location and lighting.

The two painters who stand as masters are Harold Town and Tony Urquhart. Town, a well established artist, has proven in his "Lady" (charcoal, ink, pastel) that he need no longer resort to sensational splashes.

His control in all the pieces has given him a maturity seldom seen in Canadian artists. "Spring Swing" and "Meditation" are powerfully assertive through their solid and controlled approach.

Tony Urquhart's canvases also show a quietude, but with a nostalgic longing of things past. The green landscape with a solitary cut-out figure in "The Great Game III" smacks of a return to old solid things or perhaps a wish for a rest from the turmoil of urban life.

Of the hard edge school, Marcel Barbeau is the only artist to succeed in making his edges pulsate. In "Quebec" his five red stripes wiggle and squirm in the confines of a white field because of a deliberately wavering outline.

The sculpture varies as much as the painting. The works range from the free imaginative forms of Armand Vaillancourt and Walter Yarwood to the sensitively carved and polished mahogany of Anne Kahane. The mass of her figures is restful and solid, yet the detail is delicately handled.

There are three men whose sculptures work better than their paintings if only out of uniqueness of material. Jean-Paul Mousseau's "Dolmen Male" - a plastic structure electrically lit from within, provides a better medium than his diagonally striped paintings for displaying his color patterns.

Burton's wood structure and Partridge's nail configurations have appeal as novel mediums.

There were two prominent sculptors: Gerald Gladstone and Robert Hedrick. Hedrick's "Crane Genesis" in white plaster showed a beautiful interplay of smooth curved lines and broken rugged areas. Gladstone's "Space No. 2", "Moon", and "Venice No. 5" move, circle and glint dully as they are watched.

There are a total of 32 artists in the exhibition, 19 of whom are from Ontario. The show continues at the gallery till No. 11 with the sale beginning the evening of Nov. 7.

Miss Michalowska's works are very delicate and subdued. She underplays her theme leaving a lot to the spectator's imagination. Beautifully lined figures in various poses and gestures play against the quiet yet jewel-like light of the colored enamel.

Ethel Raicus opened a show of her latest work last week at the Pollack Gallery. Most of the canvases seem to be on a theme of the forge with smouldering reds and yellows vibrating against opaque blacks and blues.

In a newer development seen in two canvases she is working on a theme called the Sacrifice in predominantly black and white. This sacrifice theme is interpreted, not dramatically, but rather in a vein of quiet resignation. The lamb image in one canvas gives no impression of fight, of blood, rather it seems motionless and quiet and white.

Rita Letendre has a one-man show at the Dorothy Cameron Gallery. Miss Letendre, a Montreal Artist, can also be seen in the show opening on Monday at Hart House.

The Hart House show is about the most ambitious university exhibition of the year. The works will range from graphics and collages to full scale oil paintings. It will be a good, general reflection of the current Montreal Art Scene.

Moscow Rehearsals has recently re-appeared in paperback. Based upon six months' observation in Russia's capital during 1934-35, the book gives an authoritative account of the Moscow stage at that time. It was well-received when it first appeared, and I do not think it necessary to echo at length the critics of an earlier generation.

Those who want a more recent account of the Soviet stage should read the same author's Return Engagement which was published last year. Read by itself the earlier work has, of course, historical limitations, and one may be permitted to wonder why the publishers did not make the later book available for review together with this one.

Relatively free from political side-issues the book is primarily descriptive, and didactic only insofar as it compares the Soviet theatre with its counterpart in America. Houghton considers commercialism to be the bane of the professional stage on this continent; and from his examination of the Soviet theatre he draws some ideas for America. They add liveliness to a book which deserves the attention of anyone interested in the various aspects of the theatre.

The Incomparable Atuk

By DOROTHY THOMAS

THE INCOMPARABLE ATUK, by Mordecai Richler. McClelland and Stewart; 120 pages; $3.95.

In summary, Mordecai Richler's new satire sounds much funnier than it really is. Atuk is an Eskimo whose Pauline Johnstonesque poetry captures the imagination of the literary set in Toronto. Having been introduced to the wonders of that great metropolis, Atuk turns into a demon of cultural bucksterism. He imports a passel of relatives and sets up an Eskimo sculpture factory in his cellar.

Atuk performs magic on the "box," and brings forth Dupont specials with Frank Sinatra, Dinah Shore, the Negro with the one eye, dancing beer bottles, Jack Paar—long live Atuk, the miracle maker!

Surrounding this intrepid entrepreneur are assorted Canadians, real and imagined. That is, the "real" characters are mostly imaginary.

There is Seymour Bone, Canada's rudest drama critic, who achieved his terrible reputation solely because he once had to leave a play early, being racked with severe constipation. Isn't that a witty bit of ridicule?

There is Jean-Paul McEwen, female, the most fearless columnist in Toronto. Disguised as a male student to expose a ring of call-girls for the under-twenty set, she meets and falls in love with Jane, who is, in reality, Sgt. Jock Wilson, of the RCMP, disguised in order to seek out subversives.

There is Bette Dolan, young, luscious, the first woman to swim Lake Ontario in less than twenty hours, a Canadian Heroine. But uncorruptible Bette is seduced by Atuk, and finally spends her nights soliciting in the King Edward.

There are many more — Professor Norman Gore, liberal intellectual; Harry Snipes, middle-aged angry, editor of "Metro" — the magazine for cool canucks" featuring articles such as "Why Women from Halifax to Calgary Menstruate Monthly".

The whole thing is very self-consciously inventive. Richler's "outrageous" situations are laboriously plotted, and show no evidence of an innate comic sense. They lack the rich embroidery that a less prosaic spirit than Richler's could have developed. The book as a whole makes for very flat reading, and its "satire" is more often vicious than telling.

THEATRE

Red Barn group back

By ERIC RUMP

One of the sad things last year was the closing of the Red Barn Theatre, which is located on the third floor of the public library at St. George and College. It is a fine theatre, with a large, broad, open stage, that manages to combine comfort and intimacy.

For whatever reason, the support they expected did not come, and after playing to audiences often no more than 10 in number, the company was disbanded. Now Mariaccomplished in the present production. Diane Stapley as Luisa and Charles Wallrich as Matt have the right quality of youthful exuberance combined with youthful innocence. Diane Stapley has an excellent voice, confident in all registers, moves well, acts intelligently, and is a pleasure to watch. She now is only 18, and could well have a distinguished career ahead of her.

Charles Wallrich is a newcomer to Toronto but will be welcome back any time, for gold Charlesworth and Jean Roberts are making one more attempt to attract a Toronto audience, this time with The Fantasticks, a musical by Tom Jones and Harvey Schmidt. It is difficult to see how they can fail.

The Fantasticks is a delightful piece of whimsy, as fine and delicate as porcelain. It juxtaposes the moonlit world of romance with the sunlit one of harsher experiences, in terms of a romance between Luisa and Matt, their subsequent marriage, disillusionment, parting, and eventual reconciliation as wiser people. Around this pair are grouped the two fathers, the narrator, who controls much of the action, and Henry and Mortimer, two itinerant actors, who help out in various scenes. Henry is an old Shakespearean actor and Mortimer an expert in death scenes.

To bring off this unusual combination of humor, sentimentality and romance, needs a fully professional company, who are able to keep the right balance between the light and serious sides, so that neither one interferes with the other.

This has been brilliantly he also sings and acts with great assurance.

Some people had doubts about whether Bruno Gerussi was the right choice as the narrator. These doubts were not about his ability as an actor, but his ability as a singer. These doubts have been dispelled.

Not that he has a great voice, but it hit the right notes, was comfortable to listen too, and was considerably better than most of us can produce when splashing around in the bath.

In the quieter, more reflective moments, he always had the audience's attention, and he sang the rape song with a great deal of dash and verve.

The humor is largely provided by the two fathers and the two actors. Grant Cowan and Jack van Evera were obviously at home in the broader comic sequences and enjoyed themselves enormously. Charles Palmer (Henry) declaimed magnificently and Kenneth Wickes was first-rate as the frail little Mortimer who has been dying on and off stage for the last 40 years. Jake Dengel played the necessarily inconspicuous part of the mute.

Steinbeck on deck at the Crest

There is Curley's wife, looking for the regard and affection that her filthy husband will not give her.

But none of them succeed. By the end two of them are dead. Curley's wife has been unintentionally killed by Lennie, and Lennie has been shot, in an act of terrifying mercy, by his friend. Those who remain are left to make their lives as best they can. None, we now know, will ever get across the river to the lush, green pastures on the other side.

All this is brilliantly presented by the Crest Theatre in their second offering of the present season. Ken James plays the difficult part of Lennie with great assurance, bringing out all his strength, his childishness, his warm, ready emotions, without ever allowing him to become a figure of fun.

Sean Sullivan as George does equally well, showing us that behind his tough exterior, behind all his jokes and threats and promises lies a deep, abiding affection.

From the moment they enter stage till their separation at the end they command our respect.

The supporting cast is excellent. Chris Wiggins as Slim plays so consistently well that the actor and the part merge completely. It is one of the best examples of naturalistic acting that I have seen in a long while.

Melvin Scott as Crooks

the Negro catches the right note of desperate bitterness, and William Brydon (Candy) shuffles around the stage with the bewildered sadness of a man trapped in a futile and degrading life.

The play is directed with great flair by Curt Reis. There are numerous touches in the play which reveal his ability to create the right atmosphere, and to allow the moments of tension to develop internally from the play itself, rather than imposing them from the outside. Only once did he go astray, in Act III, when he has Candy drop his financial reckonings over the dead body of Curley's wife. It is quite obvious, and therefore needs no underlining that Candy realizes that he has now no hope of escape.

Only Steinbeck, I assume, can be blamed for the ending of the play. It ends very suddenly, with the flash of George's revolver, and the curtains fall. It is quite wrong. The play demands an epitaph — a few words spoken by George — in which we can contemplate all that waste which has been created. But it doesn't come and thus leaves an unfortunate feeling of dissatisfaction.

These are minor points, though. They do not seriously detract from one of the finest (if emotionally exhausting) evenings in the theatre that it has been possible to see for a long time.

A hatful of laughs

By RAY WYLIE

A Thousand Clowns opened its month-long run at the Royal Alexandra Theatre Monday.

Herb Gardner's romantic comedy is a delightful sketch of one man's fight against reality. Murray Burns (Dane Clark), an unemployed writer of children's TV shows, is warned by social worker Sandra Markowitz (Margaret O'Brien) that if he doesn't get a permanent job and settle down, the city will have to take away his adopted nephew, Nick (Barry Gordon).

After a sudden romance with Miss Markowitz, and faced with the hard facts of the situation, Burns decides to tear up his happy illusions and to return to the children's show which he detests — all for the sake of normality.

The play contains many sources of humor, and, except for a rather sluggish first act, the cast carried it off quite well.

As the idealistic writer, Dane Clark has the comedian's grasp of both humor and pathos. Although suffering from Gardner's stereotypical characterization, Clark was eventually able to slip out of the mold and to establish himself as a believable human being. Such was not the fate of Margaret O'Brien who never really presented herself as a genuine person.

Nevertheless she gave an enjoyable performance as a brainy but emotionally unstable psychiatrist who readily succumbs to the charms of love.

As far as most people were concerned, Barry Gordon, Burns' 12-year-old nephew, was the star of the show. This is understandable for the young actor was natural and spontaneous in his interpretation of the role.

As the neurotic actor and one-time partner of Nick's uncle, Paul Richards gave an excellent performance of slapstick humor, while at the same time revealing the tremendous pathos of an emotionally maladjusted individual.

George Jenkins' scenery effectively created the atmosphere of a second-rate bachelor apartment in contemporary down-town Manhattan. The drab greens and browns suggested age and decay, while the cluttered arrangement of the furniture added to this overall effect.

I was not completely happy with his bright yellow executive suite, but was no doubt influenced by the general ir-scene, which tried to find humor in the use of an intercom set. Most of the hoped-for effects were lost, due to the garbled voice and poor sound projection, but this may be ironed out in later productions of the play.

Like most of the characters themselves, Ruth Morley's costumes suffered from the fact that they were a little too obvious. The young nephew "naturally" wore a T-shirt, jeans, and running shoes, the social worker a plain dark-blue suit, and the emotionally unbalanced TV actor clothes several sizes too large — as slapstick comedians are wont to do.

In the final analysis, A Thousand Clowns is a light and humorous peek into one man's life. The characters are perhaps too stereotyped and it took some time before they were able to overcome their initial sluggishness. Nevertheless, there is a constant stream of jokes, quips and funny situations, and if some are at the level of slapstick (which is often good), others rise to the degree of subtle wit.

I think that director Fred Coe has a reasonably successful play on his hands, and if light comedy is what you crave this weekend, the Royal Alex should keep you laughing.

MOVIES

In This Sporting Life Richard Harris portrays a present-day tragic hero, the inarticulate brute.

The new look of tragedy

by DAVID SECTER

This Sporting Life is more concerned with life than sports. As a dramatic expose of life in northern England it joins the ranks with such other powerful films as Room at the Top, Saturday Night and Sunday Morning and A Kind of Loving.

Like its distinguished predecessors, This Sporting Life communicates primarily by visual techniques. The camera probes into the thoughts and feelings of the characters by capturing their gestures at revealing moments. Most of the film is shot in extreme close-up which creates a compelling intensity throughout. Lighting and shadows are skillfully employed to heighten the dramatic impact.

The movie opens with a rugged game. Frank Machin, one of the stars of the local team, receives a brutal wallop in the mouth. As he swoons in semi-conscious pain, his story unfolds by a series of flashbacks. The past and present flow concurrently until they blend into a dramatic entity.

The story is a poignant portrait of an impossible love affair. Frank is a rebellious brute who is boarding with a young widow and her two children.

Mrs. Hammond lives in frigid fidelity to her husband's memory. After two years she still keeps his boots waiting by the hearth. Frank tries to break through Margaret Hammond's barrier, but she resists his intrusion. When the story begins the two are already engaged in conflict and tension.

The pathos derives from the impossibility of the match. Frank has the desire, but neither the depth nor understanding to reach Margaret. And she is too repressed to give him the tenderness he craves. Gradually Mrs. Hammond's inhibitions dissolve under her boarder's kindness. The moment of greatest empathy comes on Christmas Eve, the night of Frank's smashed jaw. As he recovers from his stupor at a drunken team celebration, he realizes the rotten life that awaits him in professional football. He yearns for a better life, and goes home laden with gifts for Margaret and the children. There is great tenderness that night, as she agrees to sleep with him— "... but only because it is Christmas."

In spite of this transient sympathy, the two characters are essentially incompatible. In Margaret's words, Frank is a "great ape on a football field." Richard Harris won the acting award at Cannes for his commanding portrayal of the muscular athlete. He conveys the frustration which tortures Frank because of his inability to articulate the yearning love he feels. His emotions swell up inside until they erupt with violence.

The most touching episode in the film occurs when Frank is trying to communicate his feelings to his closest team-mate Maurice, and must challenge his buddy to an arm-wrestle. With biceps bulging and veins bursting, then and only then can he express his love. "I must have her... she is the only thing in life that makes me feel needed."

Rachel Roberts is magnificent as the frigid young widow. Her face is cold and austere until she smiles; then it illuminates with radiant beauty. All we learn about Mrs. Hammond's past is that her husband took his own life in a gruesome suicide.

One scene in a restaurant epitomizes the incongruity of the two personalities. In an exclusive restaurant Frank props his feet on a chair, insults the waiter and finally drives Margaret away in humiliation.

Behind the love story, This Sporting Life is a powerful indictment of professional sports. Mr. Weaver, the owner of the team, personifies the callous exploitation of the football players. His wife has a hobby of seducing the men on the team, but it is Mr. Weaver who really screws them.

This Sporting Life is reminiscent of two excellent American films, The Hustler and Requiem for a Heavyweight. The protagonist in each is a sensitive professional athlete who is mulcted by his manager. He is almost redeemed by a Cordelia-figure, but in each case the love affair ends in tragedy. Indeed, there seems to be a lowly nobility about the professional athlete which makes him ideal as a modern tragic hero.

This Sporting Life, currently at the International Cinema, is the first feature film by director Lindsay Anderson, who has produced a string of award-winning documentaries. A good script, skillful photography, and outstanding acting combine to make his maiden effort an exceptional film.

Engineering students present an image of barbarism to this campus. They have a traditional affinity for tough-mindedness, comradeship and the abilities to drink large amounts of beer without vomiting, and to fight their way out of any situation.

Many Engineers devote a large part of their university career to living up to this image. This makes the image worse. So Engineers are caught up in a vicious circle of their own making. The image and the Engineers fertilize each other constantly.

It is said that there is a "traditional rivalry" between Engineers and Artsmen on this campus. That is putting the situation mildly. This "rivalry" is merely a surface symptom of a serious underlying disease that explains the enmity between the two groups.

I do not wish to deepen the rift that lies between Arts students and Engineers. It was with some hesitation that I wrote this column at all. But two high officials of the Engineering Society argued with me at great length this week and one — Bob Morris — asked me to present dispassionately an Artsman's case. He will present his in these pages presently.

What makes the Engineers' image?

The sight of burly Engineers carrying clubs and chained to a toy cannon should be a ludicrous one. But the clubs are real and the bearers make it clear they will use them if they are attacked.

The term "Brute Force Committee" ought to be hilarious. It's just sadly intimidating.

The fervor with which the Engineers sing of the ability to "demolish 40 beers" should be amusing. It's sickening because so many of them take it seriously.

The love of the spelling "Skule" for the former School of Practical Science (now officially the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering) indicates a genuine contempt for the literary mind.

But, how seriously should we take the Engineers? Many Artsmen laugh at them and then ignore them. They envisage Skulemen as bestial, boorish barbarians. But they think they're harmless.

Because of this vicious circle I mentioned, Artsmen must view Engineers with a certain amount of alarm. It doesn't matter which came first — the image or the Engineers — but every time Engineers commit some atrocity, the image is fulfilled. Every time the image is fulfilled, younger Skulemen in particular seek to surpass the image. And they appear as irresponsible youths, quick to anger and highly sensitive to what people think of them.

This last point introduces a fascinating contradiction into the makeup of the Engineer figure. The Engineers present themselves in a ghastly light, Artsmen take them literally and then the apparently bewildered Engineers say, in effect: "Why don't you love us? What have we done that we should suffer your abuse? Please love us."

The Engineers' surprise and annoyance at criticism was exemplified last week when a Victoria College man at a public debate termed Skulemen "the dregs of society" and said "the bridge-builders of tomorrow are the egg-throwers of today." The Varsity reported the Artsman's statement.

"Some of the boys were ready to come over and wreck your office," Morris told me candidly Tuesday night, "but we held a meeting and kept them back ...

"We can control them."

A scant eight hours before Morris' remarks, 40 Engineers had burst into the Varsity office to back an abortive attempt to kidnap a reporter blamed for the theft of the Engineers' flag.

Morris had shouted then: "We're taking him with us and we won't give him back until the flag is returned!"

Stefan Schader, who prefers to be called Stefan X and who is the "chief cannoner," stood tightlipped and handcuffed to the reporter. Schader wore thick, black leather gloves and, for a while, sunglasses that added to his menacing appearance.

Once again, we should have laughed. I couldn't. I remembered a February day in 1959 when I was a reporter on this newspaper. Medsmen stole the Skule cannon. That night a horde of Engineers kicked in the door of the Varsity office, fought with staff members and Medsmen, damaged furniture and equipment and eventually stole an undeveloped film they thought had on it pictures of the theft.

Now, for all I know, the vast majority of Engineers may be sober, studious men sincerely interested in using their scientific knowledge and crafts to create a better world. I hope — and grasping the larger hope, I believe — that only a small, hardened core of Skulemen is responsible for the constant degeneration of Skulemen's image. I say "for all I know" because although my connections with this campus go back six years, I know few Engineers and none of them well. I believe most Artsmen are in the same situation.

And I am sincerely sorry that the only time most Artsmen see an Engineer is when he is chained to a cannon and carrying a club.

Hart House Glee Club Starts 30th Season

By Martin S. SILVERSTEIN

In days gone by, ability to take one's part in a madrigal or glee was as common and expected a social accomplishment as ability to make a four at bridge is today.

Times changed and the emphasis shifted to other preoccupations, but the tradition never wholly died out; and while the glee clubs of today do not have quite the domestic character of old-time gatherings in country houses and London clubrooms, the spirit is undoubtedly similar.

In this spirit, the Hart House Glee Club held its opening rehearsal in preparation for the coming concert season.

Toronto's Hart House Glee Club needs no introduction to the campus or the community at large, having been an integral part of U of T musical activity for the past thirty years. The growth, vigour, and versatility brought to the Club by such capable conductors as Dr. Charles Peaker, Ward MacAdam, Rowland Pack, Walter Kemp, and Walter Barnes have brought success whether singing at the Blue and White Christmas Tree, a Hart House Church Service, or a Sunday Evening Concert.

Off Campus, the club has sung on many occasions around Toronto, and also at Western in London, in Cornell, Rochester, Syracuse and many other centres throughout Ontario and New York State.

A highlight of the autumn musical season will take place on November 23, 8:30 in the Great Hall, Hart House. The twelfth annual Tri-University Concert again features Varsity's own Hart House Glee Club, this year playing host to the Rochester Glee Club and the Royal Military College Glee Club.

on Procedures, Practices, Beliefs and Forms of Services of Today.
There is a rich variation in forms of worship in Unitarian Congregations strong unity in their attitudes towards creeds and dogma.

How do Unitarians claim the right to the use of these two pillars of orthodoxy?

Makem makes 'em laugh at Massey

By PAT BAWDEN

"Up the long ladder,
And down the short rope;
To hell with King Billy,
And God bless the pope!
If that doesn't do,
We'll tear him in two,
And send him to hell
With his red, white and blue."

That bit of doggerel was shouted with great gusto by Paddy, Tom and Liam Clancy, and Tommy Makem last Saturday night. They sang to a crowd of about 1800 at Massey Hall, a crowd that was ready from the beginning to match the infectious enthusiasm of the Irish singers.

The Clancy Brothers and Tommy Makem are from "traditional" folk-music families. All nine Clancy's have sung at local get-togethers; "Now that the girls are married," Tom says,
"they don't sing any more . . . in public!" Tommy Makem, like his father and brother, plays the tin-whistle, war-pipes and drums. Paddy and Tom are the only two who belonged to the Irish Republican Army, while all four have done some acting.

"To hell with his red, white and blue" summarizes fairly accurately the feeling behind many of their songs. Although Tommy Makem, unlike the Clancy's, is from Northern Ireland, he is perhaps the most bitter, and certainly the most outspoken opponent of lingering British authority in Ireland.
His opening reference to "that bitch in England", leading into the song "Bold O'Donohue" — the most frank avowal of this hostile feeling — shocked some and delighted others.

When a heckler called out "Sing the National Anthem", Liam was provoked to a flow of Gaelic, afterwards rather mildly interpreted as "Go walk fifty miles every day!"

Several of the songs particularly caught the audience's imagination. According to Tommy Makem, the Dead Sea Scrolls, discovered in the west of Ireland, were translated by Brendan Behan, and became the song "Lady Chatterley"! Another bit of Irish bawdry sung by Liam, "The Jolly Tinker", was about a tinsmith, presumably successful at his trade, but also quite capable of looking after milady's every need; he'd even "do it again" for her twenty pounds.

One interesting group of songs were children's songs, recalled by the Clancy's at a family party last Christmas. Most of these were untitled; one, to be sung to snails, as children try to coax them out of their shells; another about Irish and English soldiers — an action song. The English lose one eye, one arm, one leg and finally are "all dead". The Irish fare worse, losing two of everything, but are resurrected in the end,
"cause we are the Irish soldiers".

The program was rounded out with a few better-known Irish songs, among them "Shoals of Herring", and a bath-tub parody of "Galway Bay" — " . . . and watched the suds flow out by Galway Bay."

The Clancy's and Tommy Makem feel that folk-singing will survive its current wave of popularity; they cannot believe that this part of a country's heritage will be forgotten when the craze dies; instead, it will return to its place as a basic element of the culture. It is to their credit that they have resisted the trend towards commercialism, and continue to sing their music as they learned it at home, where "folk" music is simply "music". It is performances like this that save folksinging for those to whom the very word "Hootenanny" has become anathema.

Seventh saves symphony

By LOLA RASMINSKY and PAUL ENNIS

The Seventh Symphony saved an otherwise mediocre performance at the TSO's all-Beethoven concert this week.
The orchestra injected little life into the relatively unfamiliar works while the well-known symphony was really inspired.

The music written for Goethe's drama Egmont is, except for the overture, not well-known. Of the three excerpts the first is the most pleasant but none is really exciting. The effectiveness of the overture cannot be realized unless the contrast between the woodwinds and the full orchestra is marked. Although the woodwind phrasing, particularly the flute's, was graceful, the orchestra's answer in the dialogue was too reserved.

The Triple Concerto for Cello, Violin, Piano and Orchestra is the only concerto written for this combination by a great composer. It was an outcast, receiving only one performance during Beethoven's life, and relatively few since.

It is technically outstanding but is neither powerfully emotional nor melodically beautiful (except in the largo). There isn't time for expansively lyrical or passionate themes, as each main theme must be stated four times.

To help balance the three instruments Beethoven wrote most of the cello passages in its upper range as though it were a viola conversing on equal terms with the violin.
This is a further restriction on thematic material and virtuoso passage work.

The string soloists (Albert Partz, Theo Salzmann) failed to project, though Mr. Susskind kept the accompaniment down. There were some solo passages in which both

Symphony (cont'd)

cello and violin did play expressively. Mr. Salzman had difficulty at times switching from viola to cello range. He was often flat on the high notes and sounded labored during technically difficult sections in the first movement.

The concerto limits the piano much more than it does the strings. (Beethoven wrote this part for one of his less capable pupils.) This is unfortunate as Pierre Souverain gave the most musical performance of the three. His playing was always delicate.

The highlight of the concert without doubt was the enthusiastic and vital reading of the Seventh Symphony.

Seldom has the TSO played with such life.

It seemed as though the players were really enjoying the music; a feeling of exuberance was communicated to the audience.

Each of the four movements is based on and dominated by a different rhythmic pattern, hence the name 'dance symphony'. In the first movement Mr. Suskind was careful not to let the orchestra cover the solo winds. The flute and oboe transition into the six-eight section was light and hesitating enough. All the subtleties in the movement were handled with this same degree of skill.

The dance connotation is sustained in the second movement but transformed into rhythms of a ritual character, almost funereal. The ominous theme of the movement was never lost whether in the strings or brass, as new themes were added. The fugal elaboration of the throbbing rhythmic pattern was played with perfect precision and sensitivity.

This brilliant playing characterized the rest of the symphony except for a slight let-down in the final movement. Despite the brass' triumphant performance the high emotional pitch was not maintained at the end.

This was a case where the program was carried not by the guest soloist but by the orchestra itself. (Walter Hom, burger please take note.)

dition. However, as so often, the pseudo-scientific mentality has distorted a perfectly reasonable and beneficial state of mind into something malicious by applying it in the wrong place.

In reality there can be two differing conceptions of discovery.

Discovery can be absolute or it can be personal. The former consists in learning some genuinely new fact which no one has known before, whereas the latter consists in making the acquaintance of feelings and information which are new only in the sense in which the pyramids of Egypt are new to the tourist. While the sciences concentrate chiefly on the former, the humanities are largely concerned with the latter.

The real justification for studying the humanities lies in their pursuers the supreme intellectual joys and achievements.

But the pseudo-scientific mentality has no use for this type of personal discovery. It desires the search for sheer originality to reign supreme. It is more concerned with things than with values.

REMEDY

Such then are the distinguishing features of the pseudo-scientific mentality. Through its many intellectual virtues — the quest for fact and orderliness, the pursuit of utility and originality — are misapplied and perverted to vices. This tendency sloppily to transfer scientific criteria to inappropriate fields poses a payable threat to the future of the humanities. Is there any remedy? An obvious improvement, some say, would be to diminish the influence of science. Yet it is not science that is the real enemy, but rather the pseudo-scientific mentality, that naive perversion of scientific aims and methods. Nothing less than a revolution of manners and ideals will suffice to obliterate it. This is obviously a gigantic project, and it will not take place in the foreseeable future. If, however, we cannot destroy the pseudo-scientific mentality, we must certainly try to render it less noxious. Perhaps, as a step in the right direction, the defenders of the humanities should assume some forthrightness, while those of the sciences should acquire some humility.

ties are interested neither in universal relations nor in repeatable elements. They are interested in the human condition and in the varieties of the human experience, in phenomena which are complex and unique and which defy the power of generalization. To illustrate the point, we may adapt one of Housman's famous remarks: "a student of the humanities engaged upon his business is not at all like Newton investigating the motion of the planets, he is much more like a dog hunting for fleas. If a dog hunted for fleas on mathematical principles, basing his researches on statistics of area and population, he would never catch a flea except by accident. They require to be treated as individuals."

Those who neglect the unique and individual character of the humanities find themselves making some rather egregious errors. Take as an example the case of a former president of the American Historical Association. In 1924, Professor E. P. Cheyney, blighted by the pseudo-scientific mentality, chose as the subject of his presidential address the topic, Law in History. One of the laws which Cheyney claimed he had detected was a "law of moral progress". We who live in the post-Hitler atomic age are perhaps sadder but wiser men.

Cheyney is not an isolated example but is representative of the whole positivist school which would subscribe to J. B. Bury's much-quoted, much-maligned, and much-misunderstood dictum that "history is a science, no less and no more".

The quest for law and scientific orderliness, and the desire to win the respectability publicly enjoyed by science are manifest proof of the destructive dominance of the pseudo-scientific mentality. One historian, in anguish and despair at the continuing attempts to equate history with science, recently asked why history should be anything but history.

PREMIUM ON DISCOVERY

There is one further misconception which arises from the pseudo-scientific mentality — the notion of newness. Discovery is at a premium in the sciences, and rightly so. It is this attitude which has produced so many worthwhile improvements in our social and economic con-position are trivial when compared with the real point at issue. By his unending incantations, the pseudo-scientist has succeeded in misleading the public on what true usefulness is. For there are two related but differing concepts of usefulness: a thing can be either instrumentally useful as a means to an end or intrinsically useful as an end in itself.

As the Oxford philosopher W. H. Walsh has shown in a recent article, scientists are in their work concerned only with the concept of instrumental utility, i.e. of importance as revealed through effects. The alternative notion, that a thing can be intrinsically useful and require no further justification external to itself, is rather foreign to them. This is not surprising because precise measurement, so necessary for scientific work, can be much more easily applied to instrumental utility than to intrinsic utility: the latter always contains an inescapable element of subjectivity.

Most of the subjects handled in the humanities are intrinsically useful; yet the pseudo-scientific mentality, which acknowledges only the concept of instrumental utility, tends to dismiss them out of hand and gloat in its own supposed superiority. This attitude, however, is both pig-headed and wrong. As Professor Norwood once wrote, asking what is the use of the humanities has about the same logical force as asking what is the use of happiness. It involves the judging of a self-sufficient ultimate end by the criterion of a means.

UTILITY LAW

One of the main supports of the doctrine of usefulness is the scientist's undisputed ability to abstract from repeated empirical observation a natural law by which he can predict and control future events. This technique has of course yielded mankind many benefits. It is not noxious in itself but becomes so only when transplanted from its natural environment to that of the humanities. For laws, as Professor Morris Cohen has put it, involve "universal relations between repeatable elements". But the humani-

The sound of surprise

By DAVID JACKEL

Earlier this week, one of the handful of people who read this column demanded to know why traditional jazz has been receiving very little space. This question was a mistake, since it called forth the expression of a personal philosophy of jazz, part of which now follows.

All serious jazz fans or musicians believe that the soul of good jazz is creativity, both in solos and arrangements. This criterion is an exacting one, not only for the musician who strives to produce something original, but also for the listener, who may find that some music must be rejected as jazz, although it may still be worth listening to for other reasons.

Traditional jazz is a case in point. Many of the numbers associated with this school have been done to death, and no one seems to consider the idea of doing other tunes in the traditional format. This throws more emphasis than ever on the solos, which are all too often merely safe strings of clichés.

Listeners may like the traditional sound for reasons of nostalgia, or because it's great accompaniment for beer drinking. This can't be attacked as grounds for the preservation of dixieland as music. But its preservation as a valid jazz form involves much more than a sense of nostalgia or alcoholic good humor on the part of the listener.

This outburst of dogma does have direction, since it leads naturally to some comments on the George Wetling band now at the Colonial. Because the same old tunes and arrangements are being offered, the success of the group depends on the solos. And these, unfortunately, are not always good.

Various excellent musicians are involved in the proceedings, but some of them appear to be past their prime. Drummer Joe Thomas was once noted for his fluent middle-register solos, but now has trouble constructing any logical improvisation at all. J. C. Higginbotham had a justly deserved reputation as a big-toned trombonist in the Kansas City style, but his shouting tone is a thing of the past. He can still produce good, if subdued, solos when the spirit moves him, which isn't often enough.

Leader Wetling and clarinetist Hank D'Amico provide any spark which the group has. Wetling is a crisp authoritative drummer, and D'Amico's solos are generally very well done. Part of the overall problem may stem from the fact that some of the musicians involved don't seem really to feel at ease playing dixieland.

On the brighter side, Coleman Hawkins is in town for two weeks at the Friars, busy proving that life begins at sixty. Some of the musicians at the Colonial may be feeling their years, but Hawkins plays on with all the vigor he displayed in the 1920s.

Periodically he is rediscovered by the jazz critics, who proclaim his artistic rebirth approximately every five years. But Hawkins has his own views on this subject. "I don't change," he said earlier this week, "it's them. I don't change." He does though, he seems to get better.

With age and experience, Hawkins has evolved a philosophy which enables him to transcend the hazards of working with local rhythm sections. In this case however, the Jimmy Dale trio provides more than competent backing for the master. Leader Dale plays piano, while bassist Ian Hendridge and drummer Billy McCant round out the group.

And while we're on the subject of good jazz, Julian Burns reports that Horace Silver is set for the week of November 18 at the First Floor Club. Silver's quintet is one of the most exciting jazz groups active today, and one of the more closely knit ones as well. Much of this is due to Silver's talents as leader, pianist and arranger, but sidemen such as the excellent young trumpeter Blue Mitchell have important messages of their own to deliver.

For those who plan ahead, tickets will be on sale at Sam's or at the First Floor. And an A.T.L. card gets you a reduction in price for the Monday through Thursday performances.

This week's Hart House jazz concert was another good one. Pianist Lorne Tepperman led a quintet through some good arrangements of popular and jazz standards, but the highlights were the solos, particularly by Tepperman and saxophonist Brian Barley. The latter was especially good on an uptempo version of Stella by Starlight. Also in the group were trumpeter Frank Mathison, drummer Wally Kearns, the resident comedian, and bassist Johnny Amadio, brother of the ubiquitous Norman.

Groups such as Tepperman's, which tries, and often succeeds, in producing exciting and original jazz, are much more worth hearing than some lackluster dixieland groups. Faults could be found, but they are the ones to be expected in young musicians and to dwell on them would be merely critical carping. Next week Phil Branton leads a sextet in to Hart House for the noon hour concert. Let's hope the standards already set are maintained.

MUSIC

By David S. Bundler

"When I arrived, an actor sat on the stage amid decorations intended to represent a cave, before something which was meant to represent a smith's forge. He was dressed in tricot-tights and a cloak of skins, wore a wig and a artificial board, and with white, weak, genteel hands (his easy movements and especially the shape of his stomach and his lack of muscle revealed the actor) beat an impossible sword with an unnatural hammer in a way in which no one ever uses a hammer, and at the same time opening his mouth he sang something incomprehensible . . . one can hardly imagine even a child of over seven occupying himself with such a stupid, incoherent fairy tale."

— Tolstoy.

What happens when one irascible genius attacks another? Whether it's Dostoyevsky berating Turgenev, Dickens ridiculing Thackeray, Tolstoy flaying Wagner, or Norman Mailer just opening his mouth and making a hell of a noise to any poor colleague within earshot, reason is usually left waiting in the wings.

Still, the truth, no matter how obscured it may have become in the holocaust is often to be detected at the root of the affair. In Tolstoy's vicious description of a Moscow performance of Siegfried, we have, in fact, a classic case of what oft was thought but ne'er so well expressed.

If one reads any amount of Wagner on Wagner, one cannot help but be stunned by the seedy arrogance of the man. Scissors and paste philosophy, as Collingwood might have called it, creeps into almost every page in support of obscure theories of music and culture; sentences lie struggling and writhing, either seeking to convey meaning or obscure it; yards of digression constantly leave the reader to find his own bearings. If he can be bothered. And yet the same uncouth stuffed shirt is to be found in the opera house; one hardly knows whether his prose ought to have been encouraged to prevent him from excreting more music drama or whether on the other hand . . .

The basic problem of Wagner's conceptions in practice is that they do not work. If one seeks to evoke a mood or scene in music, one does not also need a visual representation of what is being evoked.

The procedure is not only redundant but borders on a negation if we consider music to be ordered sound acting on the imagination.

It is for this reason that Wieland Wagner and others have attempted to sweep away the naturalistic trappings and retire some of the threadbare theatrical tricks Wagnerian productions have endured for almost a century. But now the problem is this: people complain that nothing happens and that the symbolism is too metaphysical. After the Wolf's Glen of Der Freischütz maybe German audiences cannot cope with anything more taxing than romantic fairy tales. But at least the music is good you say. I suppose it is, especially when we have been conditioned to the uncharacteristic brevity of the concert hall Wagner.

Let your backside be the judge when it comes to epic six hour bouts with the Ring or Parsifal in the opera house.

Much of Wagner is distinguished by graceful melody and clean scoring, but all too often, formal incoherence gives the scores a veneer of pomposity and flabbiness. A language as rich as Wagner's simply tires the ear.

More often than not it tires the orchestra too, so that the Entrance of the Gods into Valhalla or the Immolation Scene come through at half power when they should provide the ultimate excitement.

But all this is no longer news. Outside Germany, Wagner is not a familiar figure in the opera house; he is considered to be too expensive, too long-winded and too dull. (editor's note: the TSO plans to celebrate the 150th anniversary of Wagner's birth, which occurred last May, by performing two bleeding orchestral excerpts from the Ring at a November concert).

U of T students admitted at 75% anything

U of T loses respect of French Canadians as well as football game during McGill weekend

Following is a special report on the McGill weekend by Varsity Editor, Ken Drushka

The province of Quebec moved a step closer to separatism over the weekend as more than 1,500 University of Toronto students invaded Montreal for the McGill weekend.

During the two-day binge U of T students lost the football game — and the respect of countless French Canadians.

Fortunately they had to contend with rain, snow and cold. Except for the weather the effect would have been worse.

As it was, activities were somewhat limited and the number of French Canadians who came in contact with the Toronto group was smaller than could have been.

But as it turned out the majority of U of T students managed to insult enough French Canadians to widen the breach between Quebec and the rest of the country.

U of T students shouted bastardized French at people on the streets, jeered at French Canadian elevator operators, cab drivers and waiters. Everywhere they went they created a little bit of animosity that will not be forgotten.

Students, singly and in groups, wearing their school jackets, roamed the streets of downtown Montreal Friday and Saturday nights.

Some were too drunk to walk, and many others were too drunk to care about what effect they might be having.

Three trainloads of the U of T ambassadors left Union Station Friday. They drank, broke a few windows and were sick in the aisles.

Three students were injured on the second train. One received head cuts and a slight skull fracture when he was thrown against a window. He will remain in a Montreal hospital until Tuesday. A third injured his hip when he fell against an arm rest.

A group of five Engineers was observed throwing beer bottles at passing trains from an observation platform. They broke at least one window in another train.

Two U of T police officers and several railway police staffed each train and managed to keep damage to a minimum. One of the U of T officers said this year's was a relatively quiet weekend.

Students arrived at Windsor Station, pushed their way through the crowds and made their way to the Windsor, Laurentien and Queen Elizabeth hotels.

All downtown Montreal hotels were instructed to contact the Students' Administrative Council if celebrations got out of hand. None complained.

Engineers in colored hard hats, shouting, singing and drinking, paraded up and down Dorchester Blvd. Artists tried to keep up with the Engineers, while the citizens of Montreal looked on with contempt and disgust showing on their faces.

At the football game in Molson Stadium Saturday McGill Engineers came onto the field with their traditional coffin. They waved to U of T engineers, who attempted to get onto the field.

With clubs swinging the Brute Force Committee charged a line of McGill student attendants, but were turned back.

But not all U of T students devoted the weekend to a drunken assault on French Canadian attitudes. Many drank intelligently, tried to achieve some understanding of Montreal and generally acted like responsible human beings.

But these persons were in the minority and their action did not stand out as did those of the others.

"Is this what most U of T students are like?" a University of Montreal student asked as he passed a group of drunk and noisy U of T students in the lobby of the Queen Elizabeth Hotel.

After he left a large group of students formed a snake line and, accompanied by loud singing, jostled their way through the crowded lobby.

The return trip Sunday with only two trains was a quieter version of the Friday excursions. Activities were confined to drinking and three times stopping the return trains by pulling the emergency cord.

Students disembarked at Union Station Sunday night singing the U of T song. Another weekend of fun at McGill was over.

The McGill weekend is organized by the Students' Administrative Council.

A few seconds after this picture was taken the Engineer made off with McGill band member Tony Hinds' hat.

A grim faced Doug Ward, SAC president, views the football game in Molson Stadium.

Claim democracy is scourge of North America

Competitors in St. Michael's College's first international and intercollegiate debate—in parliamentary style—argued Friday and Saturday that Democracy is the scourge of North America, because:

The people are not always intelligent electors — if they bother voting at all;

Legislatures do not always work for the common good;

Sheer numbers of populations make effective expression of democratic opinion impossible;

France had to find a new

Napoleon to bring order from chaos, and

The trend in government is from democracies to enlightened oligarchies.

Their opponents countered arguing that: "Democracy is a blessing," because:

There is an aggregate of wisdom in the people;

Those who misuse power in a democracy can be overthrown;

The only alternatives to democracy are dictatorship or anarchy, and Only a democracy guarantees the rights and privileges of its citizens.

Under the rules of the contest organized by the St. Michael's debating society, the Senate Club, it did not matter whether the debate was won or lost — it was who best played the game.

Paul Connolly and Salvatore Colenzo, who organized the competition, invited teams from 16 Canadian and U.S. universities. The contestants spoke as members of a government and opposition Chicago's Loyola University won the team trophy. Individual speaking trophies went to Jerry Woynerowski, also of Loyola, Kathleen O'Keefe, (SMC), Michelle Macarick, (Marywood College, Scranton, Pa.), and Eugene Fitzmaurice of Villanova University.

Impromptu speakers were Arthur Maloney, who formed the Senate Club in 1937, Mr. Justice Arthur Kelly, Mark MacGuigan of the University of Toronto Law School and John J. Robinette, Toronto lawyer.

Of the 32 competitors, three were girls. The feminine element achieved its ambition when Miss M. Macarick was named government leader in the final round of the debates. There was a moment of confusion though, when Kenneth Swan of the Royal Military College, Kingston, speaking in support of the government, referred to Miss Macarick as "My Prime Mistress."

Announce Winners

Entries by males to the Varsity Playboy contest were so poor and so close to obscurity that we aren't awarding a prize to a male letter. But to show we're not finks, we've picked three female winners and they'll have the promised steak dinner with Varsity sub-editors Jim Laxer, Steve Barker and Alan Walker.

Marilyn Horn, Liz Koch and Cheryl Kemp (all I Vic) had the brightest advice for the anonymous U of T male who wrote to Playboy magazine about his problem that coeds bothered him and his friends when they wanted to study.

Misses Koch and Kemp offered to tutor the hapless males.

Miss Horn's advice included: "girls are not only good for domestic duties; they are also good for typing essays, copying notes (and) highlighting study breaks."

So if those three girls, whose phone numbers we can't trace, will come to the Varsity office at 1 p.m. Tuesday, the button-sewing operation will take place. And we'll talk about dinner.

Rapt audience hears lecture on seduction

"This is how a girl can be seduced," said Howard Adelman, graduate philosophy student in a speech in New College Wednesday.

Taking an imaginary position as the male in the situation, Adelman said: "I can seduce this girl under certain conditions - if I give her the impression that I am a charming fellow, that I love her, even that I will marry her."

In turn the girl thinks she can be seduced only if these impressions are given.

Adelman called this an ethical seduction because it fits into a value judgment that the person holds. Without the conception in her mind, the girl cannot be seduced.

Similarly, a girl seduces a man by conforming to the image of the ideal girl in the man's mind.

"This pseudo-seduction is doubly superficial because of its dependence on external appearance," Adelman said, "and doubly deceitful because deceit is at the basis of the seduction."

He said there was only one case of real seduction, that of Don Juan.

"If there was a woman he could seduce her, and he wanted to seduce all women."

"He believed he could find release from his infinite passion to realize all love in a woman who would give him eternal satisfaction and realization in one moment."

Adelman said since his fundamental belief is that all passion, truth and human experience can be realized in one moment, he was doomed to despair.

Adelman explained that seduction is based on this belief of complete realization in love, a belief that is always shattered when the attempt is gained. The person is dominated by a repetition of his efforts unless his will is strong enough to lift him to a higher plane.

"Anyone dominated by the seduction-realization ideal cannot have normal personal relationships because their goal is maximum pleasure all at once. Their only faith lies in that ideal."

Liberal Club plans 5 week lecture series

University of Toronto Liberals open a five-week lecture series Tuesday with an economic look at the series' theme, In Search of Canadian Liberalism.

Professor Ian Drummond of the department of history will talk on international economic policy at 4:15 p.m.

Tuesday in Rm. 240 of the Trinity academic building.

The series is based on the title of Dr. Frank Underhill's recent book. Dr. Underhill, formerly on the university history department, writes periodically for Toronto dailies.

Other speakers in the series include: Paul Fox and D. F. Forster of the department of political economy, J. M. S. Careless of the department of history, Senator David Roll, MPP for Brant Robert Nixon, and Controller Philip Givens of Toronto.

CUP COMMENT

By BRUCE KIDD

When Varsity reviewer Grunding Weinhurst a year ago described the motion picture Barabbas as "the movie to end all movies," the advertising manager of the chain at which Barabbas was playing immediately cancelled all subsequent advertising in The Varsity. Apparently he had supposed a laudatory review would be thrown in gratis.

But even more sensitive was the Saskatoon businessman who cancelled his ads and subscription to the University of Saskatchewan Sheaf over a pictorial essay which included a photo of leaves captioned: "God's potato chips". Manufacturer of potato chips G. W. Host said he found the caption distasteful: "I must strongly protest any inference that our product tastes worse than dry leaves," he complained in a letter to the Sheaf editor.

On y soit qui mal y pense.

SUGAR SHORTAGE

Have you ever sat in a restaurant and chewed sugar lumps while waiting for service? So do a lot of other people. Concerned about the recent rise in sugar prices, the Brock cafeteria on the University of British Columbia replaced sugar lumps with awkward sugar dispensers because too many students were eating the lumps.

According to the UBC director of food services, the cafeteria has already saved 950 pounds of sugar.

GHOSTS ON BOND STREET?

Upper Canadian firebrand William Lyon Mackenzie lies cold and quiet in his grave. At least that is the conclusion of two Ryerson reporters who recently spent a night in the four-poster bed of Toronto's first mayor in the Mackenzie house on Bond Street.

The reporters were eager to interview the 1837 rebel. They had expected him to revisit his old haunts to write political pamphlets, and wished to record his opinions about what is wrong with Confederation, Metropolitan Toronto, and Massey College.

But their vigil was in vain. The only spooks they thought they heard turned out to be the starting motor of the automatic furnace.

A DRIPPY DEGREE FOR METER MEN

The city of Dallas recently asked Southern Methodist University to teach a course in reading water meters.

The university accepted the offer. It calls the course "orientation of the individual in the water department."

CHRISTIANITY, POLITICS, AND MADISON AVE.

With just 51 days remaining to Christmas, student councils at two Canadian universities have got entangled over the position of religion in student activities.

The University of Victoria Martlett reports a heated debate over a Newman and Canturbury Club request for a council subsidy for Christmas displays on the campus. The separation of church-and-state element on council eventually won the day, but not before one of the movers of the defeated proposal suggested the Christmas display "would be good public relations within the community." Just who are they trying to con?

A similar problem cropped up recently at the Federated Colleges in Guelph. An editorial in the Ontario last week protested the allotment of $900 of council funds to campus religious clubs. The Ontario argues that if the church clubs receive grants, then so should the political clubs: "It is a thin line that separates religious and political clubs, and for the purposes of fund allocation it is non-existent."

By comparison, both groups on this campus are out in the dark. The religious clubs get nil, while each of the five political parties are allotted a meagre $30 for Model Parliament expenses.

JUST ANOTHER UBYSSY SERVICE

What is the best service a student newspaper can provide for its university? Last spring The Varsity sponsored a contest to enable a U of T coed to be escorted by the SAC President, but the University of British Columbia Ubyssy has done one better.

Last week the Ubyssy printed the licence number, make, color and model of the RCMP's newest campus ghost car.

Treasure Van opens today

Treasure Van opens on campus today, offering easy spoils to students unable to make a world tour for curios at this time.

The week-long display of crafts from 32 countries will be open at the drill hall, 119 St. George St., from 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m., and 7 to 9:30 p.m. It will be closed Thursday morning.

All the articles on display are for sale. Proceeds will go to the World University Service. Among the items are Spanish botas, Indian aptabas, opium pipes and taxi horns.

The entry form at right is your chance to win an original, hard-carved African mask from Kenya. Just drop it in the draw box at the Treasure Van, properly filled out. The draw will be held Friday night. Entry forms are available only in today's Varsity.

the students' council

Those who lead the country into the abyss
Call ruling too difficult
For ordinary men.
—Brecht

It is to be presumed that the members of the Students' Administrative Council hold their respective positions because of some special abilities and interests they have.

One would assume — or at least hope — the SAC members were elected to their positions because of their abilities in organization and administration; and because of their interest in student affairs and their ideas relating to student activities.

We would like to think the members were not elected because they and their friends were able stir up election campaigns within their colleges and faculties which were based on personalities, razzmatazz and the so-called "college spirit."

Unfortunately the circumstances indicate that a large number of this year's council members were elected for the latter reasons.

At last Wednesday's general council meeting several important and, one would think, controversial matters were brought up and voted through.

A report of the Model Parliament committee was heard which recommended basic changes in the structure of the elections and debates. Only two council members rose to ask questions, and there was no debate on the subject.

A motion was passed, also without debate, inviting Ayn Rand to give a lecture on campus.

A lengthy and emotionally charged report was given by the weekends chairman on the controversial Tarheel weekend exchange. Except for a thunderous round of applause at the conclusion, there were no questions or discussion.

A report from the university committee was given which included statements pertinent to the whole future of students in this university. With the exception of one facetious comment, there was again no discussion.

There were other matters that were dealt with in an equally brief and detached manner. With the exception of the question period, the only item of business which held the attention of the council as a whole for more than five minutes was whether council had received an invitation to a post-game cocktail party at McGill.

We know that not all council members take this uninterested approach to their positions; and we also realize that some of those who do may have legitimate reasons for their inaction.

A new member, Stan Adelman, realized part of the problem when he put forth a request for written reports of commission and committee meetings which would be available to all members before general meetings.

However, some council members, on their own initiative, have already been able to acquaint themselves with council affairs before meetings. Many of those who have not can justly be accused of shirking their responsibility.

We would only like to remind those council members who sit in silent assent that they are turning this year's SAC into a do-nothing group of rubber-stampers.

President Doug Ward said during the meeting that council will have to start initiating thoughtful and intelligent activities if it is to attract decent candidates for council membership.

So far, the majority of this year's membership has done nothing to indicate that council activities are worthy of an intelligent person's time and energy.

CANADA IN CRISIS (4)

(This fourth article in the series was written by Ross Paul, the editor of The Campus, Bishop's University, Lennoxville, Quebec.)

English rule threatened in Quebec

By ROSS PAUL
Editor, The Campus

Eighty-five per cent of French Canadians are dissatisfied with their lot under the present conditions of Confederation. Nearly one third of these are considered to be in sympathy with the separatist cause.

These alarming statistics, revealed in a recent survey by the Montreal newspaper, La Presse, cannot be cast aside with the attitude that all will be forgotten in a year or two. The "prise de conscience" or awakening that has taken place in very recent years in French Canada is a growing awareness on the part of the French that they are considered secondary by most of their English-speaking counterparts. This is difficult to swallow for a people who comprise about one third of a country's population.

It is difficult for the outsider to understand why the French Canadian has not been concerned with this matter in the past. One must know Quebec well to realize that the economic change of recent years has been largely responsible for the social one. In the days of the small farming towns, the communities were very local and extremely closely knit. The French Canadians were farmers, concerned only with feeding their families and helping the community church. Few were concerned with or knew much about the national Canada.

The average French Canadian voter under the Duplessis regime was apt to support the government provided that the crop was good and the church well furnished. Mr. Duplessis had his own inimitable way of keeping the influentials happy. However, the new face of French Canada is emerging in a social and economic revolution, one that has been accelerated by the publicity afforded by the media of newspapers, radio and television.

There is definitely a popular trend towards separatism in Quebec, something which those outside the province find difficult to believe. It is, however, just as important that those in the west and the maritimes recognize the seriousness of the problem as it is for the English in Quebec. Otherwise, separation will occur before anyone can prevent it.

This separatism may well exist within the bounds of Confederation, but only as long as remaining with the other nine provinces is convenient. The basic argument for separatism, of course, is the British North America Act itself, which has set up Canada as a democracy run by a predominantly English-speaking Parliament. In effect, the minority group, the French, are being ruled by the English.

The Toronto Globe and Mail has, on several occasions, asked if the average Canadian really cares about Confederation, and complained about the lack of response to its pleas. This lack is not so much a Canadian apathy or disinterest, but a failure to realize the seriousness of the French Canadian.

In this regard, our press has not been as sensitive to the problem as it should, and consequently, most of us have been shocked by the suddenness of the social revolt.

We are now dealing with a new French Canadian, the product of a rising economy and closer contact with the big business of the English. There is an extremely capable crop of educated young French businessmen who are devoted to the cause of winning complete national equality for their people.

In an article, "Conversations with Quebec's Revolutionaries", (MacLean's Magazine, Sept. 7, 1963), Peter Gzowski quoted the following from one of these young men: "Of course, it may be that we won't win anything through the other channels, and maybe we will have to have violence. Even civil war if that's necessary. All I know is that we've waited six generations now and that's long enough. Our children aren't going to have to put up with what we've had to. That's for sure."

This definite voice is not that of a fanatical youngster in the Front de Liberation Quebecois (FLQ), nor that of an exceptional radical. It is the voice of a new generation French Canadian. All the bombings in the world will never win the case for the Quebecois. It is the young business and family man who is the leader of the drive for recognition and perhaps, independence.

The English rule in Quebec is being threatened for the first time. The days of business domination are over. There is a serious threat to the English control of economic power in Quebec. The Lesage regime is a progressive government that has already nationalized the power companies, and perhaps intends to nationalize the English next.

The French Canadians agree that their present situation is intolerable. They simply vary on the extreme, extent, and speed that this revolution must take. The less interest and understanding shown by the English, the greater each of these three forces will be. The French Canadian has decided to stand on his own two feet for a change. It is about time.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Questions SAC decision

Last week the SAC accepted without dissent a report of its Model Parliament Committee. This year there will be no automatic majority in the Parliament, but rather there will be proportional representation (unless one party gets over 40 per cent of the vote in the election).

There will be no non-confidence motions. Everything will be debated in the usual way but if the government is defeated it will not have to resign.

The reasons given for proportional representation are that it will mean the government will have to discuss its bills and make compromises so that it won't be defeated. But this contention is made ridiculous by the rule that the government can't be defeated anyway.

And why the provision about 40 per cent of the vote. In fact, the SAC has said that proportional representation is a fair and good thing if the highest vote in the election is 39 per cent. But if the highest vote is 41 per cent then proportional representation is not a fair and good thing; instead the present system becomes fair and good, whereas it was bad at 39 per cent. Clearly and indefensible and almost incomprehensible proposition.

Then why were these "reforms" adopted? The answer is in the composition of the committee that proposed them. It was made up of a representative of each of the four campus parties and two SAC members. One of the SAC members was a candidate for leader of the Conservatives.

One would suspect then that a battle took place between the "ins" and the "outs". The Liberals are rumored to have defended the present system with its automatic majority and lack of political manoeuvring. The other parties (including the Conservative SAC member) are said to have favoured proportional representation with an almost certain prospect of minority government and a great deal of manoeuvring. To end the possibility of political and procedural squabbling some clever fellow apparently thought up the idea of not being able to defeat the government. In so doing they effectively destroyed the Parliamentary aspect of the debate.

Get Revenge Through Tatoos

By MICHAEL KISLY

A man once asked a tattoo artist to have the picture of his wife tattooed on his body. This in itself was by no means an unusual request. What was unusual was that he wanted his wife's picture on the sole of his foot. On receiving a look of surprise from the artist, he explained that he hated his wife so much that he wanted to step on her for the rest of his life.

The above was one of the many anecdotes told to us by Sailor Pancho, a veteran tattoo-artist located in a tiny shop on Bay St. opposite the new city hall. It was in early May that Tom and I stumbled onto his shop in search for practical experience for our engineering credits. Although this is not Pancho's first visit to Toronto, he was full of new stories and experiences, most of which cannot be related in this "family" newspaper.

To say that Pancho is widely travelled is no exaggeration. In his 20-year career, Pancho has crossed Europe, Central America, United States, and Canada. A Canadian citizen at present, he speaks half a dozen languages, French and Spanish being his best. Pancho explained to us the Tahitian origin of the word "tattoo", and traced the practice of tattooing to ancient Egypt. With pride, and apparent conviction, he informed us that "tattooing is classified as an art." He then showed us his electronic equipment, and assured us that he uses only the best antiseptics available. He described the process as "almost painless" and "much like after-shave lotion". The application of the vegetable dyes involves no pain at all.

Since there are already many designs available, there is rarely any need to make up new ones. Instead, Pancho often trades his designs for those of the other members of his profession, "especially with my friends in Chicago". Chicago seems to be one of the strongholds of this art, and there exists a club there. We were, of course, very much interested in the type of clientele he caters to. Pancho emphasized that "it's not only punks and jail-birds that get tattooed," but admitted that some of his clients were "eccentric". Among these he placed the man who walked into a tattoo shop and asked the artist to draw a dark dotted line around his neck, the only part of the body uncovered by tattoos. When the job was done, he asked for the following inscription: "Please cut along the dotted line."

However, Pancho thought that most of his clients had more serious motives. Among these, he mentioned patriotism and fidelity to lovers. He drew our attention to the fact that business was much better during the war, when many servicemen had the names of their sweethearts and various patriotic mottos tattooed on themselves. Pancho also told us of a woman who had her husband's name tattooed on her body to prove her fidelity to her husband who had been serving a jail term and was about to come out.

Of course, some people get tattooed for fun or out of daring; some out of superstition. In France it used to be quite common for con-men to tattoo a pair of eyes on their buttocks, that they might always be on the lookout for the law. Some people, associated with the virile male, we inquired as to the extent of his female clientele. Pancho confirmed the fact that not too many women get tattooed. Among women "the average prostitute is the most frequent customer." In his travel from coast to coast, Pancho found this type of clientele especially abundant in Winnipeg. This city is apparently "the stopping place" for the itinerant prostitutes who travel from one end of the country to the other, in search of their daily bread. Pancho even detected a trace of jealousy among the members of that profession with regard to the tattoos he made for them.

Out of good business sense, Pancho was quick to point out that other types of women bring him some business. He again cited the case of the faithful woman previously described. Then he pointed out the inscription over his door: "Tattoos — More Precious Than Jewellery".

This discussion naturally led us to ask him whether he had ever had any trouble with the authorities. He told us that he was always very careful not to break any laws of the country he happened to be working in. "I never guages, French and Spanish being his best.

Pancho explained to us the Tahitian origin of the word "tattoo", and traced the practice of tattooing to ancient Egypt. With pride, and apparent conviction, he informed us that "tattooing is classified as an art." He then showed us his electronic equipment, and assured us that he uses only the best antiseptics available. He described the process as "almost painless" and "much like after-shave lotion". The application of the vegetable dyes involves no pain at all.

Since there are already many designs available, there is rarely any need to make up new ones. Instead, Pancho often trades his designs for those of the other members of his profession, "especially with my friends in Chicago". Chicago seems to be one of the strongholds of this art, and there exists a club there.

We were, of course, very much interested in the type of clientele he caters to. Pancho emphasized that "it's not only punks and jail-birds that get tattooed," but admitted notably Catholics, have tattoos made for religious reasons, "especially the Latin Americans."

Tattoos may be made for the purposes of identification. In fact, about two years ago Pancho made the headlines in the Toronto newspapers when he advised the public that it was the "Last Week", and urged everyone to get tattooed for easy identification of the bodies after a nuclear war. He did not elaborate as to who would be left to perform these identifications. On a less ominous note, he suggested to us that "every-one should have his blood-type tattooed."

In general, people are quite self-conscious, but many will, out of curiosity, come and look over his shop. Most will, however, come back at night — if they are interested in doing business. As a psychological measure to combat this self-consciousness, Pancho usually installs a half-drawn curtain near the entrance. "This is to suggest an atmosphere of privacy about the business."

Since tattooing is usually tattoo minors in my shop, whether it is or is not legal in the country I am working in."

We asked him if he had ever tattooed any prominent people. He replied: "Several Mexican movie-stars, a few politicians, and once even a priest." Here he pointed out that there were many famous people throughout the world sporting tattoos. In particular, he mentioned a Scandinavian monarch (who shall remain nameless) who is completely covered with tattoos. And if we are to believe the advertisements in his window, there must have been many other tattoo-covered individuals of royal blood.

As we were about to leave, he once again bemoaned the decrease in business due to the generally peaceful conditions. However, he seemed resigned to sit and wait until some prospective clients discovered his shop. When we got out into the street, I could not help remarking that the word "permanent" would be more appropriate than the word "precious" in the slogan over his door.

Fifth consecutive title

A UTRFC
Syndicated Service

Varsity Rugby Blues clinched their fifth consecutive Intercollegiate title Saturday by downing McGill Redmen 9-0 in a hard-fought match at Montreal.

Blues only managed one try against the fired-up home side, and that came when Bob Dodds took a quick line-out throw from Ian Sinclair and raced through five McGill tacklers for the score.

Paul Wilson tabulated the remainder of the points with a pair of penalty kicks.

But despite the win and the Turner Trophy, Blues came away far from happy. Redmen's close play and spoiling tactics prevented Varsity from settling down as a unit, and the fearless Toronto fifteen never got into high gear.

In addition, McGill sent three Blues into the hospital. Sinclair ran into a stray cleat with his nose early in the game. He returned to action late in the second half, only to have the wound re-opened. His nose was broken in three places.

Prop Paul Gray suffered a suspected fractured rib when McGill's captain ran into him, and former captain Bill Nelems has a hairline hip fracture.

Outstanding for Blues were Bill Stow and Gethin Hughes who demonstrated without a doubt that they are masters of scrum play.

In Toronto, the Intermediates outlasted Barbarians 11-9 on the back campus in a scrappy match which could have gone either way. Toronto scores came from Bob McGee with a try convert, and a penalty goal, while Oreste Hymnikw added a try. Varsity Thirds suffered the UTRFC's first setback of the season, bowing to Nomad's Thirds 11-6. Both home tries were scored by Rinkie footballer Mike Gray. In the Scrum: UTRFC statistician announces that Blues have outscored opponents 136-26 this fall. Paul Wilson has accounted for more than half of this total with 72.

The tension of Blues' 9-0 defeat of McGill to win the rugby championship is reflected on the faces of the players.

Rowers win Eastern Canada title

London. — Varsity Rowing Eight captured the Eastern Canada Intercollegiate Rowing championship by out-muscling six other boats at the championship regatta Saturday at Fanshawe Lake.

Led by Stroke Roger Jackson, Blues started off with the phenomenal pace of 45, then held a stroke of 40 to the finish of the three-quarter mile course.

Blues were leading by three open lengths when they passed what they thought was the finish line and eased up. Simply drifting the short distance to the actual finish, they nevertheless beat runner-up Western by 10 feet. The McMaster crew was third in the Senior race.

The other Toronto boats weren't as successful. The favored Junior boat finished far behind Waterloo and Western, while the freshmen crew also placed third behind Western and Waterloo.

Blues lose to Redmen

Sternberg then lateralled to Dave Galloway who scampered an additional eight yards on a play which covered 42 yards.

The play placed the ball on McGill's 43-yard line and with the running of both Sternberg and Israel, Varsity moved the ball to the 10-yard line where the attack was stalled. Taylor's field goal was good and Blues trailed 4-3.

McGill moved right back up field after the Varsity score on passes to Lambert and flanker Don Taylor.

Quarterback Glen St. John then tried a pass to Taylor in the end zone but a leap by Varsity's Bryce Taylor knocked the ball into the arms of Sternberg for the only interception of the game.

The third quarter was played entirely in the Toronto side of the field and Blues were fortunate to come out of the 15-minute segment with no points scored against them.

One one occasion, Blues scrimmaged on their own one-yard line and on another scrimmaged on the two. McGill's Abbott kicked an early single in the fourth quarter which proved to be the winning point.

Blues controlled play in the final quarter but were unable to hit paydirt. At the six-minute mark Blues were on the McGill 26-yard line but the attack was stalled and Bryce Taylor's attempted 28-yard field goal was blocked.

With 3:20 left in the game, a pass-interference call against McGill gave Varsity possession on McGill's 25-yard line. But Blues couldn't find the end zone and the wide field-goal attempt gave the game to McGill.

It was Blues' dullest offensive display of the season as halfbacks Gerry Sternberg, Harold Hall, and Pete Sutherland carried the ball between them (26 times from scrimmage while fullback Bill Watters only carried twice. Israel only tried two passes in the second half.

QUICK KICKS: McGill quarterback, Glen St. John is through for the season after separating his shoulder in the final minutes of the game. He was thrown for a 22-yard loss on the play . . .

Blues held Willie Lambert to a 3.1-yard average in 10 carries but fullback Peter Howlett ran for a 5.8-yard average in 13 carries. . . Lambert caught four passes for 55 yards. . .

Sternberg was Blues top ball-carrier with 55 yards in 12 carries followed by Harold Hall with 41 yards in eight carries and Pete Sutherland with 25 yards in six . . . This was Sutherland's fourth game in eight days. . .

So you've read the sports editor's column on this page and can't figure out why the writer is so delirious. Rick Kollins presented Miss Bambi Katz with an engagement ring in Montreal and is just getting over the shock of her accepting it.

Gaels clinch Yates with 51-9 win, Blues laid to rest by Redmen, 5-4

Missed field goal signals end for Blue and White

By SHEL KRAKOWSKY
Associate Sports Editor

Montreal. — The stigma of a losing football team persists with Varsity Blues. Since 1959, Varsity has only won five of its 23 league games.

Whenever victory is visible on the horizon, some mysterious mania takes hold of Dalt White's charges which leads to a psychosis commonly known as defeat.

Saturday's game here against McGill Redmen at Molson Stadium (a stadium which is aptly named for the annual trek of U of T students) was in accord with Varsity's record of last-minute losses.

With the scoreboard reading 5 - 3 in favour of Redmen, Blues moved the ball to McGill's nine-yard line and on third down Bryce Taylor attempted an 18-yard field goal. The attempt was wide by a yard and went for a single that left the final score 5-4 in favor of McGill.

With Blues' loss and Queens' overwhelming win over Western Mustangs in Kingston, Queen's Golden Gaels are the new OAAA champions and winners of the Yates cup.

Blues would have been the only team in the league with a chance of catching Queen's if Varsity had defeated McGill.

Even if Blues had defeated McGill, their chances of pulling an upset over Queen's next Saturday in Toronto would have been slight. With Blues' mounting injury roll, a win next week is almost an impossibility.

Blues' guard Kaspar Pold missed Saturday's game with a bad ankle and is a doubtful starter in next week's season finale. Offensive tackle and defensive end Bill (Moose) Jackson is out for the season with torn knee ligaments as is offensive end and defensive tackle Jim Fisher, who has a chipped bone in his ankle.

McGill took an early 3-0 lead in the first quarter when Willie Lambert split the uprights for a 24-yard field goal. Lambert added a single in the second quarter on a missed field-goal attempt.

Blues had their longest single gain of the game in the second quarter on a pass that should have been intercepted by McGill. Quarterback Jim Israel threw to halfback Gerry Sternberg off the mark and the ball tipped the fingers of McGill defensive half Leon Abbott into the arms of Sternberg.

Harold Hall (18), Bryce Taylor (12) and the game referee (right) watch with anticipation as Blues' fate is decided for 1963. This attempted 18-yard field goal by Taylor went wide of the uprights by about three feet in the final minute of Saturday's game at McGill and allowed Redmen to scrape by with a 5-4 victory. The loss eliminated Blues from the title race and gave Queen's Golden Gaels their second Yates Cup in three years.

Young scores 19 to lead Queen's to grid title

Kingston. — Queen's Golden Gaels won their second Yates Cup in three years here Saturday by crushing Western Mustangs 51 - 9. It was Gaels' fifth consecutive win.

The chance of a post-season playoff for the Senior Intercollegiate Football League championship was eliminated when Varsity Blues lost to McGill Redmen, 5 - 4. Blues are the only team with a chance to defeat Queen's but Varsity cannot end the season in second place, a prerequisite for the title playoff.

Gaels quarterback Cal Connor scored one touchdown and threw five t.d. passes, three to halfback Bayne Norrie and two to fullback Jimmy Young. Bill Edwards counted Queen's other major, Young booted seven converts and Gaels opened the scoring with a safety touch.

Pat McConnell scored the Western touchdown and hoofed two singles. Jim Weber added a convert.

Connor completed nine of 17 passes as Queen's lived up to pre-season expectations for the first time this season. Gaels led 23 - 1 at the half.

ABOUT THIS FOOTBALL GAME . . . (HIC) . . .

Sunday, early evening . . . An old CPR train somewhere between Montreal and Toronto . . .

Through a misty cloud of waning inebriation I can try to make some sense of this McGill Weekend nonsense. Its a difficult task to do your job when you're cramped in the corner of a crowded train seat . . . The seats are designed for two humans . . . but ten drunken college students can fill the void just as well . . .

The train shakes a little, then a lot. The typewriter falls off your lap into a puddle of overflowed sorrows. Then some clod turns the lights off in the car . . . Great fun for lovers but a nightmare for a sports writer.

This newspaper won't show the stale rye whiskey that's strewn over my copy paper. If our type ink could reproduce smell, you'd all be intoxicated by now.

There's a guy standing at the door of this compartment, counting passengers that file by . . . not in a straight line though. He claims he's looking for the one millionth student on the train that has vericose veins. He found that lucky chap. How he proved the clod had vericose veins is beyond me.

The prize — a fur — lined lavatory.

There go the lights again. . .

Now somebody has set my copy on fire . . . hot stuff you know . . . The emergency cord is pulled. That's the next obvious step on the agenda . . . according to Hoyle.

Friends are the greatest hindrance to an eager sports writer. They all have little juicy ditties to tell you about their grand experiences in the city of all Canadians . . . That's the name for Montreal according to chief authority James Laxer (pronounced Lax-ay) . . . He also searches for vericose veins, see.

Bubbles Bellmore is the only guy on the mass excursion, excluding football players, who knows what it is to lose twice by the slightest of margins. Blues lost to Redmen 25-24 and 5-4. Bellmore lost to a slightly-clad femme by the width of a hotel room key and to an engagement party by the length of Mr. Royal.

Bellmore's the only toque-wearer in la belle province who thinks that Mr. Royal lives at Room 2049 of the Mount Royal Hotel . . . By the same token, I suppose, Sergeant York lives at Room 6069 of the Royal York and John Graves Simcoe lives in the cellar at the Lord Simcoe Hotel.

FLUFFY MINDS AND ISRAELI KIBUTZES

The SAC "fluffy-minded" types all have serious stories to tell of the weekend . . . but at least they wait until the train lights go out to bother you . . . No sense disturbing a busy sports writer when the lights are on . . .

Larry (Fistaminator) Ward sacrificed the excursion for some serious book work . . . He might just as well have taken in the sober experiences of the SAC at the McGill student Union . . . As John Roberts tells it, while he spills theological rum on my new pants, the fluffy minds of McGill and T.O. calmly sang the alma maters of the colleges in our sphere . . . equal time you know.

Weekend defended

The McGill weekend was defended, with reservations, by Students' Administrative Council president Doug Ward Tuesday.

"I am not against the idea of students going to Montreal and having a good time," Ward said. "But I would criticize the wasted opportunity of individuals who decided the weekend would be an alcoholic relief from studies rather than an opportunity to enjoy the beauty and challenge of Montreal."

Ward said he doubted that the majority of students acted in a manner detrimental to the university, but added that those who did were acting contrary to the aims of the SAC and the efforts of the French committee.

The reason the SAC organizes the weekend is to provide a cheap opportunity for students to visit "the largest and one of the most interesting cities in Canada," Ward explained.

Last year the SAC made a profit of more than $1,500 on three out-of-town weekends. This figure includes losses incurred on the Queen's and Western trips.

A profit of $435 was budgeted for this year's out-of-town trips, but it is expected the total profit will be about the same as last year.

Ward said there is a need for more trips to Montreal, but on a more serious level. The present McGill weekend falls short because it provides no organization for students who wish to confront themselves with French Canada, he added.

Avoid peace split

By DON SMITH

The possibility of a policy split between the Canadian Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament and the Combined Universities Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament was discounted Tuesday on the eve of a CUCND conference in Montreal.

Peter Boothroyd, executive secretary of the CUCND, said although policy will be a major concern of the conference, there is no indication that the outcome of the debate could lead to a split with the CCND.

A CCND conference two weeks ago was marked by a sharp division of opinion on the basic direction the peace group should take.

One group wanted more emphasis on anti-militarism as the basis of policy, while another favored the present policy of objection to specific issues. A compromise was reached as expressed in the statement: "The CCND is opposed in principle to, and will devote itself to an educational campaign against, a system of military alliances, as being obsolete, and as having to be superseded by general and complete disarmament, a competent world authority, and a higher standard of life and productivity for the developing nations."

Boothroyd said although the same differences in opinion are apparent within the CUCND, "the lines are not as hard drawn."

He emphasized that the university group is free to formulate its own policy, and may come

VCUC plans changes

The Victoria College Union Council Tuesday took a revolutionary step in grappling with the problem of city-student monopoly of activities by recognizing the report of an unofficial investigating committee recommending closer relation of city and resident students.

Larry Ward (IV Vic) called the move "probably one of the most important things done this or any year at Vic."

The report's first recommendation, already implemented, is the setting up of seminars composed of city and resident students. These would remedy the lack of active academic discussion outside classes and encourage dialogue between the two groups.

VCUC President Sandy Burnett (IV Vic) had previously said "there is not enough intellectual hell being raised at Vic." Last night he added there is "little opportunity to get an education by association with fellows."

Two of the "mixed" seminars already set up are studying both a science and a humanities topic.

A committee recommendation of revision in the college's social structure could be implemented by "house groups" of about 250 city and resident students, the report suggested.

Meetings and social events would be centred in the different houses. Overnight accommodation for suburban students attending late functions would be available, said Principal Northrop Frye.

The committee suggested reform in the Wymilwood student union to meet student needs.

CANADA IN CRISIS (5)

Following are two widely divergent views on separatism. Pierre Schneider was a member of the Front de Liberation Quebecois and was recently sentenced to three years in prison for his part in the Westmount bombing that led to the maiming of Sgt.-Maj. Walter Leja. John Cann is a third year Victoria College student in Modern History and Modern Languages.

La Confederation: une moribunde par Pierre Schneider

On me demande d'analyser la présente crise au sein de la Confédération. La plupart d'entre vous semble-t-il, s'inquiètent, se demandent: "Que se passe-t-il au Québec?"

Messieurs, votre inquiétude au sujet de l'avenir de votre pays, le Canada, est bel et bien fondée. Votre chère Confédération commence à s'effondrer. Nous l'attaquerons jusqu'à ce que mort s'ensuive...

"Pourquoi?", me demanderez-vous. Tout simplement parce que notre pays à nous n'est pas le Canada, mais le Québec.

Messieurs, pendant que vous vous inquiétez, que vous jouez sur la défensive, ici tous les étudiants — même les plus tièdes — sont optimistes quant à l'avenir de notre pays: le Québec.

Notre patriotisme insufflé un sang neuf, un dynamisme viril dans tous les domaines de l'activité humaine. Et ce qui s'est fait ici à date n'est qu'un prélude à ce qui viendra dans les années qui vont suivre.

Que se passe-t-il? Il se passe qu'un peuple a décidé de se tenir debout, de prendre en mains sa destinée, son économie, sa politique tant intérieure qu'extérieure.

La Confédération canadienne est entre vos mains — elle l'a toujours été — gardez-la précieusement. Plus que jamais, nous disons NON à la Confédération, NON à l'exploitation de notre peuple! Un conseil: méfiez-vous de cette institution. Nous la ferons sauter!

A ceux d'entre vous que la 'bonne volonté' pousse à rechercher des solutions, à trouver des compromis, je dis qu'on ne pourra parler d'égalité de nos deux peuples qu'après l'Indépendance. Nous ne nous leurrerons plus. Nous savons où nous allons et nous y arriverons.

Messieurs, soyez réalistes: la Confédération n'en a plus pour longtemps. Au lieu de tenter de refaire cette Confédération, préparez-vous à résister à l'assimilation américaine. Et bonne chance!

French should assimilate by John Cann

All this carping on French Canada makes me want toretch. For 200 years the development of this nation as a coherent entity has been stalled by the refusal of the Québécois to assimilate. They have been a festering sliver in the body politic.

The French state that if their demands are not met, Confederation may end. How, I ask? Certainly we Canadians who speak English do not wish to join the Americans and any attempt to secede will surely lead to bloody noses and perhaps a short civil war.

Although I'm in honor French, I believe biculturalism is a phony concept from the word "go". The unique reasons for its remaining buried so long were: (1) predominance of a rural isolated economy in Quebec; (2) the dictatorship of the priests.

I sympathize with Quebec attempts to educate and industrialize. Like any reasonable Canadian I applaud the weakening of the black-robed oligarchy.

But let French-Canadians beware. We will not tolerate their over-stuffed pretensions. We won't have a French and Latin culture universally foisted upon us. We won't allow Lesage to buy out the English and subsidize the Frenchifying of the Quebec economy. We won't permit Levesque to push us around.

We will irresistably assimilate the French-Canadians and we will establish a firm central government at Ottawa and a National Pension Plan.

And if those French-Canadians who refuse to civilize themselves by speaking English do not accept reality, let them remember that our neighbor to the south emerged with a new sense of purpose, a new vitality after her civil war.

Sex listing now on sale

The cheapest, most convenient and most inclusive hustlers' handbook now is on sale at the University Bookstore. It's also called the student directory.

The paperback costs 50 cents — plus two cents tax. It has a listing for every student registered with the university. All details are culled from information given at registration time.

Changes in name, address, phone number or sex since registration will provide the only problems for hustlers. For those choosy about their company, the directory has a male and female classification column.

The grey volume that has done nothing but grow is not entirely without challenge to the hustler. Students' ages are not printed. But year of study is.

Bookstore officials say there is a tax on the book

"because it is not a book." The directory is in the same tax class as calendars and the like, a spokesman explained. The directory, however, is the only exclusively-student sales item that is taxed.

Oh, yes. Hustlers—of either sex—won't have to worry divinity students or seminarians. The celibates are separately listed at the back of the directory.

The staff directory is expected to be in print soon. All copy for it has not yet been received by the university printer.

Varsity needs cameramen

This year The Varsity is bigger and — contrary to certain segments of public opinion — better than ever.

With increased pages comes a need for increased use of photographs, and consequently a need for more photographers.

Several hundred photographers have had their name, prefixed by the traditional "vsp", appear beneath pictures in The Varsity.

Many of these have gone on to become some of the top photographers in Canada. Many others have turned into raving paranoids because their pictures did not always get printed. But they all had fun and were all able to take and have good pictures published.

Developer will be served at a meeting for new photographers in the Varsity office Monday between 1 and 2 p.m.

The winners of the Varsity-Playboy contest who will be taken to dinner by Varsity editors Alan Walker, Steve Barker and Jim Laxer. The three winners are, from the left, Cheryl Kemp, Marilyn Horn and Liz Koch. All are first year Vic students.

Quebec also aids English artists

There is no discrimination favoring French Canadian artists in Quebec's Ministry of Cultural Affairs, culture minister Georges-Emile La palme said at the opening of Hart House art exhibition, Ten Montreal Artists, Monday.

He said art exhibits of both English and French Canadian artists have been abroad on at least two occasions, both being paid for by the Quebec Ministry of Culture.

During the last two years the Ministry's department of arts and letters has provided $2,700,000 for music, publishing and plastic arts, including $85,000 annually for winning entries in literary contests, Mr. Lapalme told about 100 guests.

The Ministry has jurisdiction over all Quebec's museums, several libraries, the French language bureau, the department of archeology, the extra-territorial department and other areas, he said.

Mr. Lapalme said the Quebec ministry is unique in North America. The only other department of this type in the western world is in France, and is headed by Andre Malraux.

Mr. Lapalme was Quebec's Liberal Party leader from 1950 to 1958, Attorney General from 1961 to 1963, and Minister of Culture since 1961.

The exhibition runs in the Hart House gallery until Nov. 24.

News in brief

CUCND (cont.)

to a quite different position from the CCND.

A meeting of the CUCND was held Tuesday to appoint six delegates to the conference in Montreal this weekend. Because of uncertainty as to who could go, eight names were placed on the list in the expectation that two of them would have to back out.

The eight were: Al Levi (IV UC); Barry O'Neil (II UC); Terry Lee (II Vic); Mary Jane Miller (SGS); Matt Cohen (IV UC); Miriam Rewan (I UC); Betty Davis (IV Trin); and Lana Lockyer (III Vic).

Still need more blood

"More blood!" is the cry from blood donor clinics across campus, as the drive moves through its second and last week.

The university drive has collected 1,875 pints to date.

Dentistry students were last week's campus champs, beating their 200 pint objective by nine pints, while Victoria's pulse beat slowed to drop 53 pints behind their goal of 450 in a two-day clinic.

Latest news from the Engineering society is bad. As of Tuesday night, Engineers had bled only 347 pints toward their pledge of 431. Unless engineering hearts pump a little stronger, their flag will return to the Varsity office again.

For the rest of the week the blood drive moves to the smoking room of the Sigmund Samuel Library.

Between 9 and 11 a.m. and 12:30 and 4 p.m., an invitation to bleed is extended to all members of these faculties: Forestry, Knox, Nursing, Pre-Meds, P&OT, SGS, Pharmacy, PHE, Food Science, University College, and New College.

Scramble at SMC

All third and fourth year students and university professors have been invited to an inter-college coffee "scramble" this afternoon at St. Michael's College.

The scramble is hoped to inaugurate a policy on campus of non-provincialism between the colleges, as well as cut the barrier between resident and day students.

SMC will host the social in the Elmsley East common room (just through the Victoria arch) from 2 to 5 p.m.

Conference opens

The third Congres des Affaires Canadiennes opened yesterday at Laval University in Quebec.

The conference is asking "just who are the Nouveaux Quebecois?" and "what, in effect, are the Nouveaux Quebecois to be?"

Three University of Toronto students were appointed by the Students Administrative Council to attend a five-day conference. They are: John Baird (Extc), Charles Beer, (IV UC), and Richard Pove (IV UC), chairman of the French committee.

The main purpose of the conference is to determine the principal trend of thought that will emerge out of the present conflict of new and old in Quebec.

Fifteen speakers are analysing this comparatively 'quiet revolution', attempting to segregate the old from the new, and summarizing the problems at hand. They will then formulate hypotheses to embrace all the changes which are to come about.

Included in the list of lecturers are such prominent Quebecois as Michel Chartrand, vice-president du Parti Socialiste du Quebec; Daniel Johnson, Chef de l'Union Nationale; and Pierre Laporte, Ministre des Affaires municipales.

Treasure Van depleted

The Treasure Van is almost empty. Heavy sales during the week have poured funds into the pockets of the World University Service and have caused considerable restocking of many items.

Sales on Monday totaled $2,200. A new shipment of items was put on display Tuesday, to replenish fast-selling items.

Among the most popular foreign articles at the sale are Peruvian ski accessories and jewellery of all types. African items were also reported popular by a Treasure Van worker.

The Van continues until Friday evening at the drill hall, 119 St. George St. A draw of coupons printed in Monday's Varsity will award an authentic African mask to the door prize winner.

Baha'i Faith

The Religions of the World are One

Last weekend more than 1,500 University of Toronto students travelled to Montreal to participate in the McGill Weekend. This annual weekend is organized by and is an official function of the Students' Administrative Council.

Four aspects of this year's weekend stand out. First, almost all the students attending consumed some amount of alcohol and had a good time.

Second, many students were quite drunk, both on the trains and during their two day stay in Montreal.

Third, while in Montreal many U of T students persisted in insulting the language and culture of French Canadians.

And finally, many students took advantage of a chance to acquaint themselves with French Canada. Even more did not equate having a good time with getting as drunk, and being as loud as possible.

We do not object to students drinking or having a good time, whether they do it as individuals or as a group. We are not advocating abstinence or asceticism.

Nor will we attend to pass any objective judgement on students who wish to get drunk and roam the streets, hotels and restaurants of another city — so long as they do it as individuals and not as representatives of the University of Toronto.

If individual students wish to act in such a manner, within the confines of law, that is their prerogative. When they are part of an official U of T activity it becomes a different matter.

Nor do we wish to pass any moral criticism on an individual student who is critical of French Canada. But we do object to an organized group of U of T students going to Montreal, getting drunk and proceeding, through ignorance, to deliberately insult the French Canadian language and customs.

If they wish to carry out these actions as individuals, although we may deplore them, we respect their rights as individuals to act in such a manner. But when such actions become part of a U of T activity, we protest.

We commend and sympathize with those students who were able to enjoy themselves while acting in a responsible manner.

Unfortunately the impression left by a responsible student as he walked down Dorchester Blvd. is far outweighed by a drunk student weaving down the street in his U of T jacket, shouting, singing and showing no respect for Montrealers.

Unfortunately the effect created by the student who makes some attempt to understand French Canadians cannot overcome the hostility aroused in a hotel lobby by a group of U of T students who make fun of elevator operators, waiters, other guests and their different language.

Because of the actions of a few concerned students in the past, and at present, this university is in a unique position to further French and English Canadian understanding. A greater degree of rapport exists between the U of T and most French speaking universities than, possibly, any other English speaking universities in Canada.

It is therefore doubly inconceivable that the SAC should allow the conditions of the McGill weekend to be continued.

The SAC has this year established a committee to further French and English relations. The mind boggles at the paradox of one Council activity frustrating better relations, while another group works for improvement.

If individual students from this university insist on going to Montreal and behaving in the reprehensible manner they did last weekend, Council should not help perpetuate such behavior with its organizational and administrative facilities.

Lashes Lewis

Bruce Lewis' letter on the Model Parliament in Monday's Varsity compels me to bring the pertinent, undistorted facts to the attention of your readers. If Mr. Lewis had only taken the trouble to ascertain his facts beforehand, he would not have made those groundless accusations or cast doubts on my integrity as the UTDU chairman.

According to the SAC constitution (bylaw 15) the UTDU is in charge of the debating team as well as the Model Parliament. Knowing that my political affiliation would certainly come under scrutiny, I have advocated that the Model Parliament committee be a separate portfolio from UTDU ever since I assumed office. I am glad to say that the SAC rep from OCE, Ian Thompson (who, by the way, is completely apolitical), was appointed by SAC to that post on Oct. 1963. Right up till then I have gone to the extent of not discussing political matters with any member of the executive of any political club and have also refrained from participating in any political activities whatsoever.

The Model Parliament reforms were carried out last Wednesday by the Model Parliament committee. My membership (as UTDU chairman) in that committee is as specified by its constitution, a document drawn up and agreed to by all four parties (the Model Parliament's budget comes under the UTDU chairman's responsibilities). Long before that meeting, I sent a letter to both Thompson (chairman) and Miss Diana Bennett (clerk of the house) informing them of my views on how the Model Parliament should be improved — changes that I have publicly advocated long before I even became a SAC member. At the time I was not even a card-holding PC member. I should also point out that my vote at that committee meeting had no effect whatsoever on the outcome — the decision was by a 4-2 vote.

I regret very much that Model Parliament reform has been made into a political football at this forthcoming Model Parliament election by the Liberal club. The battle is not a question of the "ins" and the "outs" — nobody at this stage of the game can predict which party will win; and it is certainly an insult to the intelligence of our students for the Liberal party to presume so arrogantly that they will form the government even before their platform is seen by the students or to assume that this 40 per cent rule is aimed against them.

I believe that a campus political club is more than a sounding box for their provincial and federal counterparts — it should put the interest of all students before partisan politics.

As far as I am concerned, this coming election will be fought on the value of our platform, and so I hereby challenge the leaders of all the other three parties to debate the issues at each faculty and at each arts college, so that more students will know what the Model Parliament involves. I also challenge Lewis to represent the Liberal club in a public debate at the Hart House tower this coming Friday at 1 p.m. to substantiate his charges that I have not conducted myself properly as the UTDU chairman in improving our model parliament constitution.

Before I conclude, I wish to demand a public apology from Lewis for referring to me as "the Conservative SAC member". I am, as he well knows, on the SAC to represent my faculty — the faculty of Medicine. At no time did I (or will I ever) allow my political affiliation to interfere with my duties as faculty rep.

Blasts Review

Had the curriculum of the Classics department managed to impart the rudiments of clear thinking, the drivel published last Friday under the title "The Pseudo-Scientific Mentality" might never have been written. Had the editor of the Review possessed a modicum of sense it would never have been printed. Since neither of these happy circumstances prevailed, someone must prevent the confused freshman from losing his innocent faith in the university as a centre of learning.

Before riding at the next wicked giant that presents itself before his literary lance Mr. Weinrib as a student of the classics might be persuaded to accept the advice of Cicero: "Nothing is more discreditable than to have assertion and proof precede knowledge and perception." Mr. Weinrib has even less conception of what science is than he does of what the humanities are. He confuses science with technology. He defames it for pretending to be useful, which it never did. He arrogates to the humanities all the supreme intellectual joys and achievements, thus revealing all the completeness of his own ignorance.

Not knowing what science is puts him at some slight disadvantage when it comes to discussing its abuses, but cleverly surmounting this handicap by failing to notice it, he rushes onward, hopping awkwardly from point to point like an ungainly bird making its way across a patch of lily-pads, afraid to stop on any one lest it sink and take him with it and revealing his confusion at every stop.

The article contains hardly a sentence that is at once coherent, meaningful and defensible, but it must be admitted that there are a few incisive strokes. For instance: "Much scientific work is highly theoretical and is justly disregarded by manufacturers of commercial commodities." Perhaps the most eminent example of this is provided by the manufacturers of cigarettes, who refuse to acknowledge the results of scientific investigations into the toxic effects of their products and continue their most reprehensible advertising campaigns. (No doubt smoking is intrinsically useful, and surely Mr. Weinrib, with transcendent insight, has removed the questionable distinction between justice and mendacity.)

Everyone admits that the concepts and methods of science are often abused (by students of the humanities no less than by science undergraduates) and it would be an excellent thing if an informed discussion should point up some of the abuses. In the meantime, it is to be hoped that Mr. Weinrib will climb back onto his Rozi-nante and go home to read some more instructive literature, leaving someone who knows about windmills to set about repairing the damage.

W.A. Whitelaw (IV UC)

Varsity unfair

As an engineering student, I feel your campaign to defame the Engineers has gone unanswered long enough.

You complain that the only time you see Engineers is when they are chained to a cannon and carrying a club: I would like to point out that only about 20% regularly wear white shirts and ties to lectures and that at best only four can be chained to that cannon at once. I suggest that you open your eyes and look around in the J. C. R., Wymilwood or the Buttery and you will see a startling number of Engineers behaving at least as rationally as the other denizens.

You laugh at the ludicrous picture of the Engineer's cannon and the Brute Force Committee, yet, are these any more ludicrous than a certain "Unanglican Affairs Committee" baptizing all and sundry with water sprinkled from a toilet bowl brush or the very fact that the B. F. C. is taken so seriously by your naive fellows? You bewail the drinking and "atrocities" committed by the Engineers yet blindly ignore the antics of sozzled artsmen roaming the streets at all hours and blatantly flaunt the deliberate desecration of the Engineering Society flag to the four winds-full scale wars have been fought for less!

In closing I would like to emphasize the fact that the Engineers are one of the few spirited groups on campus. Granted some few of our number may carry things to extremes but is this not better overall than 19,000 zombies plodding their lambish paths through four years of study? I suggest you think on this.

Vic show overcomes fantastic odds

By ALAN WALKER

You'll never believe this. Tuesday night a thoughtful, sometimes cruel — sometimes beautiful show called Bonaparte's Retreat was staged at Hart House by Victoria College.

Credible so far. But listen: Monday night in the middle of the dress rehearsal the director, who also had a major part in the show, collapsed and was taken to hospital.

The stage manager also left the show at the last minute, under peculiar circumstances, and scenery was still being painted less than an hour before the curtain went up.

Some of the show itself was written a day before performance.

Naturally, there were awkward moments. But the show survived and can only improve during the rest of its run.

Dennis Lee went from (paradise) mushrooms to pickles on the shortest possible notice and took over for ailing John Wilcox as The Rat Man. Combining a natural feeling for dialogue and presentation with some spectacular ad-libbing, both in speeches and actions, Lee masterfully portrayed a man committed to an asylum by a scheming brother.

The slow-moving first couple of scenes begrudgingly introduce Simon Potter (Tom Plaunt) and Madeline Brewster (Betty Trott) as "nice, normal guys" in a world of good marriages, aptitude tests and blood groupings.

Through various machinations, "Potty" (as he is affectionately known by his objectionable fiancée) winds up as the director of the asylum.

There, as Kelly (Jan Ament) explains, the walls aren't really to keep people inside but to keep the "devils" out. "People here are happy and safe," she says. This underlies what writer Randy Howard had said rather self-consciously in a long introduction spoken by "Napoleon Bonaparte" who philosophically implies that the people who think they're Napoleon are not necessarily ready for the Funny Farm.

Miss Ament sings well in her own earthy manner, but I'm sure she could have handled This Might Have Been — a duet with Plaunt in the second act. She chose to mime the part while a female Cyrano de Bergerac trilled beautifully from the wings in a most distracting way.

Bill Peters is a superb actor, and did well with the doctor's part, but the role was beneath him. He tried to stretch but there was nowhere to go.

Patricia Keene as the nymphomaniac was terrifyingly believable (does she really go to Vic?)

Helen Hall's brief appearance as the PT instructor was wildly funny.

Jo Chong's standout voice in her small part of The Weeper was a blessing.

And congrats to the flock of stand-in directors, led by Mike Cross.

The music, by Ed Moskal and Cliff Jones, was unobtrusively complex and rich. The tender melody This Might Have Been was particularly beautiful.

Beefs: Phil Maude's messenger part was funny. But his intrusion into the orchestra at one point, although he has an interesting piano style, has no place in such a show. It's blackout technique and let's leave it to the faculties.

The female chorus was clumsily introduced, to say the least. (Oh God, here they come again.) But at least Howard had the courage to eliminate large choral scenes and choreography, which irrelevant devices have been known to mangle past Vic shows.

Napoleon turns out to be... (gag, er er) I can't give it away. Go and see it.

Confederation: on its deathbed

By PIERRE SCHNEIDER

I have been asked to analyse the current crisis of Confederation. It seems that most of you are worried about, are wondering about, what is happening in Quebec.

Gentlemen, your concern for the future of your country, Canada, is well-founded. Your dear Confederation is beginning to melt away. We will attack it to the death. . . "Why?" you may ask me. Quite simply because our country is not Canada, but Quebec.

Gentlemen, while you express concern defensively, all the students here — even the most lethargic — are optimistic about the future of our country: Quebec.

Our patriotism is kindling a new fire, a virile dynamism in all areas of human activity. And what has happened here to date is only a prelude to what will come in the years to follow.

What is happening? What's happening is that a nation has decided to stand up, to take into its own hands its destiny, its economy, its domestic and foreign policies.

Canadian Confederation is in your hands — it always has been — guard it carefully. More than ever, we say no to Confederation, no to the exploitation of our people! A warning: look out for this institution. We're going to blow it up!

To those of you whose good will drives them to seek solutions, to find compromises, I say that it will never be possible to talk of equality until after independence. We're not kidding ourselves any longer. We know where we're going and we'll get there.

Gentlemen, be realistic: Confederation hasn't long to go. Instead of trying to rebuild this Confederation, get ready to hold off assimilation by the Americans. And good luck to you!

INTERFACULTY ROUNDUP

Four points separate top soccer teams

By AL SCHOENBORN

The mad scramble continues in Group I soccer. Four teams are now within one point of each other at the top of the league. Three of these will make the playoffs.

Meds A and UC I are presently tied on top with seven points in five games.

The doctors edged PHE 1-0 on a goal by Winston MacLean. The Redmen from UC, meanwhile, were held to a scoreless draw by St. Mike's, A, who moved into a third-place tie with Sr. SPS, one point off the pace.

In Division II, Law and Architecture are well out in front with a three-point lead over the nearest contender.

These two clubs met ahead on Monday, and fought to a 1-1 tie, both remaining undefeated as a result. Gord Ness tallied for Law, Al Walker for Architecture.

Earlier Architecture had knocked off Wycliffe 4-0, as Ferdie Wagner and Angelo Delfino each tallied a pair.

FOOTBALL

A narrow 7-6 win over Dentistry has given SPS its first win of the season and new hope for a Mulock Cup playoff berth.

Bob Heath's touchdown and Glen Katsuyama's convert were just enough to offset an unconverted Dents' major by Brad Holmes.

The two teams are now tied in the third and final playoff spot with two points.

Group II standings were tightened as Trinity scored an early touchdown after a UC fumble and held on for a 7-0 win over Redmen.

Bill Stewart got the major while Bob Reid added the convert for Trinity, which has now moved into a third-place tie with UC.

LACROSSE

Meds A pulled a major upset, Monday edging Vic I 5-4, to move back into the thick of the playoff scramble in Group I. Dents, Vic and Meds now each have two points in third place.

Jeff Hurwitz was a standout for the winners, scoring a hat trick. Chris Boak had a pair for the Redmen.

SPS I yesterday took a stranglehold on the lead in Group II, holding off a last-ditch UC rally to gain a 6-5 win.

Jerry McElroy was instrumental in the Engineers' victory with a four-goal performance, while Gene Petroff added two. Al Schoenborn had a pair for the Redmen.

Pharmacy felt the sting of the SPS I attack as it took a 17-2 decision on the chin.

Jerry McElroy was again the main culprit as he hit for five goals, followed by Wayne Archer with four.

In other games, SPS II picked up a pair of wins, 4-1 over I Pre-Meds and 7-1 over SPS III, while I Pre-Meds defaulted to St. Mike's B.

RUGGER

Vic I is still displaying championship form. The Red and Gold have now won all five of their games, their most recent achievement being a 33-0 shellacking of SPS.

Al Major with 13 and Mike Meredith with 12 points were the pick of the winners.

Wayne Wessel accounted for all the points, as PHE A handed Meds B a 5-0 setback.

The Hart House types also defeated Vic II 8-3. Don Arthur and Don Derry had tries for the winners, while Bob Selkirk countered for Vic.

Trinity A, outscored 8-0 in the first half, scored 10 points in the second half to take a close 10-8 decision over Meds A.

Ruggerites take on Toronto Irish

A UTRFC

Syndicated Service

Undeclared Varsity Rugger Blues face their toughest opposition of the season tonight when they tangle with Toronto Irish at Varsity Stadium at 8 p.m.

Irish were the terrors of the Ontario Rugger League this fall, and were just edged out of the Eastern Canadian Championship, 9-6, by Montreal Barbarians Saturday.

As the Irish goal line has been crossed but once this year, Blues' backs will have to be their sharpest ever against the stubborn Irish defence. But Blues can boast the better line-out men in Jim Humphries and Gethin Hughes.

Tonight's match should be all-important for both fifties. While Irish will be out to avenge the 8-5 loss suffered at the hands of the "college kids" a year ago, Blues will be out to prove they are the best side in the province.

Sub-plot of the Varsity-Irish clash will pit Paul (Golden Toe) Wilson against Irish place-kicker Frank Nelson. Last week against Montreal, Nelson booted a 54-yard penalty goal.

Varsity will be without winger Ian Sinclair and prop Bill Nelems, both injured. But Blues won't suffer by the replacements of Rod Sanders and Mike Joy.

A DIGEST OF INTERFACULTY UNDERTAKINGS

Softball

Who says that "team spirit" doesn't pay? Victoria women softballers claimed a 9-3 victory over St. Mike's A on that basis last week.

The spirit-mongers were the underdogs going into the interfaculty softball finals as SMC had defeated them twice, 9-7, and, 18-4, during season's play.

According to the constitution of the Women's Athletic Association only one team sport may be played in the same term. As a consequence, softball participation has fallen down because it has had to contend with the growing popularity of field hockey. This year only two teams from St. Mike's, one from St. Hilda's, and one from Victoria took part. The future looks dim for this sport at Toronto.

Golf

Golfers, duffers and otherwise, did not take part in this year's interfaculty tournament.

Out of the very scanty field, Sheila Lithwick (III PHE) hacked out a winning score.

Considering that the University pays the green fees, it is surprising that more people do not turn up — and I thought Canadians were smart!

Tennis

Brenda Nunns (I Trin), who reached the finals in a furious "bye" competition, outclassed Della Freedhoff (II P&OT) 6-4, 6-3 to capture a rained-out interfaculty tennis championship.

Miss Freedhoff reached the finals by defeating Hildegard Balogh (III SMC).

Field Hockey

PHE IIB and PHE III will contest the field hockey title tomorrow at 1 p.m. at the Stadium.

PHE III, old hands at the game, go into the finals having shut-out all four teams in its league.

Myrna Gittens, captain of the team, contributed much to this record as she highlighted the season's play with a league-leading total of 12 goals.

Swimming

In its typically smooth fashion, PHE won the interfaculty swimming laurels by 37 points to Trinity's 23 and Victoria's 22. SMC, UC, P&T, Dents and Meds placed in that order.

Trinity's Judy Ireland (IV Trin), an intercollegiate diver, claimed the Cochrane Cup as winner of the interfaculty diving. Vic's Diana Crosbie (I Vic) overwhelmed the opposition in synchronized strokes and figures.

PHE claimed its individual champion in speedster Karen Green (III PHE), who was awarded the Ishbel Robertson Cup for gaining the highest score in the meet.

If you feel you have been missing something basketball, ice hockey and bowling are in full swing now.

They are still open for late decision-makers.

Soccer Blues must win to stay in title race

By KATY O'SULLIVAN

Varsity Soccer Blues go into today's game at McMaster with only one thought in mind — they must win.

A defeat for Blues, currently in third place and three points behind first place Western, would put them completely out of the running in the intercollegiate soccer race. A win on the other hand brings them within one point of league-leading Mustangs.

As the playoff picture stands now, Blues must defeat both McMaster and OAVC and Western must lose to McMaster for the soccer cup to remain in Toronto.

This isn't as impossible as it sounds. In the same situation last year with two games left on their schedule, Blues won the championship. They defeated Mac 5-1 and Mac went on to trounce Western 4-1.

Bobby Lewis, hospitalized after Varsity's game with McGill last Saturday, will be out of action for Toronto's two remaining games. Blues will certainly be hampered by the loss of Lewis' playmaking ability, but Coach Ernie Glass has enough bench strength to replace them.

	P	W	L	T	F	A	Pts
Western	7	5	1	1	16	6	11
McMaster	6	4	1	1	14	7	9
Toronto	6	4	2	0	18	9	8

Leighton McCarthy wins squash tournament

Leighton McCarthy (II Trin), a member of Varsity's intercollegiate squash team, won the Toronto and District "C" squash tournament Monday night at the Toronto Tennis Club.

McCarthy defeated Bob Mason of Toronto Cricket, Skating and Curling Club in the final, 16-14, 10-15, 15-6, 15-7.

The tournament started with 50 players entered.

Future looks bright for Kane's charges as Hockey Blues start training

By GORDON BELLMORE

Varsity hockey mentor Joe Kane has only had a few days to look over his charges but already the future looks bright for the 1963-64 intercollegiate season.

Several bright prospects have turned out for practices at Varsity Arena, and with a solid core of holdovers to build around, Blues should be able to shore up the weaknesses of last season. The ice crew finished second to Laval Rouge et Or in the Eastern Division last season.

Blues' biggest drawback was their defence, or lack of it to be precise. Despite continuous shuffling of players they never completely solved the problem.

This year, Blues should have as good, or better, a defence than any team in the college loop. The main reason is the return of Ian Sinclair, the best defenceman in the league.

When Varsity last won the Queen's Cup two seasons back, Sinclair was voted the most valuable player on the team. Last year he was a mainstay for MacMaster Marlins' championship squad while taking post-graduate work in Physical Education at Mac.

Sinclair (not to be confused with the rugby player of the same name) is now at Ontario College of Education. Joining him on the blue line are Stu McNeil, the former Detroit Red Wing who was an all-star in 1962-63, and Pete Speyer and Bob Awrey, also holdovers.

Blues have also added rookie Bob Hamilton, who played with Hamilton's Memorial Cup Dominion Junior champions in 1961-62.

Brian Bellmore and Wayne Antoniazzi are the only defencemen no longer with the club.

On the forward lines, the current situation is a little more complicated. Four players, Sonny Osborne, Jesse Weller, Gord Cunningham and Barry Rowland are gone from last season's team and there will be a juggling of players to find effective for ward-line combinations.

Also, Blues have to find temporary replacements for scoring stars Steve Monteith and Ward Passi, who are recovering from leg injuries suffered while playing inter-faculty football. Passi started light skating this week, Monteith is still sidelined indefinitely.

Kane's problems are forwards. John Gilfillan (McGill) and Butch McGee (Waterloo-Lutheran) have intercollegiate experience. Austin MacKay (Marlboros), Gary Aitken (Peterborough) and Don Fuller (Brampton) have all played Junior "A" hockey. And Hank Monteith, brother of Steve Monteith, played junior hockey at Stratford.

The intercollegiate hockey league has been revamped this season. The four Eastern Division teams of last year, Varsity, Montreal, Laval and McGill, will merge with McMaster, Waterloo and Queen's of the Western Division to form one seven-team unit. The teams play home-and-home series with each other.

Blues' first league encounter is not until Dec. 6 at McGill but several exhibition contests are lined up. The first one, just a mere scrimmage, is with Marlboros this Friday at Varsity Arena, starting at 5:30 p.m.

IAN SINCLAIR
Welcomed addition for puck crew

GAELS ON WAY TO UNDEFEATED SEASON

Jim Young back to 1962 form

By Shel Krakofsky
Associate Sports Editor

QUICK KICKS: Yates Cup winners, Queen's Golden Gaels, invade Toronto Saturday and try to swap up an undefeated season. Blues' chances of stopping Golden Gaels will be difficult with the return to top form of Queen's all-star fullback Jim Young.

In Queen's 51-9 shellacking of Western Saturday, Young caught touchdown passes from quarterback Cal Connor of 62 and 31 yards, converted all seven touchdowns, quick kicked for 42 yards and carried the ball for an eight-yard average. He also played defence and intercepted two passes.

Offensive end and defensive tackle Bill Jackson will undergo surgery for torn knee ligaments suffered in Saturday's loss to McGill. He is definitely out for Blues' Atlantic Bowl game against St. Francis Xavier November 23 at Halifax.

Offensive tackle and defensive end Jim Fisher, who is sporting crutches for a chipped bone in his ankle, hopes to be back for the Atlantic Bowl.

Halfback Mike Kelly, who has missed Varsity's last two games with a badly sprained ankle, is a doubtful starter for Saturday's game as is lineman Terry Bates with a bad knee. Offensive tackle Jeff Drozdow has a bad hip but is expected to play.

With the loss of quarterback Glen St. John, who suffered a separated shoulder against Varsity Saturday, McGill coach Bill Bewley is calling up Skippy Kerner from McGill's Intermediate Indians. Kerner has played two years with Indians and is reported to be smaller than Western's 148-pound q.b. Ted Miller.

Former Varsity football coach Bob Masterson, who coached Blues to three intercollegiate championships between 1948 and 1955, is in town this week visiting old friends. Masterson attended Blues' practice last night. He is currently a free-lance writer in New York and does public relations work for the New York Giants football club.

CHEERLEADERS BEWARE

If you see two hulks of brawn limping along the sidelines of an interfaculty football game accompanied by a smiling Englishman wearing a golden shoe, you can be sure they're not watching the game. Injured footballers Bill (Moose) Jackson and Jim Fisher and rugby star Paul Wilson are selecting an all-star interfaculty team made up of cheerleaders from the various squads.

Queen's to meet Alberta in first "Golden Bowl"

Canadian college football will get some indication of which intercollegiate team is the best in Canada.

It was announced yesterday in Edmonton and Kingston simultaneously that Queen's Golden Gaels will play University of Alberta Golden Bears at Edmonton, Saturday, Nov. 16.

Gaels won the Senior Intercollegiate League (OQAA) championship last Saturday by posting their fifth consecutive victory. Golden Bears clinched the Western Intercollegiate title last Saturday with their sixth win without a loss.

Bears have completed their regular schedule while Gaels have one remaining league game, against Varsity Blues Saturday at Varsity Stadium.

The inter-conference game between Gaels and Bears is being billed as the "Golden Bowl", but not as a national college championship. It is only an exhibition game, arranged privately between U of A and Queen's with no official sanction from the Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Union.

The CIAU had previously planned to stage at least two inter-conference bowl games this year but the proposal was postponed for at least two years because of lack of funds. Currently, the Atlantic Bowl, to be played at Halifax, Nov. 23 between Varsity Blues, the defending champions, and St. Francis Xavier X-Men, is the only other bowl game in Canada.

Although there had been no advanced announcement of the Golden Bowl, arrangements were made between U of A and Queen's, contingent on both teams winning their league championships.

Although the game is not for the Canadian college title, the Senior Intercollegiate and the Western leagues are regarded as the best in the country and the winner of the Golden Bowl will unofficially be the Canadian champion.

Bob Lampard, chairman of the U of A promotion committee, said 35 players, coaches and officials from Queen's will be flown to Edmonton Nov. 15 for the game. He added that arrangements had been started for half-time entertainment, a beauty queen contest, campus dance and banquet.

Primary financing will come from ticket sales but full details were not announced.

The final major obstacle was overcome Monday when Queen's decided to accept the offer from Alberta. Queen's Athletic Board of Control and the administration agreed Gaels had earned the trip.

Only a few minor details remain to be worked out. However, it was agreed the game will be cancelled in the event of bad weather.

The last time teams from these two conferences met was in 1959 when Western Mustangs defeated University of British Columbia 34-0 at Varsity Stadium.

FOR NEW ZEALAND MEETS

Track Twins decline

Varsity track star Bruce Kidd and former U of T teammate Bill Crothers have declined an invitation to compete in several New Zealand track meets next February. The invitation was announced Tuesday night by the New Zealand Amateur Athletic Association in Wellington.

According to Varsity coach Fred Foot, the tour would not fit into Kidd and Crothers' preparation plans for the upcoming Olympics.

"The travel involved, the shortness of the tour (two weeks), and the number of meets (four) rule it out of the question," said Foot. "But we hope they'll ask us again next year—after Tokyo," he added.

The proposed meets would have pitted U.S. 880-yard champion Crothers against world record-holder for that distance Peter Snell, and British Empire Games six-mile champ Kidd against 10-mile world record holder Bill Baillie.

Caput suspends student for stealing books

An undergraduate student has been suspended for one year by a Caput decision after he was found stealing "several" books from the Sigmund Samuel library.

The student, whose name, year and course was not released by authorities at Simcoe Hall, appeared before the Caput in September. He admitted stealing "several" books, officials told The Varsity Thursday.

Registrar Robin Ross said there had been few cases of heavy stealing before, and that such cases rarely came before the Caput. The Caput's power to discipline students for library infractions is fairly new, Chief Librarian Robert Blackburn told a Varsity reporter two weeks ago.

A report by Mr. Blackburn to the Canadian University Press last year indicated that a mathematics student was being sought by the library for "creating greater havoc in mathematics journals" than a medical student had done to medical journals earlier.

The medical student in question paid the library more than $1,000 for replacing mutilated medical journals.

Demand resignation of Ryerson editor

The editor of The Ryersonian has been asked to resign.

A petition signed by 750 students of Ryerson Institute of Technology asked Wednesday that Editor Ray Biggart, a third-year journalism student, resign.

The petition was started circulating by Gregory Sass, a University of Buffalo graduate now studying at Ryerson, after The Ryersonian published a photo-story on sex magazines.

"Friday's paper was tasteless and inconsiderate," Sass charged. "If it got back to the minister of education, the Ryersonian staff as well as the publications committee and the school administration would be in trouble."

Sass will present the petition to the publications committee next week and will ask for Biggart's resignation if the committee refuses to establish a permanent policy.

Sass accused the staff of "cliquishness," ignoring 90 per cent of student news, getting news from off-campus, and not criticizing the administration.

Biggart said a letter of complaint from Sass, which was not printed, was pointless and redundant.

Ryerson Director of Journalism E. U. Schrader, when asked by The Varsity last night to comment, said: "I think the editor of a newspaper must be independent so he can shape the kind of newspaper he thinks the campus should have."

400 pounds of mercury stolen

About $2,000 worth of mercury was stolen in six thefts from the Lash Miller building before the fall term began, the department of information told the Varsity Thursday.

The mercury, weighing a total of 400 pounds, was stolen before the new west-campus chemistry building was finished and open to students. The heavy element was stored in bottles.

A $500 automatic balance was also pilfered. Authorities said there was much other valuable equipment in the building at the time that was not touched.

The thefts were believed to have begun in the summer. City police kept the case quiet, hoping the thieves might be caught returning to the scene.

Police said no trace of the mercury has been discovered in the usual disposal channels.

Absurd life makes great literature

Serious literature necessarily presents a picture of the world that is both phantasmagorical and unreasonable, Professor Clifford Leech of University College said Thursday night.

During the first lecture in this year's current series, "When Writing Becomes Absurd," he stressed that literature becomes great when the writer consciously realizes that life, and literature, must be absurd.

"Great literature does, on occasion, make non-paradoxical assertions of good," he said. "These virtues of common sense and rationality do not impose themselves upon society."

"The modern playwrights of the absurd are simply exposing the non-sequiturs of human life," he said. "We laugh because we realize that these plays are a factual representation of absurd reality."

He added that most human thinking and behavior are necessarily irrational. "Common sense is a myth."

said, "but they are frail and

Professor Leech stressed that not only modern writers make use of the absurd. "The writings of Shakespeare, Marlowe, Pope and many others throughout literary history have used this technique," he said. "Affirmation and dubiety exist together in much of their best work."

He added that many writers did so unconsciously. "The writer who possesses creative gifts owns something of which he is not fully master. He has little choice but to acquiesce."

A doctor's image is not a happy one, doctor tells debate

The Canadian medical profession's image is "an abstraction," a Hart House discussion was told Thursday night.

Dr. J. Godden of the Canadian Medical Association Journal said a doctor's image has "not quite the aura of beauty about it that it once had."

The problem, he said, is one of public relations.

Leonard Bertin, medical writer for the Toronto Daily Star, said there are two types of people — those who have their own doctors and who form their opinions of all doctors on the basis of the one they know; and those who have no doctor and seem to have a bad image of the medical profession.

Sidney Katz, of Maclean's Magazine, said the idea that journalists determine doctors' image is "pure nonsense and rubbish."

June Callwood, freelance writer, disagreed and said the communication industry is the chief formulator of the public image of the medical profession.

"You say you'll get me a part in a REAL movie?" asks Skule Nite dancer perkily of panting Varsity Staff Photographer Tom Gallo lying on floor.

U of T CUCND will present own resolutions

The Toronto branch of the Combined Universities Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament will present its own resolutions to the CUCND federal conference in Montreal this weekend.

Rather than support the draft policy statement drawn up by the Canadian Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament at its conference two weeks ago, the group will offer 20 resolutions drafted by its own policy committee.

The Toronto group differs with the CCND in that the former feels there is no immediate need to withdraw from the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The resolutions call for such measures as a wider test ban agreement, nuclear-free zones, strengthening of the United Nations, Canadian withdrawal of nuclear weapons control and a Canadian Peace Corps.

Also included is a proposal that the Canadian government assist universities in establishing "interdepartmental majors in peace studies."

Coffee 'scramble' eases barriers between groups

A coffee social at St. Michael's College Wednesday may have been the first step in the war against the ageless charge of provincialism among the colleges at the University of Toronto.

An estimated 1,000 third- and fourth-year students from across the campus visited the Elmesley East common room from 3 to 5 p.m. Many professors and several college principals also stopped by.

"It was very successful," said Mary McDougall (III SMC), an organizer of the "scramble."

The idea for the inter-college scramble arose from what Miss McDougall called "a widespread sense of provincialism, especially at SMC." Ann Scrand (III SMC), foreign affairs minister of the SMC students' administrative council, and Barb Walsh (III SMC) joined Miss McDougall in organizing the scramble and inviting about 200 professors.

No escape from nuclear weapons: theologian

Nuclear weapons pose a threat from which there is no escape, said Dr. Paul Deats, of Boston University

School of Theology, Thursday.

Dr. Deats was debating with Professor William Fennell of Emmanuel College in the fifth lecture of the Arms and the Man lecture series at Trinity College.

Dr. Deats felt that nations should get out of the arms race and try to provide some other framework for settling their differences. "Weapons tend to dictate policy," he said.

Professor Fennell, who ceased to be a pacifist during the Second World War, wondered whether a Christian could fulfil his responsibility through pacifism or non-pacifism.

Later he disagreed with Dr. Deats by saying that what has assured peace is the nuclear deterrent. "There is more risk of war without nuclear weapons", he said.

Red Cross blood drive ends today

Bloody doings are still the order of the day across campus as the blood drive comes to a close today.

As of Thursday, 2,445 pints have been collected across campus.

The Engineering Society enters the field with 387 pints collected toward its 431-pint goal. Saint Michael's College comes in close behind with 349 pints.

Victoria College has so far been the largest contributors with their 413 pints already in Red Cross clinics in the city.

Miss Elma Perrin, public relations supervisor, said she expects a big day for Friday.

Blood clinics will operate today in the Sigmund Samuel smoking room for Forestry,
Knox, Nursing, Pre-Meds,
P&OT, Grad Studies, Pharmacy, PHE, UC, U of T Press,
New College, Food and Science; and in the Red Cross Clinic at 67 College St., where everyone is welcome.

Bissell to conduct service on Remembrance Day

University of Toronto
President Claude Bissell will conduct Monday's service of remembrance at Soldiers' Tower.

University classes will be withdrawn from 10 a.m. to noon to enable all students to attend the short service.

Sentries will take their posts at the tower and adjoining memorial tablets at 10:15 a.m. Army, navy and air force units from the university will assemble on the front campus and march to the tower by 10:30.

The faculty procession will form at Simcoe Hall, or Hart House in case of rain.

The service will consist of a march-past of units, placing of wreaths by colleges and alumni, and a few verses of

"O God Our Help in Ages Past."

A two-minute silence at 10:58 will end the service, the first school-day observance in the past three years.

The service has been an annual event since 1921, when the university alumni financed the building of the tower at a cost of $300,000.

The pledge class of Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity will be selling poppies all day today, and before and after tomorrow's football game.

Plan to revamp museum, U of T relations: Bissell

Plans are underway to revamp the relationship of the Royal Ontario Museum with the rest of the University of Toronto, President Claude Bissell told senior staff members of the museum in an informal address Wednesday.

By the Royal Ontario Museum Act of 1947, the university has complete authority over the museum and its operations. Dr. Bissell said the museum's dual role is to train university scholars to be the museum staff of the future and to make declaration, by its impressive building, of a people's faith in cultural and educational values.

Dr. Bissell expressed his feeling that the university is responsible for ensuring that the public appeal of the museum is firmly based on a strong scholarly and academic foundation.

"The public function of the museum and the influence of university scholarship cannot be destroyed," he said.

He said the museum curators, because of their dual responsibilities, would not come under the supervision of heads of corresponding departments, and that curatorial positions would be considered as equivalent to professorial positions.

More recognition should be given to the to the key roles of the museum's 18 curators, the president said.

Dr. Bissell said proposals to increase cooperation between the staffs of academic departments and the museum were being considered. The director of the museum would be a member, ex officio, of the Senate of the university, the Council of the Faculty of Arts and Science, and the Council of the School of Graduate Studies.

All curatorial staff members cross-appointed to university departments could have representation on the and Science or other faculty councils on the same basis as other members of the university staff.

Lewis accepts Tory's challenge for debate

Progressive Conservative parliamentary leader Richard Tan (III Meds) has challenged campus Liberal Bruce Lewis (II UC) to a public debate today at 1 p.m. in front of Soldiers' Tower.

Tan made the challenge following an attack by Lewis in The Varsity recently accusing Tan of conflict of interest.

Said Lewis Thursday: "In attacking me, Tan is attempting to make political capital out of the issue of model parliamentary reform. And I cannot debate as a representative of the Liberal party, holding no office in it. However I will be glad to debate with him as a private citizen at any time.

"I do not apologize. I think the SAC should debate the issue of Model Parliament reform and end these rumors of political power plays."

In an unprecedented display of concern for The Varsity, the Brute Force Committee, led by Prof. Archibald Von Heinrich-Schmidt, Wednesday tied down the SAC building which, they claimed, was in imminent danger of floating away (because of our buoyant editorial policy).

CUSO applications

Applications for a one year stint in the Caribbeans or a two year stint in Asia or Africa are now being accepted by Canadian University Service Overseas (CUSO). An information meeting, to which everyone is invited will be held Saturday at 10 a.m. in the Music Room at Hart House. The topic will be Africa, and Prof. George Dovey of York University will speak. Two African students will answer questions. Everyone is welcome to the meeting.

the book thieves

A student at this university has been suspended by the Coput for stealing books from the library. It was reported that the decision to bring the student before the university's supreme disciplinary body was an unusually rare action.

Unfortunately the fact that students steal books from the library is not as rare — in fact, it tends to be a rather commonplace student activity.

The suspended student only happened to get caught. On the basis of our theory of deterrent justice, he was punished. But hundreds of other students go unpunished as they build up their private libraries with the common property of other students.

There are several moral and pragmatic reasons why students should not steal books. We do not intend to dwell on these arguments, because if they have had no effect in the past, they certainly will have little effect now.

Our only wish is that every student who has stolen books in his possession feels a pang of guilt whenever he passes the library.

We hope he feels like a real heel every time he stands in line for 20 minutes to get a book from the library.

We hope he hates himself just a little bit more every time he uses or sees the books he has stolen.

And we hope he eventually can be honest enough with himself to drop the stolen property in the book slot at the library.

cucnd policy

This weekend the Combined Universities Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament meets in Montreal where, among other things, it will attempt to formulate a broad policy for future actions.

There is a group within the CUCND which hopes to make the organization more than a body of protest. Some members of the peace group have seen the need for a student organization that would provide positive ideas and action on other important issues of our time.

Last week this paper expressed its belief that the political leaders of this country had failed the people, particularly young persons. But the politicians are not the only ones who are out of touch with the times.

The youth of this country has also been stranded by many of the other institutions which formerly provided them with a sense of direction.

The religious groups have failed, to a large degree, to live up to the demands of the time. The universities are reluctant to serve as more than an educational marketplace.

If the CUCND can come up with a dynamic policy which will allow it to tackle the real issues, it will serve as a valuable apolitical force within our society.

If it rejects the opportunity, the CUCND will be taking the same inadequate course too many other groups have followed.

Where have all the ghouls gone?

By JIM LAXER

Varsity Features Editor

A series of investigations in and around Toronto cemeteries last week bore out the contention that death and burial, habitual preoccupations of days of yore, appear to have passed tranquilly into the hands of real estate sharks.

Dismal to record, the grave-robbes, ghouls and apparitions of traditional times have vanished seemingly without trace from the local scene.

It was with excitement that we queried the officials of a popular suburban burial ground. Our intentions submitted to cursory examination in the outer office, we entered the sanctum of a circumspect interment mogul. A short, stocky, individual endowed with curly black hair, a deeply-lined forehead and a noticeably pale complexion rose to greet us. His fingernails had a decidedly green tint about them.

In a low and dull voice, he proceeded to outline the affairs of the cemetery. We were dismayed to discover that the sub-surface tenants of his domain were better cared for than many active Toronto residents.

We now ventured, in hushed and somewhat embarrassed tones, to inquire into any unusual and ghoulish happenings that might have occurred of late about the grounds. A flush of color and the first traces of life were evident in our host's stern reply.

"Ghouls? What are you talking about? Ghouls? This is a respectable cemetery."

He waved us from his office with a whisk of his green fingernails. Aware for the first time that we were representatives of a bygone era, we slinked off the premises.

Next we approached an ancient grocery store situated on a long narrow street running parallel to the west wall of a downtown cemetery. The storekeeper stood, his large stomach nestling inside the top of a pair of suspender-held trousers; a small bowler hat rested delicately on the centre of his head.

"No doubt, you are apprehensive about being so close to the cemetery?" we ventured.

A smile crept from the corners of his mouth, growing outwards until it had enveloped his entire face. He wheezed, guffawed, lifted his hat, and regarded us as one might gaze at a lunatic ape.

"Well, about 30 years ago, there was an old lady that wouldn't walk on the cemetery side of the street, but nowadays —"

It was obvious; no one was superstitious, no one even cared. The ghastly, chilling deeds of a midnight burial ground were gone forever — relegated to a tiny corner of the writings of Edgar Allan Poe.

Progress with its neon-bright smile had triumphed even here — cleanliness and good business were the watchwords where once had reigned horror and superstition.

Our final visit to the steps of a home directly beside a local cemetery provided a graphic example of the new attitude. When asked if he was bothered by the proximity of the graveyard, the owner answered: "Oh, no, we find it quite convenient. If someone dies here, we'll just dig down and push him under the fence."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

CANN CANNED

John Cann, the writer of "French Should Assimilate", (if I may borrow a phrase of his) makes me want toretch. If the aim of liberal education is to give one a broad outlook on life, it has failed miserably with this unhappy individual.

In the first place, it is nothing short of absurd to dream of a civil war, should Quebec decide to separate. The French-Canadian nation, which is centred in Quebec, has the right to take whatever steps it feels necessary to ensure that French-Canadians will be "maitres chez eux" and Canada as a subscriber to the UN charter has expressed support for the principle of self-determination.

Cann's assertion that French-Canadians would civilize themselves, "by speaking English", is simply blatant racism. Moreover, such a statement illustrates his total ignorance of the vibrant culture in Quebec. Where is English Canada's "Theatre du Nouveau Monde", a company which presents top-notch drama in both of Canada's official languages?

It is particularly lamentable to have such views expressed by one who has some familiarity with the French language. Apart from the obvious political considerations involved, anyone who has any acquaintance with French should realize that it is highly desirable for an English speaking person to know a language which is so beautiful and possesses such a rich literature.

Apparently, the only thing Cann has assimilated is the traditional pompous attitude of the average member of the majority. I particularly resent his use of the word "we" in such asinine statements as "We will irresistibly assimilate the French-Canadians." I presume that "we" refers to all English-Canadians. As an English-Canadian I wish to have no part in Cann's all-inclusive "we".

Finally, the closing assertion of this would-be saviour of our country as to the merits of civil war points out clearly the basic problem. Not only is Cann ignorant; he is stupid. Were he alone in his ideas, he would merely be something to laugh at. The tragedy of English Canada is that so many people here agree with him.

CANNED AGAIN

Mr. John Cann's rather rude article on French-Canada serves only to point out Varsity's willingness to air both sides of the question. Otherwise, Mr. Cann wastes part of your valuable front page.

Mr. Cann effectively overlooks the realities of the situation in his article. What he will not "tolerate", "allow", or "permit" is exactly what is taking place in Quebec. The powers that be in Ottawa are not likely to stand against Quebec's increased autonomy as a Province, although they will doubtlessly balk at full separatism. Hysterical mumbblings about civil wars most definitely have no place in the discussion. French Canada is prepared to try all other means first and if Mr. Cann thinks that a people subdued by military might (if Canada has any military might) will suddenly become English, his modern history course is not serving him very well.

CANNED ONCE MORE

As a pure bred Anglo-Saxon of traditional stuffiness, I feel free to remark that John Cann's ignorance ("French must assimilate", Nov. 6) appears to be as invincible as his prejudices. However, I realize that I have been soiled by my friendships with French-Canadians, sub-human though they naturally are; furthermore, the black-robed oligarchy at St. Michael's has brainwashed us all beyond hope of redemption. I therefore grovel to assert that, in my experience and observation, French-speaking Canadians have a creativity and an inclusive consciousness and mentality which places them at the forefront of truly Canadian civilization.

Defensive Canadianism is doomed to failure. Culture and identity are positive expressions. English Canada is perpetually reacting against Finally, Mr. Cann's use of the term "assimilate" makes me "want toretch." As an English Quebecer I admire and value French culture and friends. French Canada does not want to assimilate the rest of Canada, only to have a fair and truly equal opportunity. Mr. Cann's efforts to implement Lord Durham's hundred and thirty year old report serve clearly to illustrate that he is not coping with the present problem.

P. Brigg, (1 M.A.)

external political, cultural, and economic influences — none of it desirable — from the United States for the most part. In all of these fields French Canada is finding solutions which the country as a whole can learn from — and one of the first lessons we should learn is French. The answer to both our problems lies in our acceptance of each other.

CUCND

Mary Jane Miller, a graduate student in English and a member of the CUCND, wrote this probing analysis of the student peace movement. She provides a timely discussion of the changing concept in CUCND policy, because this weekend the CUCND meets in Montreal to work out an overall policy.

VSP Czarniecki

Shown above is one of the gargoyles which are presently being carved on the new University College library. These gargoyles represent various persons connected with the college.

The movement calls itself the Combined Universities Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament. It is, in fact, a loosely woven organization of Canadian Universities dominated by Toronto, Montreal and other eastern branches, linked to British Columbia by scattered pockets at university centres in the Prairies and having no Atlantic wall of any strength. Since both professors and students support it, the CUCND can claim to be a product of the whole university.

It is, most definitely, a campaign, even a war, against certain fortified strongholds of public opinion, which is commanded by a highly formalized paper structure composed of highly informal individuals.

It uses every weapon from infiltration (e.g. the new cell at Massey College) and commando raids (literature appearing in strategic places) to full-scale frontal assaults on Parliament Hill using five mega-signature petitions and constant lobbying. The war has escalated from the immediate military target of nuclear disarmament to the whole civilian front of worldwide peace.

In Canada, there are many guerrilla organizations which could be classified as peace movements. Asked whether a single united underground would not be more effective the CUCND leaders give the same replies which covenanters and the dissidents give to ecumenical movements. An outpost is provided for every individual need. In the peace spectrum the CUCND holds the middle range. The blue wing conservative organizations include The United Nations Organization, The World Federalists, and the Voice of Women. The infrared is anchored by the Moscow-centered Congress for Peace. In this perspective, the CUCND at present, is moderation personified. Its position on nuclear arms is in fact identical with John Diefenbaker's.

Summarized, their statement of purpose advocates world government, freedom, social justice, multilateral disarmament, no nuclear testing by anybody and categorical rejection of nuclear weapons for Canadian forces.

Whence then came the CUCND image of shifty-eyed bearded Trotskyites, dreamy-eyed enthusiasts, free-love, long-haired girls and trouble-or boys? The clichés were once partly true. The CUCND in the first mushroom flush of enthusiasm attracted many a swinging nonconformist who needed to trumpet his personality who nearly always provoked extreme reactions. Finally the CUCND, like other ban-the-bomb groups relied heavily at first on graphic means of portraying the horrors of nuclear war.

In aims, method and organization the CUCND has left much of this behind. Seminars, letters to MPs, films, silent vigils, meagre meals have replaced the noise and placard waving. Books, pamphlets and speakers offering analysis of, and even alternatives to the threat of war have replaced blown-up photographs of malformed babies and mutilated adults. "Ban the Bomb" simply does not sum up the CUCND any longer.

Mr. Roussopoulos has given way to a businesslike organizational hierarchy. The casual improvisation of earlier days has become the precedent for an appointed executive secretariat with defined responsibilities. The new look is most evident in the provisional draft of new policy now being thoroughly debated in every branch. It contains a much more radical point of view than any political or non-aligned group in Canada has yet adopted.

rebellion under somebody's unpopular banner. Today's Tory orthodoxy is yesterday's heresy. Peace movements the world over claim just credit for creating a climate of opinion which could win a partial nuclear test-ban treaty. Marches, vigils, petitions, even civil disobedience, have been made perfectly respectable means of protest by the peace-makers in the South. The founder of the CUCND, Dimitrios Roussopoulos, is a compelling and flamboyant

THREE DOORWAYS TO A REWARDING FUTURE

Here are three attractive plans that cater for the varying circumstances of young men interested in a career as a commissioned officer in the Canadian Army:

1 THE REGULAR OFFICER TRAINING PLAN — This is a tri-service plan under which high school graduates receive advanced education and leadership training at one of the Canadian Services Colleges or at a university to become officers in the Royal Canadian Navy, the Canadian Army or the Royal Canadian Air Force.

2 THE CANADIAN OFFICERS TRAINING CORPS — University undergraduates may obtain a commission by training during their spare time and summer holidays. They are paid for actual training time and, after graduation, may choose either full-time service in the Regular Army or part-time service in the Canadian Army Militia.

3 MEDICAL AND DENTAL SUBSIDIZATION PLANS — These are tri-service plans under which university students in medicine or dentistry can be subsidized during their course and become commissioned medical or dental officers in the Canadian Armed Forces after graduating and obtaining their licence to practice.

You may obtain full information on any of these plans from the local Army Recruiting Station listed in your telephone book.

The CUCND — more than peace

If it can win general acceptance from the membership, the new policy may cause the CUCND to progress from its comparatively conservative methods back to more vocal forms of protest, possibly to civil disobedience. If this is the word which issues from the wilderness the CUCND will no longer be able to serve as an umbrella for all shades of opinion.

Much of policy is based on the principle, intellectually acceptable to most people but emotionally unreal, that a nuclear war would end all life on this planet. The CUCND also points out that military build-ups have not contained communism on any frontier; and that the demands of military security are seriously threatening the freedom of the individual.

Finally the CUCND maintains that to admit the concept of overkill, to encourage Canadian research in biological warfare, indicates that Canada now recognizes no moral limits to warfare. All is permissible in the struggle for the survival of an ideology. Yet the political fact of the 1960s is that there are not two ideologies dividing the world but many.

When the leaders curse war

The mobilization order is already written out.

It is the basic contention of the CUCND that Canada could provide initiatives to peace that could encourage the uncommitted third-power bloc. The solutions proposed to the problems of peace, now under discussion through out the movement are these:

— Recognize the UN as the sole agent for world security and place all Canadian forces at its disposal;

— Increase Canadian aid to newly developing nations to a larger percentage of the Gross National Product (possibly two per cent);

— Devote money and research now dedicated to our security to finding means of controlled, disarmament;

— Withdraw from all military alliances;

— Give up all nuclear and biological weapons and turn over the DEW line to the UN;

— Refrain from all measures of civil defence since civil defence encourages the illusion that it is possible to survive an all-out nuclear attack.

In these concrete suggestions the CUCND has realized that distilled horror is not enough. Half-formed protests against nuclear weapons tend to back into the subconscious. The new proposed draft recognizes the arms race and its threat as a symptom and not a disease.

Peace movements in every country are turning from outraged negative protests (which can eventually lose members as well as the public) to examination, diagnosis; and attempted cure for the economic and social as well as political causes of the cold war.

Though this vision of the CUCND policy is essentially a non-aligned, neutralist and nationalistic document, its eventual goal is the submergence of nationalism in a world government devoted to achieving and keeping the peace.

In the past the CUCND has been linked in the public mind with the New Democratic Party. At present the Student Christian Movement is closely associated with it in aims and personnel. Should the new policy be adopted its membership may be appreciably reduced. However, one member of the executive predicted that the policy statement could attract vital radicals who would provide needed initiative and energy.

To my relief I found no fanatics in the ranks. There is a definite solid nucleus of people dedicated to peace, some of whom have given full-time attention, seven days a week to the campaign. All are students or graduates.

Preoccupation with grave issues involving the life or death of a civilization has bred two complementary defences — detached humor lapsing into cynicism, and a carefully cultivated business-like stance which hides the pervading sense of urgency.

There is no dearth of ability in the executive. In four years the movement has established branches in most major universities in Canada, publishes with the CUCND a newspaper Sanity and a frankly intellectual magazine Our Generation against Nuclear War. It has received national publicity and has established a network of communications over the country.

Its specific area of the community, the university, should be fallow ground. Universities should provide young adults in a crisis of ideas and values, concerned, questioning ready for commitment to causes, less self-conscious and more ready to listen. Yet the CUCND is a small group among many groups. Why?

You, who shall emerge from the flood
In which we are sinking, Think —

Some of the problems are those besetting all Canadian university groups; distance, finances, organizational structure and the constant turnover of students. On the national level, publications, conferences and a full-time appointed executive secretary may begin to bridge the gaps. Though I am assured that there are plenty of resources on which to call, the Campaign is $650 in debt. The fiscal attitude of the movement is not so much irresponsible as serenely indifferent.

Nationally, the secretariat is organized into a largely autonomous executive body appointed by a chairman elected by the national conference. Since Toronto now is national headquarters, the secretariat has robbed the Toronto branch of its most able and experienced members. On both levels the democratic processes, or more simply the active participation of the membership has been minimal. The early "do-it-yourself" attitude has been literally perpetuated so that no trained people are available to cope with the last problem of students graduating or leaving.

When the leaders speak of peace

The common folk know That war is coming.

There is no prescribed number of meetings in the local branches. If the experience of the Toronto branch is typical of other centres, the lack of impact of the campaign is easily explained. Publicity has been negligible.

The "Peace House" at 55 Harbord St. is a pleasant quiet place to read, talk, work, meet other "peaceniks," or find out about the CUCND. The door is never locked — but who knows that it is less than a block from Sidney Smith — or merely that it exists at all.

The "in" group, i.e. the people who work and who form the nucleus of any group has not always sought out or utilized the available ability. However, the CUCND is no longer identified with any particular college, faculty or group. There is also some effort to turn to advantage the continual inevitable flux of people by absorbing and training new people.

With this general trend to a broader basis the close forced-feld relationships created by a point of view isolated from society has had less and less effect on the decisions and actions of the movement. What is sacrificed in rapport, is gained in efficiency. More and more people graduate to become full fledged apostles outside the relatively tolerant atmosphere of the university.

The CUCND has recognized and tried to come to grips with the larger issues of war and peace. It seeks approaches, not facile solutions but alternatives at least to the frozen postures of the two abominable snowmen. It is to be hoped that it will also concentrate attention on finding useful methods of making itself a genuine influence for rational thought, for peace, in this country. It seems to be growing aware that the role of voice in the wilderness is exceedingly hard. Every voice is needed in order that words of dissent, words of sanity may be heard amid the dark winds of emotion and the snuffing of beasts hungry for blood.

The author wishes to thank Peter Boothroyd, Arthur Pape, Susan Bricker, Barry O'Neil, Betty Davis, Mike Walker and Howard Gorman.

The Company's operations are highly diversified. Thus, men are exposed to varied sets of business problems in such diverse fields as nuclear reactors, heavy apparatus for industry, electronic equipment and appliances for the home.

The Company's organization is decentralized into product business departments. This brings men from finance, engineering, marketing and manufacturing into close daily association for business planning and decision-making, increases knowledge and understanding of all functions of the business.

Rotating assignments are combined with graduate seminar classes. A variety of initial finance-oriented on-the-job assignments in several product business departments and graduate-level seminar courses provide a solid grounding in many areas of business operation.

There are continuing opportunities for professional development. The opportunity to continue throughout a career to move not only across functions, but also between product business departments, assures varied experience in depth. A dynamic environment creates unusual opportunities for the outstanding man.

Company representatives will be visiting your campus for the purpose of interviewing men interested in openings this Spring on —

Fellini's manifesto

By DAVID SECTER

In 8½ Federico Fellini wades knee-deep through his subconscious, wallowing in his aspirations, frustrations, and failures. In this autobiographical adventure Marcello Mastroianni portrays Guido (spelled F*E*L*L*I*N*I) a famous movie director who is going through a period of cinematic impotence.

The theme of the film is established by the claustrophobia of the opening scene. Guido is suffocating in his car in the midst of a traffic jam — complete silence. Onlookers observe his agony with indifference. He escapes and floats through the air, is caught, and crashes down to earth.

The doctors send the director to a fashionable mineral spa to recuperate from his breakdown. He is trying to make some progress with his film, but faces an insurmountable barrage of producers, critics, movie queens, and personal problems. All the women of his life, past and present, descend upon him but Guido finds solace in none of them.

His elegant empty-headed mistress Carla joins him at the spa, but offers no fulfillment. Guido can only seduce her after he has disguised her as a cheap trollop. His wife Luisa comes to him and there is a fleeting moment of understanding. But she quickly yields to jealousy and suspicion, castigating her husband for his infidelities.

Sensuous Claudia Cardinale serves as the symbol of innocence. She comes floating up to Guido at the spa, dressed in white. The exhilarating music ends abruptly and Claudia stands in a halo of silence.

Religion, along with Eros, is a dominant influence in Fellini's self-analysis. As a boy Guido was chastised by his school priests for running off to see obese Saraghina, who titillates the young boys with her lascivious rumba.

The climax of the film is a flight of erotic fantasy in which the director rules over a harem of all the women he has known. When his inmates decide to rebel against his tyranny he flays them into submission with a giant bull-whip. They respond with squeals of masochistic delight.

The fundamental symbol in the movie is an immense launching pad which Guido has constructed for the film he plans to make. The producers throw a big press party at the steel-and-concrete structure, where the director is attacked by a pack of ravenous reporters who devour him with their greed for news.

Guido admits defeat and abandons the film, leaving this awkward launching pad as a testimony to his emasculation. In the midst of this despair he is rejoined by his wife and they go off together to join the dance of life.

Fellini's conclusion is unfulfilling. It is essentially the same solution he gave us in La Dolce Vita. That film ended with a gigantic sea monster marooned on the beach to represent decadent society. Innocence beckons from the opposite shore, but Everyman cannot reach her and must pursue the only life he knows. In 8½ Fellini leaves us with another useless monstrosity as a symbol of frustration and failure. Again Marcello Mastroianni is sinking into the social stream as the film fades off the screen. Fellini should avoid these cinematic clichés which detract from an otherwise compelling piece of abstract expressionism.

The most important element in the film is the dialectic on obscurity in contemporary cinema. The writer-philosopher Daumier harps on Guido's growing confusion. "The world abounds with superfluity. Why add disorder to disorder?" He warns the director not to leave films behind him like the deformed footprints of a cripple. 8½ is certainly no deformed footprint. Neither is it a mammoth stride. It is a step in the right direction.

Yum Yum Tree bears stale fruit

By JOY TEPPERMAN

Despite its "yummy" color, clothes, scenery, and a bevy of beautiful girls, "Under the Yum Yum Tree" fails to come off. The reason is simply that the movie isn't funny.

The situation centers around a beautiful but scatter-brained Miss, Robin Austin, who decides to test her own and her fiancé's "character compatibility" by living with him. The catch is, of course, that this will be done on a purely platonic basis.

Reluctant boyfriend agrees, and the two settle down in a lovely apartment. But wouldn't you know it! The landlord, Hogan, as he is affectionately called by all his tenants, turns out to be a highly over-sexed individual with an unlimited supply of heart-shaped keys to each apartment. While boyfriend is trying his hardest to stay away from Robin's bed, landlord is trying even harder to jump in.

Sound funny? It isn't. The laughs are few and far between, and the situation is merely dragged out to the point of exhaustion.

As Hogan, Jack Lemmon has his moments, but these, are too few and not enough to brighten up this rather sad comedy. Generally, his portrayal of what I imagine was supposed to have been an unorthodox yet highly charming individual is forced and often annoying. As Robin Austin, Carol Lynley tries hard but she rarely lowers her voice from a shrill high C. As a result, she seems to always be yelling out her lines. Imogene Coca and Paul

Lynde make for an absolutely nauseating pair of married domestics, neither of them altering his tone or expression from one scene to the next. Edie Adams, as Hogan's ex-girlfriend, looks tired, and with good reason. Only Dean Jones, as the boyfriend, succeeds in making his character real and very likeable.

I'm afraid that as a comedy "Yum Yum Tree" lacks any real flavour.

The old ones are as good as ever

By DAN CALINESCU

When last year's excursion into nostalgia, the Golden Operetta Series showed that the public was willing to pay good money to see Nelson Eddy and Jeanette McDonald smooch on the screen, the movie industry discovered it had latched on to something big.

The result of this discovery is the World Heritage Picture series, which opened Thursday at the Imperial Theatre. For the next eight weeks, Thursdays will be 'Memory Time' with some of the giants of filmland.

The movies to be shown come from an era when the cinema was strictly for entertainment. Moviemakers took their material from the pages of world literature and came up with thoroughly entertaining pictures for everyone.

I will admit that with people like W. C. Fields, Laurence Olivier, Spencer Tracy or Lionel Barrymore it was not too difficult to make outstanding pictures. Attempts to remake great 'Oldies' have failed miserably in the past for the simple reason that the performer material is not available. The films contained in the Heritage series are probably the best adaptations of the famous novels and plays that we will ever see.

November 14, Spencer Tracy in his first Oscar-winning role plays opposite the great Lionel Barrymore and little Freddy Bartholomew in Captains Courageous. Director Victor Fleming created a masterpiece of adventure on the high seas in this 1937 adaption of Rudyard Kipling's famous novel. With Mickey Rooney and Melvyn Douglas in supporting roles, we have here a surefire hit.

Jane Austen's Pride and Prejudice is set for Nov. 21. The cast, headed by Laurence Olivier and Greer Garson, includes Edna May Oliver and Edmund Gwenn and the screenplay for this 1940 production was written by none other than Aldous Huxley. Sir Laurence plays the proud Mr. Darcy in a manner that makes one wonder whether Jane Austen looked into the future and wrote the part expressly for him.

Joseph L. Mankiewicz's 1952 production of Julius Caesar follows Nov. 28. This is the most recent film in the series and the only successful Hollywood adaptation of a Shakespeare play. Marlon Brando's Antony created quite a stir. James Mason as Brutus, John Gielgud as Cassius and Louis Calhern as Caesar at the head of an impressive and able cast, the film presents a very interesting interpretation of the bard's famous play.

Who can forget Errol Flynn, dashing, swashbuckling and all that? He was not a great actor by any standards but he was still unforgettable in his own way. His role as Mabub Ali in Rudyard Kipling's Kim, to be shown Dec. 5, was one of the most engaging of his career. Kim, the little orphan, is played with verve and spirit by a young Dean Stockwell, whom you might remember as one of the brutal murderers in Compulsion. For excitement and colorful entertainment, ment, this 'Oldie' hits the spot.

Two of the most unforgettable performances of the silver screen were given by Paul Muni and Louise Rainer in Pearl S. Buck's The Good Earth. This 1937 adaptation of the Pulitzer prize novel brought Miss Rainer the coveted Oscar and is still today considered one of the best movies to come out of Hollywood. Dec. 12 is the show date for this one.

The last picture of the series, Dec. 19, is David O. Selznick's 1935 version of Dickens' classic A Tale of Two Cities. Starring Ronald Coleman and Basil Rathbone, this story of the French Revolution and the men and women caught up in its turmoil is outstanding filmfare. The spirit and mood of Dickens' novel are captured with near perfection.

This promises to be a really exciting motion picture series. Time of showing is 2 p.m. and 8:15 p.m. on the above dates with special student prices of $1 at all shows when you flash the magic card (ATL that is).

The sound of surprise

By DAVID JACKEL

Although the figure of Coleman Hawkins presently dominates Toronto's jazz scene, the highlight of the week took place right here on campus. The Phil Branton sextet played at Hart House on Wednesday, in what turned out to be the best yet of that establishment's series of noon-hour concerts.

This group provided an excellent example of the increasing amount of good jazz to be heard on college campuses throughout North America. It also provided some of the best jazz played by local musicians of any description in recent years. On the basis of this and some other Hart House performances, certain of the Toronto professionals who are content to play it safe and not try to scare anyone had better look out.

There are an impressive number of good young jazz musicians in Toronto, many of them at this university, and they could conceivably play a large part in bringing about a much-needed revival of local jazz. Part of the problem, of course, is not the question of talent, but the question of where to find an audience interested in listening. Hart House can at best provide only a partial answer.

BRANTON ARRANGEMENTS EXCELLENT

The Branton group was impressive for a number of reasons. All the soloists performed well, but the outstanding feature was the quality of the arrangements and compositions employed by the sextet. Both showed a level of craftsmanship and originality that is seldom found on recordings, let alone in live performances. The two originals, entitled Joy and Holiday, were excellent examples of small group writing.

Also adding to the success of the concert were the contrasting styles of the hornmen (altoist Branton, tenor saxophonist Bill Collins, and trombonist Russ Little) which enabled the sextet to provide a variety of solo interpretation within the framework of the arrangements.

Drummer Andy Tekauz and bassist Bill Hyde provided the group with a solid rhythmic foundation, and pianist Gary Williamson and Hyde both had well-used solo space.

Tony Colacut, the youthful piano phenomenon, will lead a quintet at Hart House next Wednesday in what promises to be another good concert. Various local off-campus professionals will be involved in the proceedings.

JAZZ WET AND DRY

Meanwhile, down at the taverns, little has changed since last week. Coleman Hawkins continues at the Friars until Saturday night, and is worth hearing, despite what you might read elsewhere and despite the noise and the cramped quarters at that particular night-spot. Amanda Ambrose, a singer of considerable lung-power who is searching for an original style, replaces Hawkins on Monday.

The Colonial situation is not much improved over last hearing. Joe Thomas has left the group because of illness, but the rest of the drawbacks can't be explained away quite so easily. Prospects are better for next week, when Wild Bill Davison and the Salt City Five will take over the bandstand. Reports indicate that this group played very well here last summer, so perhaps Toronto will finally get some dixieland that will satisfy the jazz fans.

Davison is one of the most powerful jazz trumpeters, whose big sound and fiery solos have always been outstanding. The success or failure of the band will depend on the other musicians, who are apparently part of a group once known as the Salt City Six, which in its fortunately brief career provided countless listeners with lethargic and derivative examples of how not to play dixieland. But changes have been made, and the word is that things now swing much harder.

Carol Sloane, who presently sings at the Town Tavern, is worth seeing as well as hearing. As far as her singing goes it's very good, although whether or not it's jazz would be impossible to decide without a lengthy discussion of what jazz singing is. Since the question has never been satisfactorily answered by anyone, the best plan is to decide for yourself.

Generally Miss Sloane's work does swing, but she is still much under the all-pervasive influence of Ella Fitzgerald. She has sufficient talent to become either an excellent original singer or an excellent Fitzgerald imitator. Which she will eventually become is undecided, but the process is worth watching because it occasionally turns up some excellent singing, both uptempo and on ballads.

Non-alcoholic jazz spots haven't been receiving much space lately, so it's worth reminding you that the First Floor Club and the Cellar both continue their after-hours operations. The quality of the jazz may vary, but it's usually good enough to keep the listener interested, and often it's much better than that.

The low-pressure atmosphere is also an advantage. It's possible to hear the music, and there's no one standing around looking offended if they don't receive a tip. Sometimes you get the feeling that the waiters at the downtown taverns aren't paid a salary.

Alleyn star of Montreal show

By PAUL RUSSELL

The Ten Montreal Artists show which was officially opened at Hart House last week by Georges-Emile Lapalme represents a collection of several exciting artists who have developed their style basically in Montreal. Most of them have attained national stature, several having been included in the last few Canadian biennial exhibitions organized by the National Gallery in Ottawa. Also they are quickly gaining in international recognition. Six artists from this show, as Mr. Lapalme pointed out, were on exhibition at the Spoleto Festival of last year. All, in their works, represent a good cross-section of current international styles — Geometric, Figurative, and various forms of abstract expressionism.

The exhibition is noteworthy for both the high calibre and variety of works on display.

The geometric, Mondrian, style of Molinari, seen in "Onzerouge" is striking in its precision and force. The title is completely accurate and factual. The painting consists of 11 very precise vertical strips in various shades of red. These strips float, shifting forward and back in a fascinating succession. But the question comes up: Is it a gimmick, an optical illusion or a valid art form?

The works of Letendre,

VSP von spyk

Student relaxes in Hart House Gallery during exhibit of Ten Montreal Artists.

Bellefleur and Gendron all reflect the strong influence of Borduas. In Bellefleur the image is poetic and romantic. It might even be called too beautiful. Letendre is much more dramatic, painting large impasto plaques of smouldering brilliant colors, usually red on black. The result is very dramatic, but perhaps on occasion a little slick (Signe Ambivalent). Gendron seems to hit a generally more encompassing stride. He is dynamic and structural in his arrangement of abstract forms, (Tourbillon) but he doesn't use the palette knife as does Letendre. On the other hand he can be poetic and fortunately not as "beautiful" as Bellefleur—"80 F".

Figurative painting is represented by deTonnancour. His "Bleak Landscape" is almost monochromatic compared to the other artists in the show. He creates an image of vastness, subtlety and melancholy which is carried through into his newer abstract works such as "Figure Immanente".

Edmund Allenyn, however, proved to this writer to be the star of the show. He is highly skilled in reproducing his vision and he has superb taste. He is fascinated by textures. In "Epave" the organic forms move horizontally across the canvas like molten lava, sometimes jutting out dramatically but maintaining nevertheless, a basic unending flow. In "Creux de l'Ete" he achieves an elegance that is unrivalled in the show. Again he is organic but tight and very carefully controlled. McEwen and Gagnon are rather food foils to Alleyn. McEwen has allowed himself to become all too interested in his medium, as fascinating as that medium is, to the detriment of anything else. Gagnon in his large work "The Gap", tells us something, but he tells it rather crudely.

Other artists in the show are Ghitta Caiserman and Ulysse Comtois. The exhibition will run until Nov. 24 in the Hart House Art Gallery.

New paintings by John Chambers at the Isaacs Gallery should be an attraction to those who admire representational work. Mr. Chambers' paintings depict the countryside around his home in London, Ont., his family and friends, with a warmth and love that is very contagious. His palette is dominated by yellow, white and pastel colors. Some of the works evoke pop art and even "Art Nouveau" in their decorative quality and juxtaposition of contemporary figures respectively. Not the least reflection of Mr. Chambers' talents are the frames on most of these canvases. Completely in tune with the paintings, they contribute to the delicate and shimmering atmosphere of the whole. While these works are realistic in a completely detailed manner, they evoke a strong mystical quality which is almost surrealistic. On this point and on that of style they recall the style of Alex Colville, an acknowledged master in the North American so-called "Magic Realist" school. However, Chambers' mysticism is optimistic and bright; Colville's mood is melancholy and grey.

This exhibition continues until Nov. 18.

Festival provides good Schubert

By DAVID S. BUNDLER

"The courage which had sustained him as far as the house forsook him completely in the presence of the prince of composers. Beethoven ran through the Variations and discovered a harmonic inaccuracy. He gently drew the young man's attention to this, but at once added that it was not a mortal sin; whereupon Schubert completely lost control of himself, perhaps as a direct result of this kindly observation. He rushed out of the house and bitterly reproached himself." — Schindler (1822).

Apocryphal or not, this story has a genuine Schubertian ring: a humble man or youth, oblivious of his own powers, rather cowed by the Viennese popularity of the Italians and North Germans, and above all, fearful of this man who "induces transports of frenzy among men instead of transports of delight."

In fact, Schubert preferred Beethoven's light-hearted D major Symphony to all his other works. How ironic it was that the only real Viennese composer (born in Vienna) of the period) should also be its most unknown and unplayed in his own lifetime. But in the face of Rossini's vogue, the stunning pianistic virtuosity of Weber and Hummel, and the awesome rudeness of Beethoven, there was little public sympathy left for a musician concerned not a whit for audiences or technical tricks, simply content to enjoy himself in the manner of a gifted amateur.

Schubert wrote so many songs, like Mozart, he occasionally did not recognize one of his earlier creations. But unfortunately, so unconcerned was he with eposible performance, that he indulged himself very often, where practical experience might have suggested a different course. This was especially so in the case of his three or so operas; generally speaking the musical flavour was in the spirit of Don Giovanni with a libretto in the Metastasio-Kotzebue tradition of implausibility, the hybrid result proving totally unpalatable to the frivolous Vienna public in that rare instance when it reached production at all. But the mass of fine music in these forgotten scores ought to be heard, perhaps in oratorio fashion or even in orchestral suites a la Gluck Mottl.

If it seemed that we spoke of an ingeniously happy man at the outset, we must hasten to correct that impression. Just one year after the alleged visit to Beethoven, we find Schubert writing, "I feel myself to be the most unhappy wretched creature in the world . . . imagine a man whose enthusiasm for beauty threatens to vanish; and then ask yourself if he is not indeed a wretched unhappy creature."

Schubert had recently fallen victim to that arch-romantic occupational hazard, venereal disease and its effects were to torment him until his death. Gesualdo's troubled soul, Beethoven's deafness, Schubert's syphilis are all reflected in their composer's music. Schubert had never been ostentatious in his musical conceptions but now he began to darken his colours and withdraw ever further into his own realm of meaning.

All this is by way of drawing attention to the apparent Schubert festival being conducted this season by the Women's Musical Club. Several weeks ago we heard the String Quintet, on Nov. 21 B flat Trio, and Thursday, the posthumous Sonata in A major. Whether this is an intentional arrangement or not, we are being given a splendid opportunity to hear some of the essential late Schubert played very well indeed.

MUSIC

When the C Major Quintet was performed at the first concert in this series, I admitted being rather vexed by the emphasis on the unsettling elements of the score. After further consideration I am still vexed but still very much intrigued. The quintet is in the first place sui generis, so much so that Alfred Einstein has advocated rearranging the work for doubled strings and double bass, apparently feeling that the work is large-scale but bottom heavy and muddy in the existing version.

The Quintetto Boccherini demonstrated that such measures are entirely out of order since a more characteristic approach to the score suffices to solve the problems. Richard Goode happened to see the A major Sonata in the same light, sacrificing structural verbosity to expressive coherence. Now what does this mean, more precisely?

Well, the rhythmic pulse of a Schubert Sonata simply does not have Beethovenian inevitability nor is the dynamic range so logical. In musical terms, we could point out that Schubert's developments are often often thematically choppy and harmonically irrelevant (melodic ideas are usually more significant in themselves than as developmental ingredients, and Schubert's choice of keys more often than not, based on colour dynamics than logic) and that his codas are seldom cumulative.

Does this suggest an early romantic Tchaikovsky, brilliant but short on discursive tools? Only if both can be made to fall under the Mozartean sense of musical coherence. In Schubert's case we must say emphatically yes, for he so often strikes us as Mozart grown to Papa Haydn's great age, a child of the age of revolution and a victim of romantic indulgence,

"Friends" revised

By MELVYN PELT

R. B. Bennett by Ernest Watkins; Kingswood House; 271 pp; $7.25.

Those interested in Canadian history have, for some time, been awaiting the publication of this book. The author used the enormous collection which is deposited in the University of New Brunswick library. The Manion and Stevens papers both of whom were important members of the Bennett cabinet were also available to the author.

The story of R. B. Bennett and his premiership of Canada from 1930-35 is undoubtedly an important link in Canadian history. The Bennett Government held office during the first five hungry and bitter years of the Great Depression. How did a millionaire Conservative react to these conditions, and, what effect did his reaction have on the Canadian political scene?

During his regime "iron heels" Bennett outlawed an insignificant Communist party and deported over 10,000 people a year. Yet he espoused the New Deal in 1935 and promised to bring it to the Canadian people.

The man who headed Canada at such a crucial stage warrants a full scale work. Unfortunately Watkins' book is only a slightly more expanded version of the earlier Beaverbrook hagiograph of Bennett.

Watkins, to his credit, makes no pretence that the book is a full scale biography. He regards his work as a "sketch" and it is on this definition that the book must be judged.

But the "sketch" is seriously out of proportion. Out of 17 chapters the author devotes only five chapters to Bennett while he was prime minister.

Even within this period Watkins demonstrates that his reading of the Bennett papers could have only been superficial. He claims the system of relief camps which the government set up "can hardly be called a failure."

Yet the evidence in the Bennett papers clearly indicates that the camps were a disastrous failure. The papers include many reports from social workers, and ministers requesting Bennett to change the administration of the camps. The camps completely destroyed the morale of the unfortunate single unemployed men living within them. Would Mr. Watkins argue that the "March to Ottawa" took place because the camps were successful?

Within the sketch there are a couple of lines on the New Deal. But these lines are not correct for the author fails to take fully into account the importance of William Herridge, Bennett's brother-in-law. The name of Rod Findlayson, Bennett's chief aide, who accepted Roosevelt's pragmatism, is not mentioned.

Since there is very little material on the vital years there is little value in using a great deal of space to criticize this section.

Bennett, bitter after his defeat, left Canada to take up permanent residence in Britain. Watkins writes "I still cannot fully comprehend his final decision to quit Canada..." But 10 pages later he writes "I do not find it hard to understand why Bennett left Canada..." Perhaps Mr. Watkins should have spent more time thinking about his subject.

The author also has the habit of raising questions and then forgetting and/or not answering them satisfactorily. If Bennett and Meighen did not get along why and how was the relationship patched up in 1921?

The question of how Bennett started on his path to being a millionaire is raised when the author brings up the story of Mrs. Eddy but it is not sufficiently carried through to a full and satisfactory explanation.

One wonders if this is truly a "sketch" or merely just a vague fuzzy outline.

Watkins uses at least five quotes which also appear in the earlier Beaverbrook book. Since the Bennett collection is voluminous one wonders why Watkins could not find any new material for himself. He certainly adds nothing that is really new to the Bennett episode.

This book makes the reader wonder if it is about Bennett or an autobiography of Watkins. If the author wishes to inform the public of how Calgary appeared to him "on an April afternoon in 1953"; if the author wants to tell of his first readings of illustrated weeklies; if the author wishes the reader to know of his joining the British Territorial Army, then let him write his own, separate book.

The book contains 271 pages including index and rails for $7.25. For that price the book is not worth buying.

It probably is not worth buying even at a publishers remainder sale.

Congo author biased

By G. O. OLUSANYA

Lumumba's Congo: Roots of Conflict. By Washington Okumu; Ivan Obolensky Inc.; 250 pages; $4.95.

The author in this book sets out, as he claims, to examine the Congo crisis objectively. This should have provided us with a standard by which to judge his work, but he seems to identify objectivity with the African point of view. He states that "to provide an objective account of the Congo crisis should, therefore, be the task of those progressive people who have been able to observe the strife in this great African country intimately, especially the Africans." This is not necessarily true. Africans themselves are too emotionally involved to be able to examine the crisis with any great measure of objectivity. Mr. Okumu's work is indeed a proof of this.

He states that "it would seem that the Belgians were guilty not of granting freedom too soon, but of withholding it for too long, of giving when they were forced to give, and then giving without generosity of grace." If the author uses the word 'freedom' to mean independence, his account of conditions in preindependent Congo does not support this conclusion. Independence could not have been said to have been granted too late unless the author belongs to the school of thought which advocates granting independence no matter what the conditions in a colonial territory are.

The Belgians, as the author clearly demonstrates, were too late to realize the great revolution that was sweeping across the African continent. When they did wake up and began adjusting to it, they were too slow to prepare the Congolese for the responsibility of independence before they abdicated.

His judgement of colonialism as a whole is harsh and one-sided. "Colonialism in any shape or form always means robbery, exploitation, and flouting of the elementary rights of the people and their national sovereignty. Colonialism means ignorance and hunger." This, is not the product of a cool, analytical study.

Certain questions are asked and not adequately answered. Certain statements requiring his judgement are made without comments.

However, the analysis of Belgian policy in the Congo, the causes of revolt, Lumumba's role in the crisis and the estimate of his role and character are capably handled. So also is his analysis of the influence of Pan-Africanism and the other nationalist movements in Africa on the development of nationalism in the Congo.

The important thing about this book is not so much in its contribution to our knowledge of the Congo crisis, but that it expresses in a very forceful way the views shared by many Africans about the Congo crisis. It is the work of a man with a grievance.

REVIEW 10

Players Guild gives students scope

By ERIC RUMP

One of the curious things about many students at this university is their inability to do things on their own.

Hart House is an example of the way in which the expert or the professional now is in charge. Normally it has a resident professional director, but since he is on sabbatical, four others have been brought in to replace him, no doubt at considerable cost. Both scenery and lighting are largely in the hands of professional people. If we could only get a group of professional actors as well, then we could all relax, knowing the theatre was in safe hands.

That is why the growth of the UC Players Guild has been so encouraging, since it represents the attempt to create a workshop theatre where students can learn about all aspects of theatre by doing things themselves. It is run by a small executive, with Earl Rosen as president, but the bureaucratic machinery has been kept to a minimum, and the driving force behind them is this desire to create a vital centre of drama on campus.

Last year the Guild did three things. First there was the series of lunchtime plays put on weekly in their theatre in the Women's Union on St. George St. Many of these were successful, the most memorable being "Purgatory" by W. B. Yeats. In the fall term they also presented a very creditable production of Arthur Miller's "All My Sons," and, throughout the year, had a series of guest speakers. The most exciting of these was the English actor, Sir John Gielgud.

During the summer the stage was considerably enlarged and new lighting was installed, so that the theatre in the Women's Union now is one of the most pleasant and intimate on campus. Because of its size, it is easy to establish a rapport with the audience, not always a simple in Hart House's tomblike belly. The series of lunchtime plays is continuing, and can be seen, free of charge, on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of any week.

Already there have been plays by authors as diverse as Pirandello, Maeterlinck and Schisgal. This week Wolf Mankowitz' "Bespoke Overcoat" can be seen, and next, Edward Albee's "The Sandbox." The main production this term will be "Othello," with John Wright as Othello and Les Mulholland as Iago. There will also be a series of guest speakers throughout the year, one of whom might well be Sir Alec Guinness.

Although the Guild is centered in UC, and supported by money both from the College and the UC Lit, it is trying to build up connections with other groups, in the hope that both can profit from seeing what the other is doing. Thus it will be possible to see guest appearances of groups from Ryerson, the UTDC, Victoria and the University of Ottawa. There is also a growing connection with the Yale Drama School and it is hoped that they will be bringing a play to us and we taking a play down to them.

Through the UC Guild many people are being given the chance to participate actively in the theatre and that such a wide range of plays can now be seen, free of charge, by anybody interested.

A successful Toronto debut

By PAUL ENNIS

In a very disjointedly programmed TSO concert this week only soprano Regine Crespin's powerful and expressive voice stood out. The orchestra itself was badly balanced. Strings covered woodwinds but lacked body when it was needed; woodwind phrases were often lost or played out of dynamic context; of the brass, the trumpets were consistently good.

The full orchestra was plagued with ill-timed anticlimaxes and lack of few real dynamic peaks. Of the programming, the Piston Seventh Symphony was anticlimactic following the genuinely fine and moving performance of Leonore's aria Abscheuleicher from Fidelio.

Canadian Oscar Morawetz's Overture To A Fairy Tale opened the concert. It is not too difficult a work to assimilate on first hearing. The development of the 'elfin-like' opening themes of the high woodwind, throughout, the rest of the orchestra by rhythmic variation and syncopation is easily discernable. In this way it is pleasant, but the development of the themes seems too repetitive. This may have been due to the orchestra's lack of real dynamic range. In addition, some Woodwind solo passages, notably in the clarinet, were covered by the strings and brass.

Dr. Morawetz has called the developmental climax 'almost menacing'. The TSO's interpretation was for an increase in volume, but an increase based on the mere participation of more instruments and not an overly strong dynamic drive (with a 'menacing' horn sound) to this climax.

The Piston Symphony was given its Canadian premiere. Any judgments based solely upon this first hearing would therefore undoubtedly be premature. I would like to hear the work again, possibly with a warmer oboe sound and a realization of the symphony's sense of urgency. Its movements are well tied together and especially the last, dominated by this sense of urgency. The abrupt, almost surprising ending of the opening movement and the second movement characterized by wonderful flute and string sections ending with a flute cadenza were hereof of the dissonance usually associated with 'modern' music. The warm tone and well-phased phrasing of the solo flute should be a model for the rest of the orchestra. The third movement was very frustrating. Urgency seems to be the keynote, with heightened intensity in each succeeding phrase being called for. The orchestra never found the summit, being content in reaching only the foothills.

Miss Crespin carried the night. Both in the Beethoven, and in the Liebestod from Tristan and Isolde, which concluded the concert, she exhibited a dramatic sense and range of expression to be marvelled at. The pianissimo beginning of the Wagner was so soft and empty, yet rich, and possessed of so much intrinsic power, as to make it a really wonderful musical experience. And coming after two hollow double bass pianissimo pizzicatos it seemed divine.

The Liebestod grew bar upon bar with the soprano's climaxes emerging. The surging reiteration of the prelude's love themes reaches an inexorable end with Isolde's final cry and the subsequent orchestral denouement. Here there was no frustration in phrasal continuity.

The Fidelio recitative and aria was given the same attention to dynamic contrast and dramatics. The recitative begins with an outburst of anger followed by a questioning adagio. The aria is a virtuosic allegro. Lack of volume in the singer's low register more specifically too much orchestral volume in these places, was the only detraction (Miss Crespin did have slight intonation problems, particularly in the Wagner). Whereas Mr. Susskind let his control of the orchestra slip too often in the Wagner, the Beethoven accompaniment was better (notably the sensitive bassoon playing).

The Prelude to the Liebestod was marked by phrasing in inconsistencies in the dialogue between winds and strings. The absence of real pianos and pianissimos was never more irritating than in the opening of the prelude. In Siegfried's funeral march, Wagner called for a very large orchestra.

The TSO did not immit the other flute, oboe, clarinet, three horns, assorted brass and strings and four additional horns, the composer called for. If only on an economic basis, this is unfeasible here. However, the tenor tuba solo in the funeral march was ably played by the third trombone. The performance in general though was with out a unified musical impression.

The concert was shorter than usual. Maybe they expected more curtain calls

Tales from the Latin Quarter

By LAWRENCE GARBER

Larry Garber, a graduate student in English, was in Paris for 10 months in 1962. This is the first of a series of Tales from the Quarter.

Never mind why I came to the Quarter. I took a metro from Auteuil one morning very tired and very nervous. I wanted to stay near the Bois de Boulogne but something had gone wrong. I had invested in pleasant memories there, driving in a white fiat to the race track, picnicking by the lakes, dining in front of the large fountains at St Cloud. I liked to live my life before the fact and doctor the illusions later; so when my life at the villa was dead and buried, I made a last attempt to stay near that quiet, fresh world. I was not yet lunatic enough not to want the flowers and fountains and clean stretches of road that wound through the woods to little restaurants I couldn't afford. With the villa gone, I stood with my luggage before a small hotel in Michael-Ange around the corner, thinking oh the hell with it, and went in. After all, wasn't this the best thing to stay in the easy life and know nothing but the nicest smells? The Concierge was a splendid bitch.

"How much are your rooms?" I asked in my best residential Paris french. I had been taught inflection by the better people.

"What is your room number?"

"No," I smiled, "I want a room."

"Is it eight, number eight?"

"I don't live here."

"Andre, come down. The American makes trouble."

"No no, I come from outside."

"You want to leave without paying?"

"Look. I come from the outside. From the street." I went outside and came in again to demonstrate.

"Andre, check room eight; He has taken his luggage."

"No no, oh god."

"No no? Yes yes. What's your name, how long have you been here?"

"Garber. I don't live . . ."

"Garber. Not Stevenson?"

"Look please. From the street. I come from the outside to the inside. Out to in. I no live here. I live villa Claude-Lorrain. No here. There."

"Pig American. How much do you owe on the register?"

"Oh god."

"Stevenson, is that your name?"

"Garber, G-A-R-B-E-R."

"What? S-T-E . . ."

"Look. You here. Me there. Street. Outside."

Andre came running down the stairs to report that Stevenson was in his room shaving.

"You don't have a room here? You are not Stevenson?"

"No no no. I want know price room. How much room."

"Oh."

So I took a metro from Auteuil, struggling angrily through passageways and up stairs. The metro rattled and had a bad smell. When you want to hate, it's the best place to be.

A sad anniversary

Dylan Thomas, the Welsh lyric poet, died 10 years ago Saturday.

Born in green, wild Wales, he died ironically at the top of a concrete-and-steel hospital in New York. Cause of his death was brain deterioration brought on by alcoholism and, finally, pneumonia.

But it was really America that killed Thomas. The endless rounds of cocktail parties, where what he once termed "rich, stuffed chunks of American womanhood" forced liquor and their daughters on him, got him in the end.

He lived for many years in a seaside cottage at Laugharne, Carmarthenshire, Wales, with his wife Caitlin and three children. He died far from home, surrounded by "literary agents' trigger men" (his words) who tried to squeeze as many public performances out of him as possible.

He lived in comparative peace. He died slowly and painfully at the age of 39. He died fighting too, taking for himself the advice he had given to his father in this 1951 poem:

Do not go gentle into that good night,
Old age should burn and rave at close of day;
Rage, rage against the dying of the light.
Though wise men at their end know dark is right, Because their words had forked no lightning they Do not go gentle into that good night.
Good men, the last wave by, crying how bright
Their frail deeds might have danced in a green bay,
Rage, rage against the dying of the light.
Wild men who caught and sang the sun in flight,
And learn, too late, they grieved it on its way,
Do not go gentle into that good night.
Grave men, near death, who see with blinding sight
Blind eyes could blaze like meteors and be gay,
Rage, rage against the dying of the light.
And you, my father, there on the sad height,
Curse, bless, me now with your fierce tears, I pray.
Do not go gentle into that good night.
Rage, rage against the dying of the light.

CANADA IN CRISIS (6)

(Following is an article by a third year Law student at U of T. For two years Francois Lemieux was the editor of the Fulcrum at the bilingual University of Ottawa.)

My faith in English Canada

By FRANCOIS LEMIEUX

It is with reason and passion that I believe in a united Canada based on two strong and developing cultures; a Canada creating an environment which enables a citizen to equally enjoy Pratt and Gremazie, Callahan and Garneau, Malraux and Huxley, La Comedie Canadienne and The Crest.

It seems to me strange that the co-editor of the Quartier Latin should complain that most French people in Montreal are bilingual whereas the English of the city are unilingual. If Westmount residents want to remain culturally isolated it is they that are poorer for it and not the Montrealais.

With like feeling I reject any separatist solution tending to destroy the only medium through which pluralism can prosper: Canada.

There are many reasons marshalled against the advocates of national independence. But these will fail to impress the nationalist who, because of his outlook, does not listen to reasons. He has lost faith in Canada and its English-speaking majority. For him the past (the Act of Union 1840, the Manitoba School Question, Reglement '17 and Conscription) is present and future. For him, it is too late to change those conditions which, in every day experience (e.g. the railway ticket agent in Kamouraska who can only speak English), remind him of the indifference shown by the rest of the country. The sore spot is this indifference rather than any overt act of ill-will on the part of English-Canada. What irritates the nationalist is not so much that there has been an active campaign to assimilate him, a policy which even Gov. Murray thought impractical, but the failure in not accepting those conditions which the French presence requires in a bicultural country.

Faith in the English-speaking people I have not lost. It is reinforced every day in small and perhaps insignificant ways: when I meet a professor in the hall who says "bonjour" instead of "hello"; when a friend complained that I would always speak to her in English when we could speak French; when a group of classmates suggested that I lead them in an hour of conversational French; when an M.P., with whom I am acquainted, asked me for suggestions on a speech he would later deliver in the House; when friends speak in French and note how bad their accent must be.

All these incidents, and many others, indicate that there is an agonizing reappraisal in English-Canada with the realisation of the errors in the past. But, they also indicate that the indifference which once existed has, for a large part, disappeared and is being replaced by a policy of accommodation. That this genuine effort not be futile would be reason enough to reject the solutions pressed by the separatists.

However, it is still true today, there are those like Rev. Ellis who believe pluralism is not worth the trouble and French-Canada's culture not worth preserving. There are also those, who, because of personal interests, reject any positive steps towards a solution. Note the opposition of the Artists' Council to a move by CJBC to increase its French content on the ground that it would reduce job opportunities for its members and school trustees who oppose any scheme of corporation tax distribution to the separate schools.

But these represent a fringe element and not the majority of English-speaking people who now take seriously the humanist philosophy of J. S. Mill. However, a prevalent attitude in English-Canada militates against their traditional habit of meeting reasonable demands. It expresses itself in this manner: "What do they want? Their demands are so vague. They speak of rights, provincial autonomy, federal encroachment etc. If they told us specifically, things would be a lot better".

There is much validity in these observations and the cause of it lies in the love the French have for casuistry. No doubt debate on this level is sterile. It leads nowhere because it is not related to the constitutional, political and economic realities of the day. It was a failure of French-Canada in not producing, until recently, a spokesman who could translate the group needs into concrete proposals. The Dominion-Provincial Conference this month will present a notable change. Already, Gerin-Lajoie has outlined in detail the financial needs of the province in education. It is only on such a basis that the effect of the demands can be gauged and possible clashes with national policies be assessed.

Finally, the trait of blaming others for one's own failures does not escape Quebec. In fact, being in a minority position is conducive to it. For instance, Quebec complains that its economy is dominated by English capital. Why did they give away their natural resources to this type of capital and why did they sell the publicly-owned Montreal gas distribution system to privately-owned English capital. Why is there heavy opposition to the creation of a Department of Education, the establishment of which is the keystone to cultural strength.

There is much truth in the argument that the B. N. A. Act gives Quebec all the legislative power it must have to meet the needs of its people. It has simply not used them because of the presence of socially conservative regimes such as those of Bouin, Tascheau and Duplessis. It has never been clearly shown that the present constitutional arrangements cannot satisfy the legitimate demands of French-Canada because the province has never exploited fully its jurisdiction in this field. Not all can be laid at the feet of English-Canada.

There is much good-will in the country. Until now neither cultural group has found the appropriate methods to tap it.

Previously the location had been a complete processing plant for ice cream, pasteurization, bottling and milk specialties.

But the turretted and sprawling building complex connected with tunnels and lined with refrigeration systems has since been repartitioned and completely repainted a dull grey color.

The arresting "Do not enter — 13,000 Volts" signs on the north-west windows were explained by U of T executive superintendent, Mr. Russell.

"Large transformers put in for Borden's will stay now since they are tied in with the electrical system," he said.

We've been told this sculpture on the north side of the U.C. Library is President Claude Bissell. We don't believe it.

Elsie the cow on U of T campus

By BOB SOROKOLIT

The newest building on campus is also one of the oldest.

It's known as the building that houses the departments of Anthropology, Sociology, Islamic Studies, Fine Arts, Sculpture Studies, Shade Tree Research, and the University of Toronto police.

It's also known as the Borden's Dairy Building on Spadina Drive.

The blitzkrieg entry by the U of T this fall was so fast that bulletin boards outside the Anthropology department still show charts of the company managers and pictures of suggested "gitts of cheese".

And one of the two lecture rooms still has the Borden's crest with Elsie the Cow over the door.

"It was there on the wall for years that there was no reason to take it down," explained building renovator, Mr. Fitzgerald.

"When we started last July it was a crummy, smelly place from the accumulation of milk and fats over the years," he said.

Big question — Will New College score?

Who will win the Mulock Cup? Will Vic take the old mug for a sixth consecutive year? How will the Second Division clubs fare in the playoffs?

These are questions that while away the hours in the more intellectual circles on campus.

But, a new question now occupies the minds of the avid interfac football fans (if there are any). With every passing day this question looms larger.

Will the New College football team score a point this year? The campus bookies remain strangely silent.

On Wednesday, the game squad from New College suffered its fourth straight shut-out loss. The Green and Gold were defeated 12-0 by previously winless Forestry.

The woodsmen's touchdowns were scored by Bob Chown and Lloyd Burridge.

Victoria College yesterday moved to within one game of a perfect season with a 20-8 win over SPS. It was Vic's fifth consecutive win and clinched top spot in Group I for the Scarlet and Gold.

Phil Rimmington again led Vic with a major and two converts, while Dave West and John Bennett added the other six-pointers for the winners.

Bob Heath scored the Skule td, and Dan Kit booted a pair of singles.

LACROSSE

St. Mike's A and PHE A continue to run away from the pack in Group I.

The Double Blue from St. Mike's still own a perfect record after Wednesday's 9-6 victory over Vic I, their fifth consecutive win.

Dave O'Brien was a star for the losers, scoring five goals, while George Olah, Casey Soden and Bruce Mc-Lean all potted a pair for St. Mike's.

PHE A meanwhile remains close behind in second place after taking Dents 11-3. Phys Ed was paced by Don Arthurs and Barry Bartlett with four and three goals respectively. Paul Sunohara scored a pair for the losers.

A four-goal performance by Grant Leishman led Knox to a 7-3 win over Pre-Meds II, in Group III. Trinity remained unbeaten with a 7-2 win over PHE B paced by a hat trick from Norm Trowell.

In Group IV, Vic took Forestry 4-2, while Bob Boase scored three times to lead St. Mike's B to a 6-2 win over SPS III.

VOLLEYBALL

Sr. SPS continues to dominate the interfac scene, recently defeating Pharmacy A 15-9, 15-0. In other games Meds III yr. took PHE 15-9, 15-3, while Vic I beat out Trinity 15-13, 15-10.

SQUASH

Action got underway last week, as UC defeated Meds A, St. Mike's A defeated Law A, and Vic I took Sr. Skule.

SOCCER

UC moved into sole possession of top spot in Group I yesterday as it played to a 1-1 tie against Trinity A.

Nick Roussanoff scored for Redmen while Derwyn Sangster replied for Trinity.

Jr. SPS finally won a game, defeating Vic I, 3-1, on goals by Eugenio Marotta, Anthony Di Paola and Cliff Wintemute. Wilf Neidhart scored the lone Vic tally.

Law and Architecture remain deadlocked on top of Division II with four wins and a tie in five games.

Law shut out Wycliffe 2-0 on a pair of counters from Miles Godfrey, while Architecture took Knox 3-0.

Other action saw SPS III continue its winning ways with a 3-1 decision over St. Mike's B.

RUGGER

Vic II had a field day as it trounced UC 21-0, sparked by a 12-point effort from Al Sharpe.

Knox College moved to within one game of top spot in Division II following a close 8-6 decision over Emmanuel. Rod McCormack was a standout for the winners gaining six points.

New College meanwhile handed Architecture its fifth straight loss by an 11-0 count. Dave Bray, Bob Reid and Duilio Gemmati scored tries for New College.

Al Ratfin's three tries paced St. Mike's to a 19-0 win over Trinity B, while Ted Terry counted two tries in a PHE B 17-0 win over Vic III. Vic IV shut out Meds C 13-0.

CUP COMMENT

By BRUCE KIDD

Several students and faculty members at the University of Alberta are up in arms against Edmonton Mayor William Hawrelak, recently elected four years after resigning from the same office for gross misconduct.

At a recent council meeting, three U of A English professors and a university clerical employee began reading a proclamation attacking the mayor and demanding his resignation. Their statement proposed the passage of "a law to prevent such a man from ever holding public office again."

Hawrelak immediately summoned police and the four were arrested and charged with causing a disturbance. A few days later, a group of U of A students marched on city hall, this time protesting Hawrelak's election on "moral grounds." But the students were more careful — they gave Edmonton Police advance notice.

An invitation to Alabama's segregationist Governor George Wallace to address the University of Pennsylvania has been withdrawn. The lawyers decided to withdraw their invite "because the impact on Philadelphia of your recent activities in Birmingham. ## JOEY ANNOUNCES AID TO DOCTORS

The Newfoundland government has announced a scholarship scheme for medical students. The plan, hoped to improve the level of medical service in the 10th province, will provide generous grants for would-be doctors in exchange for an agreement to work in Newfoundland for seven years after graduation.

The Memorial University of Newfoundland Muse editorially commends the scheme, but doubts the possibility of seven years in a Labrador outpost will arouse many takers. Where are our Dooleys and Grenfells?

LOOK—BUT DON'T TOUCH

"I got my job through the New York Times," said the attractive blonde. And what a job she got.

This week the Hofstra College (New York) Chronicle published a profile on a 20-year-old Hofstra coed who works part-time as a bunny in Manhattan's Playboy Club.

"The most important part of the rugged training course," explained theatre arts major Susan Sullivan, "was to learn how to present the proper bunny image: the charming All-American girl, polite, well-rounded, and intelligent — but not necessarily sexy."

"What about Playboy clientel," asked the Chronicle.

"Well, most of them are just Pinkerton detectives checking that nothing is going on."

CAMBRIDGE FRESHMEN ABOLISH "CAUTION MONEY"

Freshmen are being most uncooperative at two universities this week. At Columbia College, New York, freshmen have been unwilling to sign an academic integrity statement as the first step towards the creation of an honor code, and the subsequent abolition of exam supervision. The honor system has been under study for some years at Columbia, but this year's freshmen batch balked at a clause which requires them to report any infractions of the system. So Columbia must wait until next year.

First-year students at Christ College, Cambridge have petitioned the College Council to abolish "caution money", a $90 deposit levied at the beginning of term to cover any debts incurred against the college. Caution money has been a traditional form of insurance for the college against bankrupt students, but in recent years Christ College has demanded prepayment of its bills. Now freshmen consider the $90 levy unnecessary, and could be better used for food.

KLEPTOMANIACS OR SOUVENIR HUNTERS ?

Petty campus thieving seems to be on the increase. The McMaster Silhouette reports between $800 and $900 worth of cafeteria equipment — cups, saucers, cutlery, salt and pepper shakers, glasses and dishware—disappeared last year from a single Mac residence.

Sometimes it gets so bad it affects service, one residence warden complained: "A dozen teapots disappeared in one week. We had to stop tea service until we could get a new supply."

The Mac situation isn't nearly so bad as at Western, where the Gazette reports cafeteria thefts totalled $5,625 last year, and appear to be increasing this term. Is a motto-stamped cup, saucer, and plate just as much proof of a university education as a diploma?

UBC ENGINEERS PROTECT GOAL-POSTS

A dozen Engineers were injured and a $120 set of goal-posts were torn down in a wild melee following UBC's Homecoming Game in Vancouver last weekend. Curiously enough, the Skulemen had been appointed by the UBC Athletic Director to protect the expensive uprights, and council is expected to grant them $100 for medical expenses and torn clothing.

It's been an unfortunate year for the prestige of football weekends all across the country. The University of Saskatchewan has cancelled its trip to Winnipeg in the aftermath of the Manitoba rail ride to Saskatoon, during which 10 excursionists were seriously hurt before even leaving the train. And several weeks ago in Ottawa, the Carleton-Ottawa University football game was all but forgotten when several Carleton students burned a fleur-de-lis in mid-field at half-time. Public relations, anyone?

Cagers promise to be contenders

By PAUL HENDERSON

The 1963-64 edition of Varsity Blues Basketball team promises to be a contender for the Intercollegiate title.

Coach John McManus has 10 experienced players returning from last year's third-place finishers.

Heading the list of returnees is Dave West, the sharp-shooting guard who came second to Western's Tom Williamson in the battle for scoring honors. West, a graduate of Victoria College, has enrolled for a year of additional study.

Last year West was the recipient of the Dr. W. A. Potter Trophy awarded to the Varsity player deemed most deserving by his teammates.

On the forward line, veterans Ed Bordas and Dave Ouchterlony, both 6'6" tall, should give Blues strength under the backboards. John O'Neill, Jerry McElroy, Doug McKenzie, Arvo Neidre, Wayne Andrew, Nolan Kane, and Mike Moore complete the list of returning players.

Kane has been absent from practice for two weeks with an injury.

Paul Dignan, Jim Maguire and Bill Kostyk are the only lettermen not with this year's team. Dignan was captain of the squad for three years and was a solid player whose paramount interest was the success of the team.

McManus' loss of these three men has been lightened considerably by the presence of several good rookie prospects. Those confronted with the task of gaining a birth with the Blues include Bill Woloshyn, Vlad Baranowicz, Barry Anthony and Jim Sheldon.

Woloshyn formerly played guard for Western Mustangs and is now studying law at U of T. Baranowicz and Anthony are also guards who were top players in Toronto high schools last year.

Anthony played at St. Michael's while Baranowicz was the city's top scoring player with a 33-point average at Bloor Collegiate.

Sheldon is an American from New Hartford, New York, and has played both centre and forward in high school.

According to McManus, defending Intercollegiate champion Windsor (Assumption) is the team to beat. Windsor has only lost a handful of lettermen.

Soccer Blues ousted

By KATY O'SULLIVAN

A tough and determined McMaster eleven thwarted Varsity Soccer Blues' hopes of retaining the intercollegiate championship when they tied Blues 1-1, in Hamilton, Wednesday.

The tie put McMaster in second place, one point behind league-leading University of Western Ontario, and one point ahead of Toronto.

Each team plays its final game Saturday but since Western faces McMaster, Blues cannot even finish in a tie for first place. The winner of the Western-Mc game in Hamilton will be the intercollegiate champs.

Varsity meets the Federated Colleges of Guelph (OAVC) here on the front campus Saturday at 11 a.m. in their season finale.

Wednesday's game was a frustrating one for Blues. A scoreless first half saw Varsity run circles around the disorganized McMaster team. But Blues had shots hit the cross bar, kicked directly to the goaltender, or drop wide of the goal mouth. Blues' forwards seemed to lack the drive that scores goals.

Halfway through the second period on a questionable call by the referee, Mac was given a penalty kick for intentional tripping in the penalty area. Bill Knox scored on the kick with a low, hard shot into the right hand corner of the net.

With ten minutes remaining in the game, a determined push on Mac's goal resulted in Dom Dente catching a rebound and knocking in Blues' only goal.

Varsity's defence played a strong and controlled game as they cleared Blues' penalty area allowing McMaster no chance for a clear shot on goal. Nick Walker and Dente were particularly effective as a unit, forming an impenetrable defence wall.

SHINNY LINEUP ALMOST SET

Kane sends players through paces

By GORD BELLMORE

The Hockey Blues are starting to take shape. They're getting in shape too, and in a hurry. The team has only been practising a week and already the lineup is almost set.

Coach Joe Kane pretty well knew what his material would be from the beginning and started right in cracking the whip. The general feeling is that Blues are championship bound and Kane isn't sparing the horses in getting there.

The workouts have been the toughest in years with skating drills that have the players shaking their heads. The results have shown quickly as the pucksters are really flying in scrimmage.

Scoring star Ward Passi, who had the cast removed from his injured knee yesterday, was out for a light skate last night. When asked if he wasn't rushing his return, Passi replied:

"I can't afford to take my time making sure the knee is alright. The fellows are in great shape already, and if I don't get going I'll never catch them."

Passi's linemate Steve Monteith, whose ankle is still in a cast, is not expected back for some time. Passi's early return was a pleasant surprise, but his knee is a long way from being right and will require an extensive exercise program.

The loquacious Kane can hardly contain his enthusiasm waiting for these two aces to return, for he plans to have top newcomer Hank Monteith, Steve's younger brother, play centre for them. Kane is really pleased with the young Monteith, who looks like the find of the year.

Even the loss of goalie Tim Tory and John Gillfillan, who played for McGill last year, has hit dampened Kane's hopes. Both players have decided to devote full time to the books.

Blues will scrimmage with OHA Jr. "A" leaders Toronto Marlboros today at the arena between 5:30 and 7:30 p.m.

Only pride at stake when Blues host Golden Gaels

By SHEL KRAKOWSKY
Associate Sports Editor

Pride is the only thing at stake in Saturday's football game at Varsity Stadium between Queen's Golden Gaels and Varsity Blues.

Varsity has no chance for a playoff and Queen's has already wrapped up the Yates Cup.

But these facts will vanish into obscurity once the two teams take the field for the OQAA season finale. Golden Gaels would like to finish the season undefeated before travelling to Edmonton for the Golden Bowl against University of Alberta, November 16.

Blues would like to beat the league champions before going to Halifax for the Atlantic Bowl against St. Francis Xavier, November 23.

Blues also want to prove they're a better team than their dismal 1-4 record indicates. Of their four losses, two were by one point and one was by a converted touchdown.

In trying to be the only team in the league to defeat Golden Gaels, Blues have an onerous task, not only because of the overall strength of Queen's but also because of injuries in their own ranks.

Top linemen Bill Jackson and Jim Fisher are definitely out with leg injuries while guard Kaspar Pold is still on the hobble with an bad ankle. Coach Dalt White is reluctant to use Pold and would rather have him play in the Atlantic Bowl than risk further injury in Saturday's game.

White was pleased with the play of Jim

JIM BLAKELOCK BOB PAMPE
Rookies Make Good

Blacklock and Wally Secombe in last Saturday's game and will use them again in a starting role. The two were forced into action due to injuries to other Blues and played creditably. Blacklock at offensive guard and Secombe at defensive end.

With the injuries to Jackson and Fisher, White will use linebacker Bob Pampe at offensive tackle in place of Fisher and fullback Tim Purves will likely see some action at linebacker. Both John Fraser and Andy Grodzinski will play defensive tackle in the spot vacated by Jackson.

QUICK KICKS: Ballots for the Third Annual Coaches' All-Star Football Team have been circulated to coaches in the Senior Intercollegiate League. The results of the poll will be published in The Varsity within two weeks...

FINAL LEAGUE GAME OF SEASON

UTRFC draws curtain on another great year

A UTRFC Syndicated Service

When Varsity Rugby Blues close out the season here Saturday against Queen's, it will mark the end of another colorful chapter in the history of the UTRFC.

Tomorrow will be the last official outing for Paul (Golden Toe) Wilson as a Blue, and the Rugby Captain will be joined at the curtain by perennial stalwarts Jim Humphries, Bill Charleton, John Cameron, and Doug Bosomworth.

But the five departing Blues won't wind up their successful careers without getting some more mud on their Varsity vests. Queen's have always been Blues' toughest OQAA opponents, and the visitors will be fired up to shatter Blues' unbeaten streak.

Queen's held Blues to a 3-3 tie in the season opener and only a week ago overwhelmed Federated Colleges 32-0. Although Blues have already clinched the league championship, they are out to show the visitors the earlier tie match was a fluke.

Wednesday night, Blues battled Ontario Rugby Union Senior Champions Toronto Irish to a 3-3 draw. Blues outplayed Irish in the opening half and went into the lead on John Cameron's 35-yard drop goal. But in the second half, Irish began to press Varsity, finally knotting the score with 10 minutes remaining.

THE GOLDEN TOE
Paul Wilson ends an era

Blues dominated the lineouts with the play of Gethin Hughes and Humphries. But minus hooker Bill Stow, Varsity lost almost every set scrum to their heavier opponents.

For tomorrow' Blues-Gael clash, Varsity will be without the services of Bill Nelems and Ian Sinclair, both injured a week ago at McGill. Their positions will be filled by Mike Joy and John O'Brien.

Game-time on the back campus is 11:00 a.m.

Harriers to Guelph for cross-country championship

Varsity harriers journey to Guelph Saturday to compete in the OQAA cross-country championship over the hazardous course at the Federated Colleges. Blues will send six men along the route marked by fences, swamps, cattle pens, and ploughed fields.

Blues will be led by Bruce Bidd, seeking his third, individual championship. Varsity has also entered Gurston Dacks, Roger Sumner, Nelles van Loon, Bob Manning, and Alex Gray.

Defending champion McMaster is expected to regain its hold on the Little Cup, and improvement throughout the conference indicates a struggle between several schools for the runner-up position.

Tomorrow's conference championship also determines the OQAA entrants for the Canadian Intercollegiate Harrier Championships to be contested over the same Guelph course November 23.

Only last week the Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Union decided to stage a national cross-country championship, in which the top individual and team from each of four conferences will compete.

THE UTRFC . . . A MERRY OLD SOUL

"Very fine men are we,
There's none so fair that can compare,
With the UTRFC."
That's the spirit of the UTRFC in a nutshell.
The UTRFC, what's that?

The University of Toronto Rugby Football Club, my dear man . . . like rugger. This is a club, founded in 1921, that is enjoying the most prosperous existence of any athletic group on this campus.

The UTRFC is unique. It's unique, first of all, because it perennially has a winning team. The Senior Rugger Blues have won the Gilbert Turner Trophy as intercollegiate champions the past five years.

But the intangible quality that makes the UTRFC stand apart from any other athletic club or team at U of T doesn't lie in the club's record on the field. It emanates from the club's personality.

The lines at the head of this column are the refrain from one of the many songs the men of the UTRFC sing when they get together for social functions, which is often, Sung with a risque version of Old King Cole, this refrain best communicates the spirit and pride the rugger players have in their club.

And that's what the UTRFC is — a club . . . not a team . . . but a club made up of as many Varsity students who want to play rugger. No one is ever denied the right to play for the UTRFC. As many players as the club has available, a suitable number of teams will be fielded.

This season, for the first time, the UTRFC formed a third team, the Intermediate Bs, to go along with the Senior Blues and the Intermediate As. While the Blues represent Varsity in the intercollegiate league, the intermediate teams play exhibition games against similar teams from other universities and local club fiftens.

The club is run as one big happy family, complete with elected officers. The elected positions are president, vice-president, manager and publicity director. The president (Paul Wilson) also acts as senior team captain, the vice-president (Ian Sinclair) acts as assistant captain.

The publicity director, Rod Sanders, is responsible for providing the newspapers, including The Varsity, with information on UTRFC activities.

WILSON DOESN'T WEAR A GOLDEN SHOE

The UTRFC is undoubtedly the most socially-minded athletic organization on the campus. Each club member contributes one dollar a year to the social fund for parties. These functions are continued even after the rugger season, so the spirit of the UTRFC hardly wanes through the year.

This fraternalism is inherent in the most unique feature of the UTRFC—the attitude of the players, both to the game of rugger and to their fellow ruggerites, whether team-mates or opponents.

As Paul Wilson explains it: "We play strictly for the enjoyment of the game. Sure we like to win, but this isn't the main reason for playing the game."

"All the UTRFC members are friends and this spirit even extends to players on opposing teams. We know our opponents well and it's become tradition for the home side to throw a party for the visiting team after every intercollegiate game."

"As you can see, it's a sport and not a business. Take the referees, for example. They don't get paid for working games but only get five cents per mile on their transportation."

"And our coach, Dick Gaetor, is the only coach in the University who doesn't get paid."

The attitude of the UTRFC, their togetherness and love of rugger, certainly shows on the field as Blues play with a unified spirit seldom duplicated on other intercollegiate teams.

Wilson perhaps best exemplifies the paradox of a UTRFC member—a jolly carefree spirit combined with a serious devotion.

With a thick English accent, dirty blond hair usually out of place, and a keen sense of humor he can easily be identified. It's also said of Paul that he wears a golden shoe as a mark of his tremendous place-kicking ability. But Paul denies this.

As far as pranks go, Wilson's game for anything. He even eried his luck at interfac football this season "just for kicks." And he's part of a select committee that's chosing an all-star interfacuity cheerleading team.

On the field, Wilson is one of this University's greatest athletic assets, as well as one of its most popular stars. When he plays here tomorrow against Queen's he will close the book on a truly successful intercollegiate career. This season, for example, he has scored 72 of Blues' 138 points.

Wilson is a pleasure to watch during a game, even if you don't know the first thing about rugger. He's a natural team leader and diligent strategist.

In fact, the whole rugger team is a pleasure to watch. It's a shame more people don't take advantage.

VOL. 83 — No. 20 — November 11, 1963

no honor today

We, as students, have been asked to attend the Remembrance Day services to be held this morning at Soldiers' Tower.

We can find very little justification within ourselves for attending this ceremony, because we believe it to be one of the most grotesque customs of our society.

We hold nothing against the more than 500 dead whose names are engraved at the base of the tower, but we cannot honor them as we are asked.

All we can do is feel a detached sorrow because they had to waste their lives in such a senseless manner. We feel an even deeper sympathy for the mothers, wives and children of these men. And we feel nothing but disgust for the institutions and leaders which created a need for this annual ceremony.

Throughout the country today government, church and military figures will be participating in services similar to the one conducted at Soldiers' Tower. Yet throughout two wars, which claimed the lives of more than 30,000,000 men, the members of these same institutions were responsible for exhorting ordinary men to fight, kill and be killed.

The majority of the men who went to war did not understand the essential meaning of what they were doing, any more than most men do today.

They had to rely on the politicians, the religious leaders and the so called military experts to guide them. This was not an unusual situation; the same one exists on both sides in any war.

The politicians sat safely behind the lines and, basing their decisions on what they thought to be ideological truths, sent men out to die.

Religious leaders, convinced of the truth of Christianity, blessed troops as they went out to kill other men. Ministers of all denominations led their congregations in singing Onward Christian Soldiers, and consoled bereaved families with platitudes about the glory of dying for one's God and country.

The military leaders stressed the need to take a strong stand against the dirty Hun; and taught ordinary men how to become efficient machines of destruction and death.

So, the common men, relying on what they were told, marched off to kill, destroy, and perish. And now we are asked to honor the ones who died.

An inscription at the base of Soldiers' Tower says the monument is dedicated "To the glorious memory of members of this university who fell" in the two World Wars.

We can find nothing glorious in the death of more than 500 men. Because of our youth our only memories are those of the grief felt by the families who were deprived of someone they loved.

Another inscription on the tower asks us to "Take these men for your ensamples." We cannot conceive of ourselves as being deluded into any moral justification for killing another man or being killed ourselves for something which is useless.

Some people will defend actions of the Second World War because of the need to stop Hitler and make a free and democratic world. True, Hitler had to be stopped, but by what methods.

In stopping the Nazis, the Allies perpetrated atrocities on a par with those of their opponents. The fire-bombing of German cities and the dropping of the atomic bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki must rank among the worst crimes committed by man.

To all this we say no; and if we take the 500 dead as examples, we will take them as examples of what can happen when people allow themselves to be deluded into thinking there are justifiable reasons for war.

We attach no particular blame to the men who actually pulled the trigger, rammed the bayonet through another man's skull or released the Bomb. They did these things because they had somehow been convinced that what they were doing was right.

The death toll proves their error.

The institutions and persons we do hold partially responsible are those which were in a position shape the opinions and feelings of the common man, and turn him into a beast designed only to kill.

The leaders were persons in responsible positions who allowed themselves to be carried along on waves of emotionalism, religious fervor and patriotism.

They were, and still are, respected members of our society. Today, across the country, many of them will be leading participants in Remembrance Day ceremonies.

To us it seems grotesque that the institutions, and even some of the individuals, which deceived and drove men into being killed should take part in commemorating their death.

Therefore, we will have no part of the hypocrisy and platitudes which find their outlet every Nov. 11.

Instead, we will gain determination every time we walk under Soldiers' Tower. With the memory of those more than 500 names we will try not to be deceived when politicians tell us we must honor our nuclear commitments, when Christians tell us we must carry the trust of Jesus Christ to the battlefield, and when military leaders tell us we must prepare ourselves for another war.

REMEMBRANCE DAY SCHEDULE

Classes are cancelled between 10 a.m. and noon to allow students to attend the Remembrance Day service to be conducted by President Claude Bissell.

- 10:15 a.m. Sentries will take their posts at the Soldiers' Tower.
- 10:30 a.m. Army, navy and air force units from the university will arrive at the tower from the front campus. The service is to consist of a march past of units, placing of wreaths by colleges and the singing of "O God Our Help in Ages Past".
- 10:58 a.m. A two-minute silence will end the service.

Fun in New York

A woman on each arm for a weekend in New York.

Dave Bryce (I Vic), president of the United Nations Club revealed last night that there are two women for each male on the Club's annual excursion to New York, leaving Friday.

According to Bryce, the cost of the weekend will be $29, which includes cost of transportation, hotel, and a tour of the United Nations building.

Buses will leave the front campus at 6:30 p.m. Nov. 14 and return in time for classes on Monday morning.

On Friday, for those who wish, there will be a tour of the United Nations building and meeting with several UN delegates. The group will also attend an Assembly session or other official meeting.

The remainder of the weekend, with the exception of a briefing session with Samir H. Ahmed of the United Arab Republic on Saturday, is free.

There are still places available on the trip, and those interested may call Dave Bryce at 488-7061.

Demand French reading

First-year students in French at York University now are required to subscribe to a Montreal French newspaper, and be prepared to discuss its content in class — in French.

Behind this innovation in York's curriculum is Professor Lester J. Pronger, chairman of the department of Modern Languages. He wants his students to develop the habit of reading a current French Canadian newspaper to familiarize themselves with French Canadian thinking and writing on current news.

The students subscribe to the Saturday issue of Le Devoir. They may read anything in the paper of interest to them, but must study certain articles for the discussion in French twice a week.

Occasionally, brief quizzes are given on the students' reading in the paper which Dr. Pronger considers among the best in Canada, in either language.

Carol Ann Balmer (I PHE) was last night selected Miss Canada 1964. Competing with 24 other girls from across Canada, Miss Balmer made her triumph late last night at the O'Keefe Centre.

The SAC in action

By JOHN COOK

Should a Students' Administrative Council member resign in the face of charges of a conflict of interest between his council duties and his other activities?

The Model Parliament subcommittee of the Students' Administrative Council voted Oct. 31 for certain reforms in this year's Model Parliament. One of the four committee members voting for the reforms was Richard Tan (III Meds), chairman of the University of Toronto Debating Union committee, which has the responsibility of organizing Model Parliament.

Two days later, the Progressive conservative club elected their Model Parliament leader for this year. They chose Richard Tan.

The Model Parliament subcommittee is composed of representatives from each political party, Tan, and chairman Ian Thompson (OCE). They voted 4-2 for the reforms, with the Liberal and NDP representatives opposed, Tan, Thompson, and the PC and Communist representations in favor.

Since Tan's election as PC leader, charges of conflict of interest have been made by Liberal Bruce Lewis (II Vic), who challenged Tan to a public debate, and demanded his resignation from the SAC.

The contention of Tan's accuser is that his action was clearly improper, even if he did not act in bad faith. They question the impartiality of the committee decision under such conditions of imbalanced representation.

Tan says he outlined his position on reforms in a letter sent to Thompson a week before the decision was made. He claims that at the time of the decision he was not a member of the PC club nor a candidate for the leadership. He also points out that his vote made no difference in the outcome.

None of these defences touches the heart of the issue. The impartiality of the decision has been questioned by the parties concerned for perfectly valid reasons, and the SAC should at least investigate the entire matter and find out whether the charges have any basis.

The SAC presumably accepts the responsibility of organizing Model Parliament with the understanding that it will handle it in a non-partisan manner. In view of the questions raised, the council should debate the reforms and the question of conflict of interest at their next meeting.

Errors delay publication

The Canadian Union of Students may delay distribution of the latest edition of Campus Canada in Quebec due to errors in the French text.

Dave Jenkins, CUS president, said: "At first glance our people have found several errors so we're holding up distribution in Quebec while we check every French story."

"If the French is bad, then the magazine can't be distributed in Quebec, unless we wish to insult our French Canadian readers."

Jenkins added: "Since there are always errors in every printed publication, our people won't be unrealistic. Indeed, at the moment, it looks as though the edition is clean enough to be distributed."

The Quebec deputy minister of culture, Guy Fregault, and leading separatist Pierre Bourgault at the University of British Columbia where Campus Canada was produced, said the errors were of a minor nature.

Mr. Fregault said he would not be insulted if he received a copy of the magazine in his office.

"It is very difficult for even a French Canadian to learn the rules for breaking words at the end of the line."

"If this is the only type of mistake, you people deserve much credit. I probably would write you a letter of congratulations," he said.

Campus Canada is a bilingual publication produced by UBC's Alma Mater society for CUS. One-third of the text is in French and some 600 copies have been ordered by Quebec universities.

The Alma Mater Society has underwritten the production costs of the magazine presently almost $2,500. This cost is expected to be paid from profits of the next two editions.

It is planned that the magazine will appear on campus Nov. 12 and will sell for 35 cents a copy.

Good luck seeds swell Van sales

Treasure Van sales this year set a record, said the sale's publicity director Mary Main (III Trin) Sunday night.

Sales totalled $7,800, an increase of $500 over the previous (1956) record. Last year's net was $16,600.

Van organizer Jane Pequegnat (II Trin) attributed the success to the many students working on the sale since last June. Miss Main said the sale would have been impossible without their help.

Among the most popular articles this year were machadi good luck seeds from India, and wine skins.

Winner of the African mask door prize was Frank Mintz (I UC).

Treasure Van proceeds go towards financing the Canadian branch of World University Service, and projects of the international organization.

One arrest, 10 summonsed at final game

One 19-year-old student was arrested and "about 10" were summonsed for liquor violations at Saturday's football game, the last home game of the season.

The one student arrested, whose name was not released by police, resisted an officer patrolling the student bleachers. He was a Toronto student and will appear in court Tuesday.

Police said activity on St. George St. was "relatively quiet considering all the Queen's students in town."

No fraternities were raided by police. Police said Sunday the officers in the stadium let the goal-posts be torn down by students "after a token show of force." He said the officers did not feel the posts were worth student injuries that might have resulted from a struggle.

vsp Czarniecki

The long arm of Toronto law reached out for an unhappy Queens student at the season's last football bash. But police stayed away from fraternities Saturday night.

Pickwick Week declared at UC

Pickwick Week starts today in a lead-up to the University College Follies presentation of Pickwick, starting Wednesday.

Pickwick is a musical comedy adapted from Charles Dickens' Pickwick Papers, and set in Victorian England.

Celebrations started out officially on Friday night with a dance. Part of the cast in costumes from the show mixed with the dancers against a background of stage sets and scenery.

The play was written by Alexander "Sandy" Leggatt (SGS), a UC honour graduate in English, and George McCallum (II UC).

McCallum also composed the musical score, and jazz artist Paul Hoffer did the orchestration. Music is provided by a 14-piece orchestra.

Players in costume will be wandering the campus area today to publicize the show.

Pickwick runs in Hart House from Wednesday to Saturday.

Plead for national feeling

Special to The Varsity

Two University of Toronto professors at different seminars this weekend warned of Canada's dissolving nationhood.

Professors Marcus Long of the philosophy department told the Ontario Council for Childhood Education, meeting in Hamilton, that "we are falling apart as a nation." He said Canada was built on "negatives" — anti-British feeling in 1925 and anti-Americanism at present.

"The French love France. The British love England. But nobody except New Canadians loves Canada," he said. He asked parents to teach their children love of their country.

Professor Paul Fox of the political economy department told the Royal Commission on Biculturalism in Ottawa that its hearings "may be the last hope of saving the Canadian Confederation."

He said the commission may be providing the last chance for Canadians to discuss national union "before it is too late."

This weekend also Professor Marshall McLuhan of the English department at St. Michael's College praised "planned news leaks" for creating a truer democracy today than ever before.

Speaking at a Windsor seminar on American-Canadian relations, Prof. McLuhan said news leaks were the most expedient way of discovering public opinion in national decisions. "The simple reaction is given back at once, and then the decision-making (by government) can be altered or modified. In this way, people get to participate in government decisions."

Presumably the University of Toronto is an academic community devoted to improving the condition of man.

Yet within this community there are many things which are quite inconsistent with the aims of the university.

The German machinegun displayed on the landing at the south end of Hart House is a grim reminder of the First World War. But the sign at its base leads us to believe that the purpose of the exhibit is to point out the heroism involved in the capture of the gun.

Secondary school students at the University of Toronto Schools must undergo compulsory cadet training. It is inconceivable to us why any part of this university should force students to take part in military, or quasi-military activities.

But perhaps the most paradoxical relationship is that of the university with the army, navy and air force organizations on campus. One such organization is the Canadian Officers' Training Corps, the army's university plan.

Last month COTC members spent several days handing out literature in Hart House.

The literature told students that the COTC would prepare them to serve their country in a national emergency. If they joined they would get cash, travel, a commission, physical training credits and practical experience.

The practical training, the sheets said, included leading and managing men, organizing administrative and military operations and "the use of the weapons, vehicles and electronic equipment of modern warfare."

Further, the president of this university, Dr. Claude Bissell, is the honorary head of the COTC.

We have been told that during the introductory lecture given by the University Naval Training Division students are asked the rhetorical question: "Why are you here?"

They are then told that they are there to learn how to kill.

It is obvious to us that the aims of the military organizations and the aims of an intellectual and academic community are quite different. In many respects they are incompatible.

Yet for more than 100 years the military organizations have been part of this university; and today the president of this university holds a position in one of the organizations.

We do not dispute the fact that the university must not isolate itself from the outside world. In fact we encourage involvement in the contemporary problems of our society.

The most important issue today is that of peace. Yet there are no courses within this university's academic curriculum which are even remotely concerned with the art of peace.

How this university and its president can give house room to organizations who train students in the art of killing, while ignoring the formal study of peace, is beyond our comprehension.

We believe the methods of war have no place in a community devoted to bettering the condition of man.

And we also believe that this university is shirking its responsibility by not providing for the study of peace in its academic structure.

Little rhyme or reason this issue. Like Chinese food, Jewish cookies, Scotch scotch, German and Fleet St. beer and not enough pretzel benders to spill anything while working. More Henderson with African mask, Susan Slumpp with funny French telegrams, Alex Gray with United Nations droppings. Dave Bryce with tinkling Victoria suitcase, French York papers and UN broads. John Cook with Canadian SAC politics and Bob Sarakofski, ambassador. Localized sportsies were Bruce Kidd, Kathy O'Sullivan, Rod Saunders and a new reporter, some Krakofsky. Gallo, Hungarian with a name like Italian wine, had none in the darkroom.

Constructive foreign policy needed to honor war dead

By IAN GENTLES

Executive Secretary
Toronto Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament

So far in this century, we have fought to end all wars, and we have fought to make the world safe for democracy. It is still not clear whether we are much closer to these goals than we were when we started fighting. We now know that the next war will certainly end all wars, but that it will do little to ensure the continued existence of the democratic way of life.

One question worth asking at Remembrance Day is what the Pearson Government is doing in practical terms to secure lasting freedom and peace for Canada and the world? How does its record compare with that of the Diefenbaker regime?

Canada's acquisition of nuclear capability doesn't seem to have brought increased security to anyone. Our nuclear role is as unnecessary as it is insignificant to the defence of the West. Canada's contribution makes about as much difference as the addition of a handful of sand to the seashore.

The foolishness of our nuclearization has been demonstrated in many embarrassing incidents. For example: the discovery that France will not allow us to station the A-bombs for our C.F.—104's at Metz; the hinted decision to cut our nuclear squadrons in half; the long parade of witnesses before the Defence Committee telling us (if McNamara's statement wasn't already evidence enough) that the Bomarcas are virtually useless to defend Canada from any sort of attack; the incongruity of signing an agreement to have A-bombs shipped into Canada, almost at the same time as we sign an agreement putting a stop to the testing of these bombs.

It is quite clear that the talk about our being honour-bound to accept these weapons is just so much diplomatic hocus pocus.

Pearson himself admitted on Aug. 18 that the agreement could be broken by a simple exchange of diplomatic notes. Last winter there was much talk or re-negotiating our nuclear commitments. Has any such re-negotiation begun? If not, is any planned?

Apart from the nuclear fiasco the Pearson Government has made some promising moves in foreign policy. The U.N. has always been close to Pearson's heart, so we may expect increased support and encouragement of that body.

Already we have earmarked a battalion of 600 for UN use at any time. Our 600 troops are joining the 3000 already put aside by Denmark and Sweden.

The exciting thing is that these troops, according to one report, are being trained in the use of non-violent methods. Their training involves learning the language and cultures of different countries, how to control riots without the use of violence, and generally being 'UN oriented'.

Another good development is the increase in foreign aid which is in the offing. The vital question is, how much of an increase?

Culled from our editorial columns

The following are excerpts from Varsity Remembrance Day editorials since 1921. They express various facets of opinion about war and Remembrance Day itself.

Nov. 11, 1921

Has not all the progress of the human race been built on the sacrifice of our best? Throughout all ages, the finest and noblest members of the race have spent themselves and been spent for the good of their fellows. The fact that they died, that they completely spent themselves, is not inconsistent. Their death is but an incident, the greatest, the most glorious incident in their service of sacrifice.

Nov. 12, 1923

Then let us thank God upon our knees for the things that our men did; and let us pray that their memory may never fail, and that we may so live in these days of Peace, that when the Bugle Sounds again, it may find us willing to do as they have done, and die as they have died.

Nov. 9, 1928

...we honour in particular today the gentlemen of our own university whose time of life was short but who would not spend that shortness basely.

Nov. 11, 1930

Even the Christian Church — in most of its branches, at least, — having in the last great hour of need betrayed its Lord and its message, will do it again in favour of the existing order.

Nov. 11, 1937

We have been shown the falsity and sham of the ways by which those men sought to realize their ideals. . . . We have watched the betrayal of those ideals in the settlement which followed the war — we see that settlement now, hurling us to the brink of another such disaster.

Nov. 10, 1939

We are more anxious than our forebears to reach the goal which is shaped in the ideal of democracy. We are resolved to profit by the errors of the past in our march forward. We believe our cause is just and we have faith that we shall not lose. And we are ready to double and redouble our energies if necessary.

Nov. 11, 1940

Today we must draw from the example of the past. Through remembrance we must gain faith and strength for the days ahead that the torch may not have been handed on in vain.

Nov. 11, 1941

...the Honour Roll is no longer a list of unknown names. The dead are our own contemporaries; they are sometimes our acquaintances, and sometimes even our intimate friends.

Nov. 11, 1942

We remember them easily now — they were our friends, our class-mates, our day-to-day companions. That memory must be kept fresh in the days which will follow the next Armistice. And when the peace is made this time, let us make it so that the sacrifice of the finest young men of all the United Nations upon the altar of stupidity will not have been made without purpose.

Nov. 11, 1943

The dead of the First Great War have seemed, at times, to have died in vain. It is our duty now, the duty of all who fight and think on our side, but especially the duty of the privileged and somewhat sheltered group now in the universities, to make sure that the fight which soon will be twice won will never have to be fought again.

Nov. 10, 1944

The spirit of '18 with the utterance of its pious sentiments and plans for permanent peace will almost be impossible to recapture. Slightly more than twenty years has shown us that the war to end wars did not fulfil its proclamations. . . . And now in the sixth years of a ferocious struggle we are again faced with the seemingly hopeless task of rebuilding and reconstructing.

Nov. 11, 1946

Tomorrow the world will go back to the old routine again. Famous generals will call for more atomic bombs; jingoistic politicians will scream for conscription; the peacemakers of the world will continue their bickering in the United Nations Assembly; the war profiteers will continue to enjoy the luxuries they bought with men's lives; . . .

CANADA IN CRISIS (7)

(This is the seventh article in the series on English-French relations in Canada.)

A search for Canadian policy

By JIM LAXER
Varsity Features Editor

English Canadians need not despair of the French Canadian revolution.

The energy that is pulsing through Quebec can serve to redirect Canadian thinking as a whole. The desolate drift of the fifties is over.

The French Canadians have shown that the peoples of the northern half of North America need not slowly succumb to the American melting pot.

Historically Canada has always needed some kind of goal — a national policy around which to centre the hopes of the country. The National Policy of John A. Macdonald is only one example. The era of colonizing the Canadian west is another.

To discover a policy that both English and French Canadians can embrace in the 1960's is especially vital. In the whole area of social welfare and education Canada has a great deal of ground to make up. Based on much European experience the country can set out to improve the living conditions of the people, to rebuild the cities, and to broaden educational facilities. Happily the French Canadians are already actively concerning themselves with these tasks.

The other great question concerning all Canadians is the question of peace. Nov. 11 is a time traditionally associated with thoughts on war and peace. To all U of T students who are determined that the Soldiers' Tower shall never have a new wall dedicated to the fallen of our generation, the rejection of nuclear arms for Canada must be an urgent goal. Here too we will find vigorous support from the new French Canada.

In the past the conduct of war has been a divisive issue for the country. The conscription crises of both world wars created an ill will between English and French Canadians that has not yet disappeared. Present circumstances, however demand that all Canadians unite on a platform of peace. If ceremonies must be held on Nov. 11, they should be civilian ceremonies dedicated to the common Canadian opposition to war.

The 19,000,000 Canadians will prove in the next few years whether or not they are a relevant people. For almost 200 years they have pursued an existence separate from the United States.

Since 1945 however, the Canadians have come increasingly under American control. During the fifties it came to appear that the country's ultimate destiny was to be as part of the United States. Canada was becoming the Scotland of North America.

But French Canada has changed all that. The French Canadian people have survived the Iroquois, the British conquest and Lord Durham's Report. Since 1960 they have made it clear that they will survive the United States of America. The French Canadians have always been in the forefront of the struggle for Canadian autonomy.

What about English Canada? Many have concluded that a determined French Canadian nationalism added to the age old pressure from the U.S. could deal the country its death blow.

Actually the Quebecois have forced English Canadians to make a choice. They must choose between a new partnership of Canada's two nations or eventual absorption by their southern neighbour.

I think they should and will choose the path of a new arrangement with the people of Quebec. This is perhaps the more difficult path but it alone can make the Canadian past and present relevant.

There will be agonizing days of self-examination and self-doubt ahead for the English Canadians. But of this trial there could come a purpose, a positive reason for existence that is at present lacking.

Blessed are the peacemakers

By DOUG WARD
President, Students' Administrative Council

Today, most of us will set aside some time to think about a friend, or a father, who was killed in the most recent world war. Today, we shall be made to remember the personal side of war; the people who died.

Will you be satisfied to spend a perfunctory two minutes in silence, listening to the lonely Last Post of a solitary trumpeter?

Will you be content with the phrases "supreme sacrifice" and "for God and country"?

If you are, then forget about the dead, and forget about the maimed who measure out their lives in free cigarettes at Sunnybrook Hospital. Forget them, for you do a disservice with your ceremonial prattle.

The dead who we know were not hypocritical when they fought and died to make peace. But we are. If they were here today, they would be the first to enjoin us to be peacemakers. Apparently we are quite satisfied.

Otherwise it is hard to understand our greatest sin, passivism.

Passivism is the posture which allows us to observe the Hoary arms race and conclude that we have no voice in the measures of our country.

Passivism is the stance which forces us to be content to rest our international relations on fear, rather than on the struggle for understanding.

Passivism is that which refuses to say no to those who wish arms to kill the world's population 10 times over. The American president did not say yes to the use of the atomic bombs against the civilian populations of Japan's cities, but he did not say no.

And passivism denies the possibility of constructive peacemaking too. In this community of scholars, do you hear anyone advocating the need for a peace centre, to coordinate work on the historical causes of war, the economics of peace, the psychology of the arms race, the relevance of nonviolent direct action? Does anyone want a course on the quest for peace? Does anybody inquire whether this is a valid study for an academic community?

Blessed are the peacemakers; not the peace-lovers nor the peacehoppers. Peace demands hard work; hard study, serious searching of your conscience, and action.

And this is the opposite of passivism.

Peacemakers must be as willing to lay down their lives as those who prefer recourse to British force. Peacemakers must be willing to witness their relief to friends and to country.

Peacemakers must be able to show that what is worth saving of our culture cannot be helped by unrepentant aggression or massive retaliation.

But do not leave your passivism if your only wish is to become a self-appointed and self-anointed critic of the body politic. You must begin with you, and find how much of the enemy is your own threatened self.

Otherwise you will not be capable of the selflessness of those we remember today.

Soccer Blues dump Aggies as McMaster wins title

By KATY O'SULLIVAN

Varsity Soccer Blues romped to an easy 5-1 victory over OAVC Aggies here Saturday. There was never any doubt which team would win as Varsity ran circles around the demoralized Guelph team they beat 8-1 four weeks ago. Urs Maag booted Varsity's first goal when the game had been in progress only three minutes. At the 12-minute mark Bill Troost scored again for Blues as he took a rebound from the goal post. Halfway through the period Jim Gaylor tallied Aggies only goal.

Five minutes before the half Toronto's Pat Terrelonge sent the ball across OAVC's goalmouth and Urs Maag headed it into the nets in the most spectacular goal of the game.

Ten minutes into the second half, with Guelph's goal keeper faked out of position, Terrelonge booted Varsity's fourth goal. Keith Murphy scored on a pass from Terrelonge midway through the half bringing the final score to 5-1.

Nick Walker and Dom Dente continued to spark the defence with calm controlled play, while Maag played one of his most brilliant games to date in his new position on the forward line. Terrelonge showed himself an excellent playmaker, setting up three of the goals and scoring a fourth.

In the championship game played in Hamilton, McMaster fought to a 2-1 victory over University of Western Ontario and thus captured first place in the Intercollegiate soccer league.

With McMaster in the possession of the championship, Western and Toronto are tied for second place.

SECONDS AND THIRDS ALSO WIN

Undeclared rugger season

A UTRFC
 Syndicated Service

Intercollegiate Champion Varsity Rugger Blues wound up their second successive undefeated OQAA season Saturday, taming Queen's Golden Gaels 18-8 on the back campus. Earlier this fall, Gaels had held Blues to a 3-3 draw.

Blues started the match slowly according to habit, spotting the visitors a converted try before coming to life late in the first half.

Only the play of Blues' fullback John Cameron prevented more Gael scores during the temporary ineptitude of the home side. Paul Wilson's penalty goal just before the intermission made the score 5-3 at the half.

Blues scored again straight from the kickoff, and thereafter their supremacy was never in question. Terry Picton passed to Bob Dodds for the sudden try, and a mere five minutes later the pack pushed Gaels eight yards over their line for another. Queen's was completely demoralized.

Wilson, with a try and a penalty goal, and Bill Charlton, with a try, rounded out the Toronto scoring. Queen's tallied a penalty goal in the dying minutes of the game to make the final 18-8 score respectable.

The Intermediates maintained their unbeaten string by downing Queen's Seconds 6-0.

Intermediate points came from Mike Treadwell's try and from John O'Brien's 30-yard drop goal.

Varsity Thirds chalked up the largest Toronto victory of the day by swamping Irish Thirds 27-3.

In the Scrum: Blue tangle with an Ontario Rugger Union All-Star fifteen Wednesday in Varsity Stadium at 8:00 p.m.

WITHOUT STARS AND CONDITIONING

Puckmen edge Marlies

Varsity Hockey Blues showed indications of a championship season by edging Toronto Marlboro juniors 5-4 Friday at Varsity Stadium.

Blues were without four of their top players and had only been practising for a week but they showed enough power to subdue the OHA Junior "A" league leaders. Forwards Ward Passi and Steve Monteith are recovering from leg injuries and defencemen Stu McNeil and Ian Sinclair missed the game because of academic commitments.

Blues' newcomers did all the scoring. Hank Monteith, younger brother of Steve Monteith, played like a seasoned veteran and scored two goals.

Don Fuller, another rookie from Brampton juniors, also counted two goals for Blues. Bobby McClelland, a Victoria College hockey grad, netted the other Varsity goal.

Jack Chipchase, Paul Le-rcan, Mike Walton and Andre Champagne scored for Marlies.

Blues built up a 5-1 lead in the second period before their lack of conditioning showed and Marlies scored three in a row before the period ended.

Monteith and Fuller played on a line with Butch McGee, another newcomer, and they were the most effective unit on the ice. McGee suffered a ligament injury to his knee, however, and will be lost to the team indefinitely.

Lambert edges McConnell for title as Western bombs McGill 48-12

London — Willie Lambert of McGill Redmen and Pat McConnell of Western Mustangs carried the intercollegiate football scoring race down to the wire Saturday as Western thumped McGill 48-12.

McConnell, an end and kicker, went into the game trailing Lambert by 11 points in individual scoring. After three quarters of the game McConnell had three touchdowns, two converts and single for 21 points while Lambert had a t.d. and a field goal for nine points.

This gave McConnell a slim 58-57 lead for the scoring title. But Lambert booted a fourth-quarter field goal to win the title 60 points to 58.

Mustangs led 33-3 at the half. The victory gave Western a 3-3 record and second place while McGill finished third at 2-4.

While Lambert counted all 12 McGill points, Ted Miller,

Dave Garland, Art Froese and Jim Weber scored other t.d.s for Western. Weber also added three converts.

Kidd and Mac win harrier crowns

While Toronto's Bruce Kidd retained his individual title at the Intercollegiate harrier championships Saturday in Guelph, Varsity Harrier Blues were unable to withstand the power of McMaster, and managed only third in team standings.

Mac placed seven runners in the first 12 of the 50-man field, and walked away with the Little Cup, emblematic of the championship, with 32 points. Western placed second with 71 points, followed by Toronto with 75.

For individual honors, Kidd was pressed by Western's Hylke Van der Wal for almost half the rugged 5.6-mile course, then he broke contact and went on to win by about 300 yards. McMaster's Russ Evans was third.

The other Varsity entrants,

Roger Sumner, Bob Manning, Gurston Dacks, Nelles Van Loon, and Alex Gray, placed 13th, 17th, 19th, 25th, and 30th respectively.

Kidd, Van der Wal, and the McMaster team will represent the OQAA conference in the Canadian Intercollegiate harrier championships to be held over the same course November 23.

Gaels win

at the two but Norrie plunged over the winning t.d. on the next play.

After a short kickoff, Israel completed three consecutive passes and then pitched out to Gerry Sternberg who ran ten yards behind the blocking of Bucknam for the score. Taylor's convert made the score 19-15 with 6:39 left.

QUICK KICKS: Gaels' fullback Jim Young who is a shoe-in for all-star honors, was the game's leading ground gainer picking up 81 yards in 14 carries. . . . Pete Thompson caught three Connor passes for 63 yards. . . .

Blues' Mike Hollett ran 59 yards on four receptions while Ken Davison picked up 55 yards on three catches and Dave Galloway 39 yards on four catches. . . .

FIRST QUARTER

Varsity — Bryce Taylor's field goal attempt from the 30-yard line went wide and Bob Latham of Gaels was tackled in the end zone for the single point. Blues had gained possession at Queens' 25-yard line after Gaels lost the ball on downs.

Queen's 0 — Varsity 1.

SECOND QUARTER

Queen's — Cal Connor passed from the five-yard line to Jim Ware for the Queen's touchdown. Gaels moved 64 yards in eight plays for the score, a 33-yard gain on a pass from Connor to end Pete Thompson being the big play in the drive. Jim Young converted.

Queen's 7 — Varsity 1.

THIRD QUARTER

Queen's — On the last play of the quarter, Bob Latham intercepted a Jim Israel pass intended for Dave Galloway and raced 80 yards for a t.d. The convert attempt by Young was wide.

Queen's 13 — Varsity 1.

FOURTH QUARTER

Varsity — After Gaels' score, Blues marched 76 yards in 12 plays for a touchdown. Israel passed from the 11-yard line to Mike Hollett for the major score. Taylor converted.

Queen's 13 — Varsity 8.

Queen's — Bayne Norrie ran the following kickoff back 98 yards to Blues' after being interfered with by a spectator. On the next play Norrie carried to the t.d. Young's convert attempt was wide.

Queen's 19 — Varsity 8.

Varsity — Gerry Sternberg took a pitch-out and ran 10 yards for the Varsity t.d. Blues moved the ball 34 yards in four plays for the score. Taylor converted.

They played a whale of a game — White

Blues' effort in vain as Gaels win 19-15

By SHEL KRAKOFSKY

Varsity Blues redeemed themselves Saturday at the Bloor Street Bowl before 10,697 fans.

Blues didn't defeat Queen's Golden Gaels but in losing 19-15, Blues displayed their best offence and defence of the season. They played well enough to win but it was the same old case of coming out on the short end of the breaks.

One of Golden Gaels' touchdowns came on an 80-yard interception and another was set up by a 98-yard kickoff return.

Coach Dalt White was more than pleased with his team's showing.

"I'm real proud of the fellows today. Each and every one of them played a whale of a game and it's a shame we lost," said White. "But that's been the story all year. Everybody worked hard but we lost by bad breaks."

It was an inspired brand of football that Blues played and it was amazing that they did so well with several starters out of the lineup with injuries.

Tim Purves, who has played fullback all year, put in time at outside linebacker as well as sharing fullback duties with Bill Watters, who also played linebacker on the other side.

Purves played a remarkably strong game on defence and along with Watters and inside backer Ray German, this trio continually put the rush on Queen's quarterback Cal Connor.

As a result, Connor was only able to pass 16 times and was thrown for losses on several occasions.

Blues' front wall of Mike Hollett, Jeff Drozdow, Jim Blakelock, Don Rogers, Noel Bates, Bob Pampe and Doug Bucknam gave quarterback Jim Israel lots of protection and Israel threw the pigskin 32 times for 15 completions.

Israel threw both long and short passes with accuracy and several times the ball was dropped on good pitches.

Assistant coach Mike Chykaluk had words of praise for Israel.

"He threw the ball like a pro. Jimmy could have won the game for Montreal Alouettes today," said Chykaluk.

Chykaluk also singled out Doug Bucknam as turning in an outstanding performance. Bucknam played defensive end but in the second quarter was also forced to play offensive end for the rest of the game.

End Ross Dainty suffered a concussion, his second of the year, and will have to miss the Atlantic Bowl in two weeks.

Varsity's defence played a strong game and on four occasions Queen's lost the ball on downs, inside Varsity's Blues' Kenny Davison (29), a standout in Saturday's 19-15 loss to Queen's, intercepts a Cal Connor pass intended for Gaels' Bayne Norrie (25).

25-yard line.

The first time was in the first quarter but Blues could only muster a single on Bryce Taylor's missed 30-yard field goal.

Gaels took the lead in the second quarter on a five-yard pass to Jim Ware. The score was 7-1 for Queen's at the half.

Israel completed six of 10 passes in the first 30 minutes but Blues' total ground yardage netted minus four yards. In the first half U of T only had four first downs but in the second half, playing their best football of the season. Blues picked up 12 first downs.

Blues controlled play in the third quarter but on the last play of the segment, Gaels' Bob Latham intercepted an Israel pass and raced down the sidelines for an 80-yard major.

Blues got the ball after the kickoff on their own 34 and 12 plays later Israel tossed an 11-yard strike to Mike (Flash) Hollett for a t. d. Taylor's convert was good and with 9:15 left in the season, Varsity trailed 13-8.

Gael's Bayne Norrie ran the ensuing kickoff back 98 yards only to be knocked off stride by an over-eager fan at the Toronto five. He was eventually stopped by Blues' Ken Davison and Tom Verth

EXTRA TACKLER FOR BLUES

Fan halts big play

Shades of the 1957 Grey Cup game covered Varsity Stadium Saturday when a spectator came out of the grandstand to make a tackle during the Varsity-Queen's game.

Half-way through the fourth quarter, with Queen's leading 13-8, Gaels' Bayne Norrie broke into the clear on a kickoff return and was apparently on his way for a 100-yard touchdown. As Norrie reached Blues' five-yard line a male spectator ran out of the Varsity student section of the grandstand and blocked Norrie.

The impact slowed Norrie up and as he stumbled two Blues tackled him at the two-yard line.

The over-eager spectator was later identified as Dan Booth, a slim 130-pounder who is not a student at U of T.

An unidentified student later informed The Varsity that Booth had threatened all game to pull such a prank if he had the opportunity.

Booth was ejected from the Stadium with a police escort and Norrie scored a touchdown on the next play.

In 1957, at Varsity Stadium, a spectator pulled a similar manoeuvre on Bibbles Bawel of Hamilton Tiger Cats during the Grey Cup game against Winnipeg.

THERE'S A GLIMMER AMID FRUSTRATION

Varsity Blues came under a great deal of criticism this season. All the way from the head office at Hart House, through the coaching staff, and down to the players, observers were quick to tear Blues apart.

But even the most avid anti-Blues fans found themselves eating their words after the thrilling game at Varsity Stadium Saturday. Blues dropped the decision to Yates Cup champions Queen's Golden Gaels, 19-15, but in defeat the home side won praise and accolades.

Blues went into the game without three top linemen, Kaspar Pold, Bill Jackson and Jim Fisher. In the first half they lost end Ross Dainty with a concussion and defensive back Bryce Taylor was confined to place-kicking by a shoulder injury.

But Blues displayed desire and determination that is a credit to their ranks. Several players were forced to play both offence and defence but their performances didn't suffer from the overwork.

Kenny Davison, who is a coach's dream for that intangible quality called intestinal fortitude, once again was called upon to do everything but sell peanuts. He caught three passes for 55 yards, made Blues' only interception, ran back kicks, and generally was a thorn in Queens' side wherever he played.

Bill Watters has been holding down two positions all season, fullback and linebacker. Watters only carried the ball five times on offence but still gained 39 yards, the most of any Blue along the ground. On defence, Watters was a tiger. He constantly harassed Gaels quarterback Cal Connor and tackled with a ferocity usually reserved for a lower order of species.

Rookie Tim Purves shared fullback with Watters and also played linebacker, replacing Bob Pampe, who filled Fisher's spot on offence. Purves hadn't played linebacker this season before Saturday but you would have never guessed it. With Watters and inside backer Ray German, another standout all season, he helped form an almost impregnable secondary. At fullback, Purves gained 28 yards on only four carries, fighting for every yard.

Sophomore Doug Bucknam, one of the league's most overlooked players, played his usual strong game at defensive end but was called on for further heroics when Dainty got injured. Bucky then played both offensive and defensive end and did a great job at both. His play prompted assistant coach Mike Chykaluk to comment it was the best game he'd ever seen a lineman play.

THE SECOND BEST TEAM IN THE LEAGUE

Despite the shining effort, however, Blues lost. It was the same frustration that has shadowed the team all season. Perhaps some of the criticism levelled at Blues this season has been deserved. But, on the other hand, certain inescapable facts have been overlooked.

Blues lost five games during the season. Four of these defeats were by a total of only 13 points. They dropped two one-point decisions to McGill and lost to Queen's by seven and four points.

This frustration is enough to send any coach or player to the nearest high building, but Blues stayed in there until the end.

The main problem during 1963 was the same as in the previous three losing seasons — lack of scoring. Blues scored 84 points this season in six league games, an average of two converted touchdowns per game. This is not enough to win football games, no matter how great the defence is.

In each of the last four seasons, in which Blues won only five of 24 league games, Varsity fielded a strong defensive team. But the offence wasn't able to take advantage. In 1960, Blues only averaged 11.7 points per game, in 1961, 7.8, and last year again 11.7. With this season's 14-point average that's an overall record of 11.4 points per game in four seasons.

In the second half of Saturday's game the offence moved the ball with more consistency than it had all season. Quarterback Jim Israel even threw one pass 50 yards in the air that just missed being completed. But by then it was much too late for 1963.

The record of the defence speaks for itself. Dave McCullough, Gerry Sternberg, who also played two ways, Harry Watson, Mike Kelly, Ray Reynolds, the fellows mentioned above, and the rest of them, played top football throughout the season.

The 13 points in four games that made the difference between a winning and losing season will loom large in the minds of all the players for a long time. But they should have gained enough satisfaction from Saturday's effort to feel the season wasn't a total failure.

When the season started, Blues were rated as the second-best team in the intercollegiate league. They are.

To give brief to Robarts

A decision to present a brief to Premier John Robarts concerning the coming Dominion-Provincial conference was reached last night at a meeting of 20 representatives of various campus organizations.

Members of the French Committee, political clubs and several student governments met to decide, first, if students have a responsibility to acquaint Premier Robarts with student views on the conference; and, secondly, what action students should take.

It was decided that the various groups should draw up a brief outlining student views on what stand the premier should take concerning the future of Confederation.

Leaders of student groups of all types and views are urged to attend a meeting today in Room 24, of the Electrical Building on Taddle Creek Road.

Leftists oppose new party

The University of Toronto Socialist Club holds its founding meeting today, after the members of its executive were refused membership in the campus New Democratic Party.

The new club says it will try to "present a consistent Marxist viewpoint for the first time" on campus. Members of the club have not found their philosophy consistent with the New Democratic Party or the Socialist Forum.

Hans Modlich (II APSC), spokesman for the new group, said Tuesday: "We agree with the NDP's social principles, but not with their unproved reformism and attitude of co-existence," he said.

The new club will not be a political party. It will not contest the Communist party or the NDP in Model Parliament. "We don't consider the Model Parliament of any significance," said Modlich. "It is still full of old party line. We are still supporting the NDP, but are not working for political gain."

Modlich and the other executives were expelled from the NDP last May with about seven other alleged "Trotskyites." Six of the seven were not students.

Yesterday, both NDP and Communist spokesmen said they did not feel their parties philosophies agreed with the Socialists. Communist leader Tim Walsh (III UC) said the new group opposed modern communism only because of "the failure of Trotsky's program in Russia." He termed it "vengeance."

NDP member Wilf Day (III UC) said: "It's much more logical that they run against us. Their philosophy is not ours."

TORONTO

"Gather ye rosebuds while ye may"

A large number of letters expressing a wide range of opinion have been received in connection with Monday's editorial "No Honor Today." Due to today's space limitations, and the fact that letters are still pouring in, The Varsity will publish a representative selection of the replies in a future issue.

University of Toronto President Claude Bissell Tuesday issued the following statement in connection with Monday's editorial: "The University stands for freedom of speech and of the press. In this case I know the editor's view is shared by a very small percentage of the undergraduate population. In the same issue of The Varsity, Douglas Ward stated that on Armistice Day we honor the dead and, at the same time, accept an obligation to work actively for peace. Mr. Ward is president of the student body and speaks for it."

CANADA IN CRISIS (8)

Don't forget the West

By MIKE HORN

One of the tragedies of the crisis in Canada is that it is not, in the largest sense of the word, a Canadian crisis. Many Canadians are justifiably perturbed about the problems of biculturalism and French Canadian nationalism. Unhappily, however, these people are found chiefly in Ontario and Quebec.

The reasons for this lie in Canada's history and geography, and in the distribution of her population. With few exceptions the centre of interest has resided in the two Canadas and their racial, economic, political and cultural conflicts; and this not unnatural interest has been accentuated by historians who, whether French or English, have been "Canadocentric" in the narrow sense of the word. The history of the remainder of Canada has generally and not altogether unjustly been treated as subsidiary to the main issues of Upper and Lower Canada.

The vast expanse of the Dominion and the concentration of her population and federal political strength at the centre were and are also important factors in this development. Understandable as all these factors are, however, they have had as one result that those who live on the fringes of Confederation tend to regard the crisis in the Canadas as one which does not really concern them.

This is probably less true in the Atlantic provinces than in the West; at the same time developments in the West are perhaps more significant for the future of Confederation. In the West, and more especially in Alberta and B.C., we find a population already sizable, growing rapidly, and essentially parochial in its interests and sympathies. Vancouver, for example, in spite of its size is far from being cosmopolitan.

In this area thorough-going interest in the French-Canadian problem is slight. It was Premier Manning who raised objections against an inquiry into biculturalism in Canada. There is, furthermore, a certain suspicion of things eastern: it was Premier Bennett who this year returned from Ottawa hinting that a reassessment of Confederation would be in order, since B.C. was tired of "bearing the burden of Confederation." Whether B.C. has suffered from Confederation seems very doubtful; nevertheless the feeling exists, none the less real for being perhaps irrational, that the East has had its own way too long, and that the West should assert its rights more strongly.

To speak of separatist sentiment would, I think, be absurd. It would not be absurd, however, to speak of a desire for even greater provincial autonomy. At my Alma Mater, University of Victoria, a number of students made an attempt last March to force a withdrawal from NFCUS and form a western federation which would induce the East, held to be controlling NFCUS, to give the West a "better deal." The attempt failed, but particularly interesting was that Confederation was also cited as a setup which was favoring the East at the West's expense.

How does this affect the problem of separatism in Quebec? "Ottawa should settle it," is an answer often heard in B. C., and Ottawa too often means "they" not "we". But how is Ottawa to settle it? As an answer of sorts Premier Bennett's recent remarks in New Westminster are instructive. He said that B. C. would oppose concessions to Quebec; no favoritism would receive his approval. I doubt very much whether his purpose is as obscurantist as it might at first glance appear to be. He opposes unilateral concessions; but since Quebec will clearly seek a revision of Confederation Mr. Bennett has a golden opportunity to put pressure on Ottawa for his own government's benefit. Unilateral concessions may to him be anathema, but I have severely misjudged him if he would not welcome a settlement of the French Canadian problem which would bring with it greater autonomy for all provinces: for B.C. as much as for Quebec. And I don't think him mistaken in expecting the support of Premier Manning.

Greater provincial autonomy is no ideal solution. Canada suffers already from a lack of integration of her national life; and greater autonomy will accentuate the regional loyalties which plague us and of which this series of articles is a sign. But it is a solution towards which Canada has been moving for a long time, and it is too late now to undo the errors of the past. It is, moreover, a solution which at least offers hope for the continued existence of Canada as a nation, although one weaker at the centre, for once the Quebec moderates get what they want the extremists should wither and die.

What exactly greater autonomy would entail I'm not sure. Greater financial and political freedom for the provinces would probably be part of it; senatorial reform on American lines might be included. The next dominion-provincial conference should make this issue clearer since Quebec will undoubtedly have some plan, and other provinces will probably have ideas as well.

It seems unlikely that anyone will seriously suggest a program of centralization accompanied by thorough-going biculturalism. More likely would seem to be an Ottawa-Ontario inspired compromise based upon the existence of two main units in Canada, one French and one English.

This solution may look best, but it is based upon Ontario's misconception of the full scope of the Canadian question, and, if proposed, I doubt whether it would be accepted. Faced with a serious situation Ontario seems to be ready for a compromise with herself as leader and protector of English Canada. Perhaps the Atlantic provinces would follow her lead, but I don't think the West would follow suit, certainly not the far West where the problem is seen in a different light. English Canada is not a unified bloc, and Ontario can no longer speak for English Canada.

NEWS IN BRIEF

SAC meeting

A demand for the resignation of a member of the Students' Administrative Council should contribute to the most explosive meeting of the SAC this year.

An alleged conflict of interest between the council duties and political activities of Richard Tan (III Meds) led to a demand for his resignation by a member of the campus Liberal club. Tan is the Model Parliament leader of the Progressive Conservative club.

The constitution of the Model Parliament, voted upon by the Model Parliament subcommittee two weeks ago, will be given a full report and debate at the meeting tonight. Tan's participation in this committee led to the charges of conflict of interest.

The controversial Remembrance Day editorial, published in Monday's Varsity, is also likely to be discussed.

A brief on the coming Dominion-Provincial conference, to be submitted to Premier Robarts, will be discussed later in the meeting.

A report on the Tarheel exchange weekend will also be given to the council.

The meeting will be held in the Hart House Debates Room starting at 7 p.m. tonight.

To form new UN club

United Nations Club members past and present are encouraged to head for Geneva Park (Orillia) this weekend for the founding conference of the Young Adult Council of the United Nations Association of Canada.

Stewart Goodings, NFCUS president last year, will be the speaker Saturday night. Four sessions will be held on Friday and Saturday, with a discussion on Canadian University Service Overseas being of particular interest.

The Young Adult Council has a new and exciting program featuring international exchanges, ski weekends, and large conferences. Some of these activities are not available in the campus U of T club.

Applications are available in the SAC office. A $15 charge covers all the expenses of a great weekend.

UC to produce Othello

Earl Rosen, president of the University College Players' Guild, announced Monday that plans for the guild's major fall production of Othello are well under way.

The guild's production will be directed by Gordon Johnson "and will include some of the best actors on campus," Rosen said.

Among the cast are Les Mulholland and John Labow, who starred in last year's Hart House production of Six Characters in Search of an Author and Joe Warman who appeared this year in Three Sisters at Hart House.

Tickets go on sale today for the play, which will run Nov. 22-30 in the Women's Union Theatre. Tickets cost $1 each and are available in the Junior Common Room and Sidney Smith Hall foyer 11 a.m.-3 p.m.

● Discuss regionalism, post-war world

By MARY MOSSER

Regionalism and the Post-War World, this year's theme of the McGill Conference on World Affairs proved to be a rather nebulous topic for discussion among 150 student delegates. Student groups tended to wander from Real Caouette to world disarmament.

The real focus of the Conference was on the keynote speakers. As in the past, McGill obtained the services of controversial people this year, Professor Ernst Haas of the University of California, Dr. John Brezezinski of the Research Institute on Communist Affairs at Columbia, Prof. James Hurewitz, also of Columbia, and Paul Martin.

All speakers agreed that regionalism, the division of the world into economic or political groupings, is here to stay. But profound disagreement on the implications of the development livened the sessions considerably.

Prof. Haas, unlike many contemporaries, regards the European Economic Community as basically economic in its aims, though its influence is bound to "spill over" increasingly into the political sphere. The "age of ideology" has given way to the age of the technocrats, he claimed. The ordinary European is more concerned with the new television set or Renault than with ideologies and dogma. Supra-nationalism as manifested in the EEC represents the victory of economics over politics.

Economic developments in western Europe have had a profound impact on the Soviet bloc, said Dr. Brezezinski in his address on the Communist world. This impact, along with a rising tide of nationalism, has meant that Russia can no longer assume unquestioned leadership of a monolithic Soviet bloc.

The Arab World, too, has undergone vast changes since the war, said Prof. Hurewitz, commenting on developments there. He emphasized that divisions within the Middle East are still more prevalent than areas of agreement. With few common economic ties, and with deep political and religious gulfs, effective unity, except on questions such as Israel, is out of the question for some time.

The finale of the conference was Paul Martin's address, an urbane if often ambiguous discussion of Canada's outlook on world affairs. Mr. Martin, an expert in the "Art of the possible," brought the conference to a conclusion on the level, not of the academic, but the practical.

● To hold convocation Nov. 22

More than 500 students will receive degrees and diplomas at the University of Toronto's fall convocation Nov. 22.

The convocation address will be delivered by Sir Hugh N. Linstead, president of the International Pharmaceutical Federation.

Sir Hugh and Dr. Glenn L. Jenkins, dean of the School of Pharmacy at Purdue University, will receive honorary degrees from the university one day prior to convocation at the official opening of the new Pharmacy building.

Sir Hugh, in his third four-year term as president of the IPF, is secretary of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain and a member of the British Medical Research Council.

He was knighted in 1957 for significant contributions in the national and international field of pharmacy.

Dr. Jenkins has been dean of the largest graduate school of pharmacy in the U.S. for 22 years. He is past president of the American Pharmaceutical Association and the American Association of Colleges of Pharmacy, and in 1947 was chairman of a pharmaceutical mission to Japan.

Honorary degrees will also be conferred at convocation on Principal Howard H. Kerr of Ryerson Institute of Technology, and Dr. Clarence M. Hincks, noted psychiatrist and organizer of the first mental health clinic in Canada.

● CUS asks put bilingualism second

The Canadian Students Union told the Royal Commission on Biculturalism last week that it should stress bilingualism rather than bilingualism in its deliberations.

Spokesmen for the CUS were Dave Jenkins, CUS president; Dave Casey, student president at the University of Ottawa; and Jean-Pierre Bourdus, CUS associate secretary. CUS was one of the organizations invited by the commission to appear at the preliminary hearing held Thursday and Friday to give their views on the possible terms of reference and procedure of the commission.

The CUS in a six-point recommendation also suggested: That only the French-speaking and English-speaking groups be considered by the commission; That the commission pay particular attention to the views of Canadian universities, both la-culty and students; That the commission accept briefs first only from groups dealing with both cultural groups, then from other sources; That the commission submit a preliminary report prior to its final report; And that funds be made available to public organizations (which are qualified in this area) to undertake studies of biculturalism — findings to be submitted to the commission.

a chance to act

Tuesday night 20 students representing various organizations on campus met to discuss the Dominion-Provincial conference, which begins Nov. 25.

All those present had some idea of the crucial nature of the conference for the future of Confederation. They all realized that the future of this country may hinge on the meeting of the provincial and federal heads of government.

They were all aware of the important role Premier John Robarts will play in the conference; and they were all aware that as students and citizens of this country they too had a role to play.

With their knowledge and desire to become involved in one of the over-riding issues of this country, these students decided to act.

They did not decide to stage a protest, or issue policy demands to Premier Robarts. Their decision was to try to involve other students of this university in the important issue of French and English Canadian relations.

The decision reached was one of positive action. Through the channels of the various campus political, student government and ideological organizations an attempt will be made to acquaint all students with the issues at stake.

A brief will be drawn up and presented to Premier Robarts on Nov. 22 expressing the concern of students at this university for the outcome of the conference.

All students will be asked to participate in the presentation of this brief. They will not be asked to support any particular approach to French-English relations, but only to give an indication of their concern.

The important factor of the meeting was that, regardless of political or faculty differences, such a diverse group of students managed to meet on a common and important issue.

We refuse to believe the often-made claim that university students are apathetic. We think that when students are informed of the issues, and the facts behind the issues, they will be willing to involve themselves in the course of events.

During the next 10 days the issues will be discussed and the facts presented.

We only ask that all students devote some time to acquainting themselves with the French and English Canadian situation.

We hope that once they have informed themselves they will be prepared to take a few minutes Nov. 22 to walk over to Queen's Park and support those students who will present the brief to Premier Robarts.

they do care

This year the campus SHARE campaign surpassed its $10,000 objective by more than $50.

Yesterday almost $900 was presented to Mrs. Ronald Mills, the widow of the 28-year-old University of Toronto parking attendant who died of cancer.

The SHARE campaign, for the first time, was carried out on a personal contact basis. The Ronald Mills fund required students and staff members to bring their donations to the Students' Administrative Council office.

The common factor in both cases was the overwhelming response on the part of the staff and students of this university.

The two campaigns should cause grave doubts among those skeptics who believe that university students are apathetic creatures that refuse to act when the opportunity demands.

Wild as ever in the old Varsity Revolutions in the back room, beatlemania in the front office. Skydiving by Susan Stumpf, suspicious suitcases by Dave Bryce, striped scarf by Nancy Warren, while Marcie MacDonald and Wendy Baldwin looked on. What else could they do? Larry Greenspan, John Cook and Will Day did alternating appearances, with anarchic comment, while Alex Gray remained liberal in actions. Sam kept the darkroom fires burning while Al lit up the sports department for the night.
Whoa with phones tied up and office flooded (not with water) everyone left vent of a lost crawl.

At least we're selling more moose

by MURRAY SOUPCOFF

The way things are developing it seems that the Seamen's International Union intends to set up a trusteeship over the Canadian government. The Liberals have been calling for firmness and patience. They say you have to take things with a grain of wheat — rather salt. But even Mr. Pearson can't deny that Canadian-U.S. relations are at their lowest level since the time Caroline Kennedy wanted Nova Scotia for a birthday present.

American trade officials have objected to Canada undercutting world wheat prices set by the United States. In fact several American legislators have decried the action as un-American. If the Canadian government continues its unprovoked aggression they want to cut off the telecast of the Beverly Hills and Ben Casey to Canada. Ontario could retaliate by withdrawing Canadian-sponsored beer commercials from U.S. stations.

In addition, Canadian ships have been bombed and picketed in U.S. ports and members of their crews have been beaten up. There seems to be a growing faction among American labor leaders wishing to "pooh-pah" the whole situation. Perhaps they would like to shrug it off as another stunt by Canadid Camera.

But no matter how one tries to mitigate its significance the Lakes dispute has raised important issues. For instance, should we allow the Toronto branch of the Mafia to be dominated by the American headquarters in Buffalo? Isn't it time that something be done to ensure that drug trafficking, murder, and extortion in this great land of ours be at least 40 per cent Canadian in content. However, discussion of such matters would be difficult since —as the Ontario government has told us—there is no organized crime in Ontario.

Turning to other events in the news, it is heartening to see that the United States is holding back part of its aid to the government in South Viet Nam. Unfortunately some Americans would like to see the funds used to fight more dangerous threats to the national welfare—like Martin Luther King.

And it is rumored that to keep pace with the times the Dictaphone Company will introduce a new model dictating machine: the De Gaulle, the one dictator that never forgets. The Spalding Company will probably introduce a candy-coated golf tee. It will be known as the tee that dares to be known by good taste alone.

Evidently the Ontario Trade Crusade is a success. There has been a flood of reports of tremendous jumps in the sale of moose.

Still riding high on the Russian Hit Parade is a romantic ballad by Francis Powers. Recorded on the Summit label, it's called I Love U-2. The Russians are also considering a re-release of Lenin's 1917 hit Are the Cezars Out Tonight? However number one on the Katanga charts is still Moise Tshombe's recording on the Thant label You Know Where 'U' Congo. And of course music buffs all over America are awaiting the release of Senate records' new album Joseph Valachi Sings. Several law enforcement agencies are searching for new talent to appear on the follow-up album Sing Along With Joseph Valachi.

The "bogey-man" will get you

by G. DAVID SHEPS

The opinions expressed in last week's Varsity by Raymond Tripp are merely one more example of the paranoic responses to the pressures of human history that one frequently observes in those who subscribe to the "bogey-man" theory of politics. The conviction that all aspects of political equality, no matter how slight, are instruments of the devil of communism or of an international conspiracy of wicked persons is an hallucination so patently ludicrous and so thoroughly discredited, that one hesitates even to dignify such opinions with argument. Nor is one tempted to place much faith in the efficacy of arguing with anyone who maintains that the depraved and fallen nature of man is such that any kind of amelioration of the human condition is blasphemous and subversive. What does move me to comment, however, are the assumptions that underlie Mr. Tripp's opinions. It is too easy to dismiss his opinions as typical John Birch lunacy and to miss the very pernicious assumptions on which they rest. For Mr. Tripp, from his own point of view, is right to attack the universities; for the universities are by their very nature institutions which inevitably alter the texture of societies and teach men that there are satisfactions to be gained through human effort. Mr. Tripp introduces the red herring of socialist bias in the English curriculum of this university (a charge absurd in the extreme when one considers the role in this curriculum of solid conservatives like Hooker, Dryden, Pope, Swift, Burke, Coleridge, Wordsworth, Eliot) as a smear tactic in order to deflect attention from the fact that he is really attacking any point of view that is presumptuous enough to believe that human beings have a right even to desire to overcome their sufferings. Mr. Tripp is opposed to any social viewpoint of whatever stripe, left or right, that refuses to believe that a man is happy in his suffering because he is awaiting an hypothetical salvation. Such is Mr. Tripp's Christianity; an other-worldliness that precludes the possibility of ameliorative action in this world.

comment

The central hypocrisy of Mr. Tripp's special brand of anti-materialism is that in any given society there are those who have both material satisfactions and the hope of other-worldly redemption while there are others who have only an hypothesis to satisfy them. From personal conversations with Mr. Tripp, I know he is not one to content himself with having only a hypothesis to eat. I know that he is aware that his rationalization gives comfort to the ruling elites of any given society because it holds down the masses with the "pie-in-the-sky" attitudes we heard so much about from fundamentalist religious groups in the 1930s. But Mr. Tripp prides himself on being a realist and would not doubt argue that it is sentimental idiocy not to ensure one's self a place in the sun in a jungle-like fallen world which is characterized by sin and suffering and that a society where the spoils go to the victor is, after all, all we can expect from man's fallen nature. Thus we get a peculiar blend of mundane, hard-headed realism and vague other-worldliness which can on the one hand justify the rapacious and on the other hand placate the unfortunate.

God forbid that the social structure even be slightly altered, Mr. Tripp implies. One never knows what may happen. The ruling elite may even be forced to content itself with the spiritual balm it serves to others. Mr. Tripp knows his class warfare. There are the oligarchs glorying in man's fallen nature and the rest of us who must never presume to assert that there may be an unfallen part to our natures, lest we commit the greatest heresy and try to improve our human condition. Is it any wonder Mr. Tripp sees such sinister tendencies in the universities? Such a mentality sees fellow travellers for communism everywhere. The question to be asked is just how conscious is Mr. Tripp to his own role as a fellow traveller for oligarchic power elites? One shouldn't be surprised if he's more aware of this than his spiritualism would at first appear to indicate.

90 DAYS CAN BE FOREVER

(This article about an anonymous person is written by an anonymous person. This is necessary to protect the individuals concerned. But The Varsity knows the author's identity—he is a member of the University staff—and we feel this unusual step is justified in the face of the important issues discussed in the article.)

Miss "Angelica Smith" is 27, and a South African of Indian origin. She is on a brief visit to Canada. Because of the "General Laws Amendment Act" in her country she may, on her return home, be jailed without trial for a 90-day period (renewable indefinitely) for "offending" South Africa's apartheid policies abroad. That is why she must remain anonymous.

Miss Smith has relatives and friends who are presently under arrest in unknown locations of her country under the same law. "Anyone suspected of actively opposing the Verwoerd government's racial segregation and other laws," she told me, "may be picked up by any policeman without warrant under this act. It's become known as the 'No Trial' Act," she added.

Prisoners may be released after their first 90-day term is over, and then immediately rearrested for another stretch—"for the rest of their lives, if Justice Minister Vorster wishes it," she said, bitterly. Evidently, the Minister may or may not inform Parliament about the 90-day detainees.

"I know of several political leaders of the nonwhites who have been rearrested just 10 minutes after being released," Miss Smith told me. "They are first taken from the prison in which they have been to another unspecified one, in the dead of night. Then their watches and wallets are returned to them, and they are taken out again and left on a country road. . . Suddenly, a police cruiser arrives, and they are arrested once again!"

One of those recently rearrested in this manner is Robert Sobukwe, a leader of the banned Pan-African Congress, who has now been shipped to the leper colony of Robben Island, near Johannesburg.

The 90-day detainees are allowed no visitors, nor legal aid nor personal medical attention. Because they are held incommunicado, many may have been completely forgotten by all except their families. No figures have yet been made public on the number of arrests under this law, but it is believed that there are about 300 such prisoners.

Miss Smith handed me a clipping from a recent issue of the Johannesburg Star which points out that this so-called "emergency regulation" may in fact become a permanent feature of South African life:

"The danger is that the frightening departure from Western and peace-time norms embodied in this act (The General Laws Amendment Act) — 'a police state could hardly go further,' said the International Commission of Jurists—will come to be taken for granted and accepted as normal, and the people concerned forgotten by all but their relatives."

What is life like for these 90-day prisoners? Miss Smith outlined the grim details. Prisoners are locked in their cells for 23½ out of 24 hours daily. They have two 15-minute breaks, morning and afternoon, for washing and exercise. Typically, they are held in tiny cells in old prisons, with barely any light. There is a mattress on the floor, some blankets and a small packet in which underwear is kept. There is nothing else in the cell—not even a chair to sit on—no books, no writing paper. The only "visitors" are the magistrate, "who sees the prisoner once a week to ask if there are any complaints. . . and then does nothing about them," and the interrogators, who also come weekly to see if the prisoner will "talk."

In her own life, Angelica Smith has experienced the harsh realities of apartheid. Born and brought up in Johannesburg, she and other Indian children were confined to the streets, and were not allowed to play in the parks reserved for whites. Now things are even worse: "Under the Group Areas Act, Indians, Africans and Coloreds (mixed origin) are being moved out of urban housing areas where they have lived for years and moved to primitive rural, separated 'communities,' many of which lack electricity, proper sewage and efficient transportation," Miss Smith pointed out. As a young professional person, she has found herself in jobs earning pay considerably below that of white persons with equal training and experience. "Teachers, doctors, nurses suffer in like manner," she added.

Angelica loves music and often wishes to see visiting artists from abroad. When My Fair Lady was playing in Johannesburg, only one show a month was set aside for non-whites and it was extremely difficult to get a ticket. One-night stands by singers like England's Cliff Richards are ruled out altogether for non-whites.

While her own life has had its share of hardships, Miss Smith says that the lot of the African is much worse. "They must carry internal passports at all times. They have the worst housing and employment conditions."

Miss Smith recalls a visit to the countryside near Johannesburg during which she saw a white farmer throw away surplus food and vegetables rather than give it to his African day laborers. "Because of the lack of proper food, African children suffer from nutritional edema, and gastroenteritis on a large scale," she said.

What will it all lead to? "Conditions are so bad that armed struggle seems to be the only answer left to the non-whites. Groups of exiles from our country are believed to be undergoing military training in Ghana, Tanganyika and other countries. The prospects of violent armed struggle are terrible, but then so are the prospects of the present becoming the future."

Prof urges free trade

Free trade was suggested as a plank for the campus Liberals' election platform by a political economy professor last Tuesday.

Professor Ian Drummond claimed free trade was an efficient system that could remove restrictions on foreign ownership of Canadian industry. Unilateral adoption of the policy would let Canada specialize in "extractive" and primary industries, he said.

The speaker admitted non-economic drawbacks to his scheme, such as national feeling and population displacement, but said they were "not as bad as irresponsible politicians claim."

Robert Nixon, MPP for Brant and president of the Ontario Liberal Association, spoke yesterday. Mr. Nixon, seen by many as a possible future leader for the Ontario Liberal party, spoke at 4:15 p.m. in Rm. 214 of University College.

He gave the Liberal viewpoint on education.

Tories adopt platform

A Progressive Conservative club meeting last week adopted the following economic platform for the upcoming Model Parliament elections:

- Preferential treatment to non-Communist countries in trade talks;
- Continued trade with Communist countries, but all dealings made cautiously;
- Unnecessary goods not to be purchased from Communist countries only to help their balance of payments;
- Essential retraining to solve domestic problems; industrial responsibility of the community;
- Rapid development of north, a project the campus PCs accused the Liberals of "scrapping once they got into office."

Announce scholarships

A scholarship plan awarding $550 to all first-class honours entrants to the new Trent University at Peterborough will be established.

Tom Symon, formerly dean of Devonshire House at the University of Toronto, and now president of Trent, said a fund will also be established to aid students otherwise unable to continue their studies.

He said that the Samuel de Champlain scholarships for students taking a three-year bachelor of arts or science course would be the most valuable with a possible total of $4,500.

Vic, SMC and Dents in Mulock playoffs

By AL SCHOENBORN

As the regular schedule comes to an end in interfac football, the playoff picture has become a little clearer.

A Dentistry win over St. Mike's coupled with a St. Mike's win over SPS, has given the Double Blue and the dentists Mulock Cup play-off berths along with first-place Victoria College.

Friday, Dentistry edged St. Mike's 8-7 to move into a temporary tie with the Double Blue.

Nick Mlekuz scored the touchdown for Dents. Vern McCreary scored the St. Mike's major.

The Irish came back however to defeat SPS 13-7 yesterday, to kill any SPS play-off hopes.

T.d.'s from Paul Dedumets and Ric Agro were enough to give SMC the game. Bob Heath scored the engineers' t.d.

Pharmacy recorded its fourth successive win Friday in a showdown with previously unbeaten Meds, taking the doctors 12-7.

The Pharmacy touchdowns came from Mike Moore and Don Heys, while John Mueller scored Meds six-pointer.

Trinity edged an improved squad from New College 12-6 Monday on t.d.'s by Bob Reid and Bob Stone.

Mel Sokolsky finally put the Green and Gold on the scoresheet with a touchdown.

LACROSSE

A pair of impressive PHE A victories have put Don Arthurs and his crew into a first-place tie with St. Mike's A.

Yesterday, PHE continued its mastery over Vic I with a crushing 13-3 defeat of the Red and Gold. Phys Ed put on one of the most impressive passing displays of the season and only the brave goaltending of Bruce Miller in the Vic net kept the score from rising into the twenties for PHE.

Don Arthurs led the onslaught with four goals, while Bill Watters and Barry Lett added three each. Dave O'Brien led Vic with a pair of goals.

Earlier PHE A had downed Meds A 11-0, led by a five-goal performance from Barry Bartlett. Goalie Ernie Philp gained his second shutout of the season for Phys Ed in goal.

Dents handed the doctors another setback as John Kawaguchi scored six times in a 9-2 Dentistry win over Meds A.

In other games Pharmacy defaulted to SPS I, while II Pre-Meds tied 2-2 with PHE B.

SOCCER

A three-way tie exists at the top of Group I soccer. SPS Seniors, Meds A and UC I all have nine points and playoff positions. Sr. Skule has a game in hand.

UC I and Meds A played to a scoreless tie and Sr. SPS also tied the Meds A team 1-1. Helmut Brosz and Eric Sereda scored in a 2-0 Sr. SPS win over Vic I.

Jr. SPS is showing a late-season spurt with two consecutive victories. The latest win was a stunning 1-0 win over St. Mike's A which knocked the Double Blue out of playoff contention.

Other action saw Forestry take Emmanuel 3-0, Meds B edge UC II 2-1 and Trin. B play to a scoreless tie with Meds B.

RUGGER

Defending champion Vic I rolled to its sixth consecutive win, Monday, trouncing Vic II 23-0.

Al Major, Pete Sutherland and Mike Meredith all contributed six points to the rout.

Meds B remain in second place after a 9-3 win over UC, while PHE A are close behind with a 26-0 walloping of Trinity A.

Andy Szandner led PHE to a 11-5 triumph over winless SPS.

In Division II, Law and Wycliffe remain deadlocked in first place after playing to a scoreless tie, while Knox and Pharmacy played to a 5-5 tie.

Elsewhere Vic, IV took PHE B 3-0 and Vic III defaulted to St. Mike's.

SHADES OF CATCHERS IN THE "Y"

The following is an excerpt from a friendly conversation between several second year Varsity co-eds.

Names are omitted to protect the innocent and the colleges they represent have been chosen at random.

Miss UC: Hey, isn't it great— no phys. ed. classes this year!

Miss Vic: Yah, but will you look at this "pot".

Miss P&OT: Well, we girls in POTS get lots of exercise — especially in our OT classes.

UC: Well you have to do that. We don't have to do anything.

Unidentified Wretch: I don't wanna spoil your fun or anything girls, but I noticed that the Benson Building has a real keen extra-curricular program this year. Have you seen the Varsity or been down to the WOB?

Chorus: Are you kidding?

U.C.: (meekly) Gee ya know, I had fun in badminton last year. I wouldn't mind knocking the bird around for a while; but I'm really terrible at it.

Badminton Representative: (just happening to walk by) Never fear, my dear. We're having a novelty Badminton Tournament at 7 p.m. tonight.

If you think you were bad with a badminton racquet, wait 'til you try it with a tennis racquet and a ballon.

Vic: Hey, sounds kooky—can I come too?

Bad. Rep.: Sure everyone's welcome. If you can't come tonight try any Wednesday at 7 for club fun.

Miss St. Mike's: The doctors told President Kennedy to swim for his health. What's good for President Kennedy is good enough for me. Where's that Varsity? I wanna check the free dip times.

Ah, here it is! I'm going down tonight at 8—did you kids know they even have hair dryers over there? Wow, what a set-up!

Miss PHE: By the way, have any of you done 10-pin bowling, fencing, or dancing? They need a bunch of girls to go down to Syracuse for the annual International Sport Day exchange.

How about it?

Miss St. Hilda's: Who me? Nah, I'm strictly a female's female.

Unidentified W: (again) Why don't you try archery or golf? That way you won't mess your hair.

St. Hilda's: You're getting catty.

Unident. W.: Well, catty or not, the archery range is open for free practice every Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday at 1, Wednesday from 4 to 6 and Friday at 11. The golf cages will even accept you Tuesdays and Thursdays from 1 to 3. Not bad eh?

Whatsmore the gyms are open every lunch hour between 1 and 2 for tennis, basketball, volleyball or badminton. Help yourself.

Miss P&OT: Hey, are you getting a commission or something?

Unident. W.: No, but I know a good thing when I see it!

Vic: You're pretty stupid, ya know, ya forgot to mention the bowling on Friday at 1, curling on Friday at 3, fencing Wednesday at 4:30 and modern dance Wednesday at 4:30.

Unident. W.: So, what else is new?

Hockey Blues wasting no time

There's no time to be wasted as far as Joe Kane's hockey Blues are concerned. With the opening league game still more than three weeks away, Blues have already played one exhibition game and have at least four more lined up before the opener at McGill, Dec. 6.

The hockey crew's next encounter is this Friday night against Waterloo Lutheran University at Varsity Arena. Blues play a home-and-home series with Queen's Cup champions McMaster Marlin's next Wednesday and Friday and then entertain Guelph's Federated Colleges, Nov. 29.

Kane's lineup is already set at 18 players, 11 forwards, five defencemen and two goaltenders. Blues were bolstered Monday by the return of right winger Chris Speyer.

who earlier had decided to forsake hockey for more time on his Law studies.

Varsity's 18-man roster includes scoring stars Ward Passi and Steve Monteith, recovering from leg injuries suffered playing interfaculty football. Passi is skating and will take part in heavy workouts next week. Monteith is expected to start skating next week.

Kane plans to reunite the high-scoring "Mop Line" of Monteith, Passi and centre Sonny Osborne, who finished 1-2-3 in league scoring last season and were selected to the all-star team as a unit. Osborne's return to U of T had been in doubt before he enrolled at Ontario College of Education and qualified for another year with Blues.

Kane's current plans for his other two forward lines have newcomers Hank Monteith (centre) and Don Fuller (right wing) with holdover George Olah, and Stu McNeil, back at his familiar centre spot, with Bryan Thomson and rookie right winger Austin McKay.

The defence will be manned by Ian Sinclair, Bob Awrey, Bob Hamilton, Pete Speyer and Gary Marlboro. Larry and Casey Soden are the netminders.

At the moment, Blues' extra forwards are Chris Speyer and Bobby McClelland.

Butch McGee, another new forward from Waterloo Lutheran, will rejoin the team after the new year. He suffered torn knee ligaments in Blues' 5-4 win over Alathoras last Friday.

ORU champion Toronto Irish to a 3-3 tie, and now the Ontario Seniors have decided to pull out the stopper in efforts to discipline the brash "college kids."

While Blues must concede greater experience to their older rivals, they can draw on superior conditioning and speed to tire out the All-Stars. If Blues can display the superb ball-control with which they demoralized Queen's in the second half of Saturday's OQAA finale, Blues chances for a win are better than even money.

With the return to action of Ian Sinclair, Bill Nelems remains the only regular out of the line-up. Tonight's clash marks Blues' final match of the season, and a win would give them an undefeated record against all comers.

In the Scrum: Game time is 8 p.m. Admission is free. . . More UTRFC statistics: of the 21 players who have donned Varsity vests this fall, 15 have scored points. . . Bill Charlton can overtake Paul Wilson in the try scoring race but he'll need two unmatched scores to accomplish it. At the moment, Wilson has one more try than Charlton.

Jim Young echoes feeling of players around league about Varsity Blues

By SHEL KRAKOFSKY

QUICK KICKS: The players and head coach Dale White aren't the only ones who feel Blues deserved a better fate from their 1963 showing.

Queen's fullback Jim Young, a shoo-in to repeat as all-star fullback, said after Gaels defeated Blues 19-15 here Saturday that he was surprised Blues didn't finish higher in the standings.

"They really looked like contenders in the first game of the season," commented Young. "And they were really fired up today. But I can't understand what happened to them in between the games with us (Gaels)."

Young also said Blues were the hardest-hitting team in the league. He isn't the first opponent to make such Miklas figured he wouldn't be so noticeable wearing a halfback's number.

Although league rules state players must wear numbers corresponding to their positions, Queen's has been guilty of breaking this rule all season. Quarterback Cal Connor and second-string signal-caller Don Bayne wore numbers 61 and 60 respectively.

Varsity lineman Jim Lunnie, who has missed the entire season with torn kneecap ligaments, hopes to be ready for the Atlantic Bowl at Halifax, Nov. 23. . . . Jim Fisher is working out again after suffering a chipped bone in his ankle two weeks ago. . . . End Ross Dainty, who suffered his second concussion of the season Saturday, is the only Blue definitely out of the Halifax game. . . .

Varsity fullback-linebacker Bill Watters caught the eye of Teddy Morris in Saturday's game. Morris is Toronto Argonauts' head scout for Canadian talent. Don't be surprised if Watters is Argos' top draft choice. . . .

By the third quarter of Saturday's game at Montreal, between Western and McGill, spectators forgot about the score to concentrate on the battle for the league scoring title between "Stangs" Pat McConnell and Redmen's Willie Lambert. At one point in the third quarter, McConnell had a six-point lead on Lambert before Willie scored a touchdown and booted a field goal to win the crown by two points. . . .

Wonderful Willie scored 60 of McGill's 81 points this season, his last in a successful six-year career. . . .

Gaels' undefeated season is the first in the intercollegiate league since 1958. The distinction in 1958 went to Varsity Blues.

Movement to march on Queen's Park gains support from SAC and students

The stirrings of student action at the University of Toronto gained impetus Wednesday in two meetings of representatives of the colleges, faculties and campus interest groups.

A decision made Tuesday by an ad hoc committee was followed up Wednesday afternoon when the Students' Administrative Council French committee presented a brief to 30 student leaders at a meeting in the Electrical building.

The students attending this meeting were there to organize the march which will support SAC President Doug Ward when he presents the brief to Premier John Robarts Nov. 22.

Richard Pope (V Trin) read the brief:

"Whereas: We the students of the University of Toronto are deeply concerned with the future of Canada, particularly at this critical point in our history; and;

"Whereas: We recognize the importance of the existence of "le fait Canadien francais" in Canada today as the Canadian Union of Students already has done;

"We hope that: The Ontario government in the coming federal - provincial fiscal conference, firstly, will think of the welfare of Canada and, secondly, will maintain an understanding and flexible attitude towards the problems which will confront the conference."

After lengthy discussion involving suggested changes in the brief it was decided to retain the original form.

The need for a positive approach to the premier was stressed by Pope and Jim Laxer (IV Vic).

Charles Beer (IV UC), a French committee member, reported he had received word that students from McMaster and York universities would also join the march. A message that students from Ryerson Institute of Technology would participate was also received.

Don Monro (IV APSC), Engineering Society president, undertook to print handbills and placards. He called for 30 volunteers for the nights of Nov. 20 and 21 to make the necessary 150 placards.

Later Wednesday Pope presented the brief and a report of the previous two meetings to the general SAC meeting in the Hart House Debates Room.

"We want to make our views known at this grave moment in Canada's history," he said. "This conference is particularly dangerous in the light of statements by Premier (W. A. C.) Bennett (of British Columbia) that the best attitude is not to listen to the demands of Quebec—even to give them a hearing."

Pope went on to say that Premier Robarts will have a vital role to play in the conference which begins in Ottawa Nov. 25.

"We need the participation of all student groups on a non-political basis" to demonstrate to the premier that students at this university do care about Canada, Pope continued.

Governor threatens to fire editor

By JOHN COOK

"It is about time the Students' Administrative Council did have a debate on something" — (Ian Thompson, OCE SAC rep.).

In a surprising reversal of form, the Students' Administrative Council debated and even disagreed upon some issues of real importance at Wednesday night's meeting in Hart House.

Varsity editorial policy, Model Parliament reform, a march on Queen's Park, campus-wide hearings on student government, and an unpaid bet were features of the five-hour meeting, the longest and most contentious this year.

The controversial Remembrance Day Varsity editorial was the subject of a letter to council by Senator Joseph Sullivan, who threatened to use all his power—as a member of the Board of Governors of the University to have the editor of The Varsity removed from his position.

The University College Lit erary and Athletic Society last night passed a motion with reference to the letter "deploring the apparent necessity of political appointments to the Board of Governors" and expressing its displeasure at "any attempts by such persons to restrict basic academic freedoms by the use of innuendo and misstatement and/or by the threat or use of political or other influence." A similar motion in the SAC meeting was defeated.

Later, council defeated a motion apologizing to those offended by the editorial and dissociating the SAC from it. Only two members of council voted for the motion.

Referring to the publicity the editorial received in the Toronto dailies, Council President Doug Ward (III Emm) said: "What they did was read the editorial, select the most offensive possible phrases, and read them out of context to the most obviously opposed people they could think of. The reaction was obvious."

Speaking for the motion, Richard Tan (III Meds) said: "It is our duty to make known the views of the students. Every report of this editorial referred to 'The Varsity, a publication of the Students' Administrative Council. The editorial did not express the views of the SAC."

Don Rodgers (III UC) called the editorial a refreshing contrast to the "constant flow of insipid drivel from the communications media."

Varsity Sports Editor Rick Kollins (IV UC) termed the motion "a dangerous precedent" which could lead to a similar motion every time some council member was offended by an editorial.

The debate on the editorial produced more discussion and interest than any other issue presented to council this year. Almost half the members of council spoke on the issue.

CUCND votes in favor of withdrawal from NATO

The Combined Universities Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament federal conference in Montreal ended Tuesday in a victory for a radical group favoring withdrawal from the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The Toronto branch had pressed for reconsideration of the nature of the alliance and reform from within rather than withdrawal. On almost all other matters, however, the statement adopted agreed closely with resolutions put forward by the Toronto delegates.

The six Toronto delegates were not bound to vote for their own resolutions, and five of them supported the statement which was eventually adopted.

Two who switched their support after the conference began are now attempting to tell members of their own branch why they changed their minds.

At an executive meeting Thursday delegates Betty Davis (IV Trin) and Al Levi (IV UC) explained that the conference felt Canadian withdrawal would promote questioning of the reasons for such an alliance and also would add Canada to the total of non-aligned nations.

It was hoped that this latter move would enable the country to have more effect on world history.

Other members of the executive disagreed and asked if alternatives of reform within NATO had been considered. Levi and Davis replied that they had, but had been discarded.

The issue will be taken to a general meeting of the Toronto branch next Thursday when a full report on the conference will be given.
